JOSEPH TUMULTY ENTERS CONTEST FOR PRESIDENT OF ILLINOIS MINERS' UNION TO SUCCEED FARRINGTON

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Aug. 31.—Joseph Tumulty of the Springfield sub-district announces his candidacy for president of the Illinois miners' union. At the same time he withdraws from the race for international president, leaving President John L. Lewis and John Brophy of the central Pennsylvania miners to fight it out. The discrediting of Farrington, who has gone over to the operators, has torn the district contest wide open. Wm. J. Sneed of Herrin was the only candidate previously announced.

Tumulty's platform calls for nationalization of mines, aggressive organization both in and outside the state, 6-hour day and 5-day week to absorb the mine labor surplus, opposition to wage cuts and opposition to the expulsion policy of both the national and state administrations.

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

THE Harvester and Rockefeller millions are having a queer affect on the McCormick family. The latest wrinkle in the history of this brood is the adoption of a brand new set of "parents" by Muriel, daughter of Harold,[1] of goat-gland fame, who is the husband of Ganna Walska, the voiceless opera star. No doubt Muriel will be as generous in contributing to the upkeep of her new "parents" as her father was to the little girl who posed as one of the one-wives of the Sultan of Turkey. Muriel's mother, a twig of the Reckefeller family, is a student of psycho-analysis. It's a nutty family, but not poor.

WHILE Krishnamurti, the Hindoo receptacle for Annie Besant's christ, preaches against material comfort, he whiles away the hours in a luxurious bungalow atop the Sherman Hotel. Reporters have called the "Messiah's" attention to this seeming inconsistency, but Krishnamurti should worry. People who are crazy enough to believe his hokum will disbelieve anything to his discredit until some other faker with a better line and a nuttier "angel" hoves in sight. If Aimee MacPherson could run away with a radio operator and collect $30,000 in ransom her the arms of a lover, is it surprising that a dreamy Hindoo could get away with more refined hunk?

THE Duke of Asturias, heir-apparent to the Spanish throne, is critically ill and Alfonso's third son will be named heir to the throne, as the second son is handicapped by impediments to his speech and imperfections in his auditory organs. Meanwhile Alfonso is learning the latest wrinkles in the charleston, to the delight of American ladies, who would gladly have their tongues slit and their ears amputated in return for a mumble from a real prince. It's a great world, mates. Is it surprising that our ruling class dreads a new order?

THAT the British miners are facing a serious crisis cannot be disputed. If evidence of social-democratic treachery were needed to show the working class the folly of depending on those servants of capitalism any longer the miners' strike supplies it abundantly. Since the first day of the strike the socialist leaders of the British workers on the T. U. C. and in the labor party have done everything except help the striking miners. It now appears that the government, the coal operators and the right wing labor leaders are following a concerted program with the object of getting rid of A. J. Cook, who, despite some serious mistakes, has fought well for the union.

YOU may often hear it said that a scandal like Frank Farrington's $25,000 a year contract with a coal company could not happen in England. But it can and did happen. Ramsay MacDonald, that whited sepulchre of hypocrisy, accepted $150,000 from a tory biscuit manufacturer and an automobile in return for conferring the title of knight on the tory. The tory explained his generosity on the ground that MacDonald was an old friend of his. Samuel Insull's reason for giving a similar sum to Frank L. Smith of Illinois was exactly the same! So

Now that Frank Farrington is exposed as a bought servant of the Peabody Coal Company, speculations are rife as to what will happen to the payroll patriots who have been fawning on the Illinois miners' president during the past year.

It is generally admitted that Joseph Tumulty and the progressive elements in the union, occupy a strong position in view of their consistent struggle against the crooked policies of Farrington. With any kind of organization Tumulty is almost certain of election, unless the Farrington and Lewis gangsters reinforce their gunmen with shipments from outside the coal fields.

Farrington Ousted Progressives.

Tumulty was associated with Duncan MacDonald, Freeman Thompson and others in the Springfield district against the Farrington machine. Farrington succeeded in ousting most of his more dangerous enemies. Tumulty succeeded in maintaining his footing in the union, despite all the maneuvers of the Peabody Coal company president.

Among these marked for slaughter in the event of the progressives winning in the election is Oscar Amerigo, the ex-socialist faker who, in the guise of a clown, attacked the radicals with ridicule in the pages of the Illinois Miner, the official organ of the district.

Amerinoger Got Contract.

Amerinoger, whose headquarters are in Oklahoma City, secured a contract to publish the Illinois Miner, collecting thousands of dollars from the coal diggers for the publication of a labor daily. The plan went up the spout and as the miners could not get their money, they had to be satisfied with what they could get. Farrington, who was fighting Lewis at the time agreed to give Amerinoger a position as editor of the Illinois Miner. The contract called for an annual subsidy for the paper and Amerinoger agreed to send a copy of each issue to every member of the Illinois Miners' Union.

Living On Machine Bounty.

In addition to Amerinoger there are many others who have been living directly on the bounty of the Farrington machine, or indirectly thru Farrington's influence with Governor Len Small. In return for Farrington's political support Small practically gave the district president cart blanche to name appointees to fill positions as mine inspectors and other jobs connected with the mining industry. This gave Farrington a tremendous payroll brigade and also the assistance of political fixtures in the Small apparatus, such as sheriffs, county prosecutors and mayors. All these will have to do serious thinking about their future if the present corrupt machine of the Lewis and Farrington cohorts is wiped out in the December elections.

Considerable guessing as to how Lewis secured a copy of Farrington's contract with the Peabody Coal company is indulged in. The Federated Press, has the following comment on the subject of Farrington's defection:

How Lewis Got Dope.

Theories as to how Lewis, who is under criticism for his conduct of the union in the West Virginia districts, got hold of the incriminating papers range from that of plain unaided "abstraction" to some form of operator connivance, the most extreme dope being that Peabody Coal itself took this method of insuring a new president for the miners in the Illinois district.

The Chicago Journal of Commerce, which is very close to the Illinois operators, says:

What's What About Frank Farrington

BEGINNING next Thursday, The DAILY WORKER will publish a brief history of the part played by Frank Farrington, suspended president of the Illinois Miners' Union, since he first assumed the role of leader in the U. M. W. of A. It is a record of collaboration with the employers, of persecution of the militant miners, of corruption in politics, of alliance with the most venal elements in Illinois politics. The story of the rupture between Farrington and Lewis and their subsequent burying of the hatchet to put up a united front against the progressives will make interesting reading in view of the attempt of Lewis to make capital out of Farrington's disgrace in order to enable himself to pose as a pure and unsullied soul. WATCH OUT FOR NEXT TUESDAY'S ISSUE.

TWO SERVANTS OF COAL OWNERS; ONE OF THEM CAUGHT WITH THE GOODS

Above is John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America who revealed information exposing Frank Farrington, below, president of the Illinois Mine Workers, as in the pay of the Peabody Coal Co. at a salary of $25,000 a year. Lewis, himself a friend of the coal operators, did this, not for the good of the union, but in an effort to get control of Farrington's district.

24,000 ATTEND PASSAIC MILK FUND CONCERT

Vast Sea of Faces Watch Performance

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, August 31. — Twenty-four thousand workers and labor sympathizers last night packed to capacity the big Coney Island Stadium upon the occasion of the Milk Fund Concert arranged by the New York Conference for Passaic Strike Relief.

Representative of all sections of the working class and liberal groups in New York City and vicinity the vast assemblage gave emphatic notice to the arrogant textile barons that labor and its sympathizers were back of the 16,000 striking textile workers of Passaic in a fight to the finish against autocracy and bourbonism in industry.

Packed Sky-High.

The whole amphitheatre was packed sky-high. A veritable sea of faces looked down upon the speakers' platform and the orchestra of 100 pieces under the direction of David Mendoza of the Capitol Theatre Orchestra. And the thunderous, prolonged applause of that vast crowd, the resounding cheers, during the speaking part of the program, left no doubt as to its warm sympathies and steady solidarity with the Passaic strikers.

Thanks Workers.

Alfred Wagenknecht, chairman of the Relief Committee for the strikers, as chairman of the meeting, thanked the numerous host of workers thruout the country and their organizations that had supported the Passaic strike.

Ballet.

Albert Weisbord, the leader of the textile strikers was given a thunderous ovation. Other speakers were Frank P. Walsh, and Elizabeth Gurley Flynn. David Mendoza and the Capitol Theater Orchestra of 100 played while Alexis Kosloff and his ballet of fifty dancers rendered "Scheherazad"

THE PROGRESSIVES WERE RIGHT; FARRINGTON WAS "A COMPANY MAN"; THE MINERS MUST NOW OUST LEWIS

THE ousting of Frank Farrington from the presidency of the Illinois Miners' Union by an executive board which is equally responsible with Farrington for his treachery to the miners, gives the union coal diggers of Illinois an opportunity they have long waited for.

Those betrayed, persecuted and exploited trade unionists have time and time again attempted to clean up the nest of corruption in the district office of the Illinois miners' union, which has been a festering sore on the body of the labor movement ever since Frank Farrington, backed by the Peabody Coal Company, established himself there.

Those who opposed Farrington's methods and Farrington's policies ran the risk of being blacklisted by the companies at Farrington's request, expelled from the union, framed-up in the capitalist courts or manhandled by Farrington's thugs. As a cloak for their wrecking tactics the reactionaries claimed they were warring against the radicals in order to protect unity of the organization.

NOW the crooks are out in the open and the betrayed coal-diggers are in no mood to listen to explanations from the agents of the Peabody Coal Company.

The Illinois miners must not be fooled by the fake pretensions of John L. Lewis and his discredited agents in the Illinois Miners' Union, that they are out to purify the organization of evil influences. The Illinois miners now have an opportunity to clean out all the crooks; those who support Lewis as well as those who support Farrington.

In the person of Joseph Tumulty, the Illinois miners have a candidate for district president, who has fought against the crooked Farrington machine. Tumulty's policy is that of the progressive miners. That policy is against dictatorship over the union by the coal companies. It stands for: nationalization of mines under workers' control; a labor party of workers and farmers; no arbitration or conciliation boards; a six-hour day and a five-day week; all agreements to expire at the same time; one hundred per cent union organization; the right of free speech in the union; an alliance with railroad and transport workers; resistance to injunctions and government strikebreaking; and support of the Progressive Miners.

THE Illinois Miners' Union is thru with Farrington as president. But as long as Lewis is international president all their efforts to exact a living wage and better working conditions from the operators will be frustrated by Lewis and his agents in the district. Lewis will seek the destruction of the Illinois district as he did in several other districts unless the officers bend to his will. The Illinois miners must therefore do their level best to defeat John L. Lewis for international president in the coming elections along with William Snaed, Lewis' man for the district presidency and any other lackey that Farrington, the Peabody Coal Company or Lewis may put up.

The task of the Illinois miners in the coming elections is to clean out every vestige of the Farrington machine in district No. 12 and vigorously co-operate with the opposition to Lewis thruout the U. M. W. of A. to vote John L. Lewis out of office.

Ancient Injunction Dug Up Against Six Boston A. C. W. Men

BOSTON, Aug. 31.—Six Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union officials have been cited for contempt under a two-year-old injunction granted the Morris B. Anderson clothing firm, Joseph Salerno, Benjamin Sherston, joint board business agent; Max Benjamin, joint board head; Max Bloom, joint board manager; Felice di Napoli and Nicola Stalloni are those named in two complaints by the firm.

Middle Class Buyers of German War Bonds Storm Slander Court

BERLIN, Aug. 31.—A frenzied mob of investors in German war bonds crashed the doors of a courtroom here to shout insults at Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, the bank's president.

Most of the crowd had been ruined by the collapse in the value of the bonds during the period of currency inflation, or by the refusal of the bank to redeem them at par in the newly valorised currency.

Miners' Executive Still Firm Against MacDonald Pressure for Betrayal

(Special Cable to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Aug. 31.—In view of the resistance by the rank and file of the miners to any compromise, even on the wages, the Miners' Federation executive has decided at its meeting yesterday, not to formulate any new proposals at this time and to stand out for the old slogan, "Not a minute on the day, not a penny off the pay; national agreement only."

Ramsay MacDonald, right wing leader of the Labor Party, as was predicted yesterday, made an attack on the miners' position in the open session of parliament, skillfully seeking to hide the betrayal of the miners by the Labor Party heads behind a purely verbal attack on the government for "favoring the mine owners."

Party Heads With Owners.

However, his own line of policy, and as leader of the Labor Party it is presumed the policy of the party leaders, also favors the mine owners. He attacked the idea of the miners' holding out for a national agreement, declaring that a settlement on that basis is impossible. Since the owners stand for district agreements and the strikers for a national agreement, it is clearly seen on which side MacDonald and company stand.

It is evident that the yellow leaders of the Labor Party, though they have influenced the miners' executive at times to weaken, have not been able to counteract the sturdy fight of the rank and file against all compromise. MacDonald's speech in parliament invited the government to initiate agreements on a district basis, and undoubtedly to take up the MacDonald program of destroying the miners' union by this, and by conceding the previous work day in some districts while lengthening it in others and discussing wages by districts. The chief criticism of the government was for its "inaction" in this respect.

41 Bodies Now in Morgue in Preventable Clymer Mine Accident

CLYMER, Pa., Aug. 31.—Forty-one bodies lie in an improvised morgue in the Machine Shop of the Clymer mine, mangled and lacerated almost beyond recognition in the worst disaster in the history of the country. The bodies of three men are still buried under tons of rock with the rescue crew trying to reach them.

The mine is owned by the Clearfield Bituminous Coal Co. Federal, state and county investigations are under way as to the cause of the accident. Department of Labor experts have declared that all explosions of coal dust and cave-ins caused by such explosions are preventable.

Explosion and Car Run-Away Injure 8 Anthracite Miners

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WILKES-BARRE, Pa., Aug. 31.—Four anthracite miners were probably fatally burned in an explosion at Wanamie colliery of Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal Co. Felix Fiszalis was engineer on the electric motor; Harry Meyer, motor brakeman; Frank (Szsanki) and William Flak, laborers. It is thought a spark from the motor ignited gas in the pocket where the laborers were working.

Four More Hurt.

Four miners were injured when a mine car broke away and ran down the plane in the workings of the Green Ridge Coal Co., near Scranton. Eugene Davis had to have his left leg amputated, it was so badly crushed. William Pritchard has a probable fracture of the skull in addition to numerous severe bruises. Patrick Crane has fractured ribs and bad bruises. William Williams is bruised and cut about the head, chest and body.

MINE STRIKERS BATTLE POLICE IN COAL FIELDS

Force Relief to Wives and Children

LONDON, Aug. 31.—Clashes are becoming more frequent between the special police sent into the coal districts where the owners are trying hardest to break the strike and the miners. Also, the miners are beginning to make physical objection to the government's policy of cutting off the allowance sums set by law for poor relief to the miners' wives and children.

At Pontypool in Wales, the very few scabs, whom all efforts to induce to quit work failed, were given added protection by a large force of special police sent into the region from London. The miners, angered at the display of force, retaliated and in a pitched battle with stones and missiles charged the police after some of the miners had been clubbed by officers. Many were arrested and several wounded.

At the Midlothian parish council, when refusal was made to grant the poor-law allowance to the miners' families, the miners led a rush upon the council, which was a successful fight of several hours against police clubs, and only ceased when the council finally promised to give each family sixty cents.

AMALGAMATED ASKS AID FOR BRITISH MINERS

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 31.—Support for the British miners who have been striking 12 weeks is asked of Amalgamated Clothing Workers members by a general executive board appeal. The union's board sent $10,000 in a lump sum earlier in the strike and is now asking further contributions from its members.

...R MINERS AY ON BACK WHEN DIGGING

French Writer Describes Working Conditions

Mining is hard work in America, but in most of our fields easy as compared with some of the mines of Wales, as many of our Welsh brothers here know. Miners are frequently compelled to work on their backs in the mud in some of the Welsh mines with 32-inch veins. These conditions were recently described by a French writer, Andree Viollis, in "L'Europe Nouvelle." It follows in part:

"We climbed up to a little platform, which was as black as inferno (Cardiff, Wales). Above us invisible machinery grumbled and groaned. To one side a gigantic wheel was turning, alternately lifting and thrusting down the long arm that moved the pumps. Equipped with little lamps, we entered a black, slippery cage.

Minutes Seemed Hours.

"A big black hole seemed to inhale us, during our dizzy descent, while the minutes seemed as long as hours. Finally we stopped, a thousand feet below the surface. My ears roared, my eyes smarted, and, quite contrary to my expectations, I was chilled by an icy breeze.

"Ordinarily six hundred miners get out of the cage here every morning at 7 o'clock with their little dinner pail and piece of bread. Here they separate, going down narrow, interminable, steeply sloping tunnels, stumbling over rails to avoid passing coal trucks, receiving douches of cold water down their necks, and dodging falling stones, often of large size that are constantly detaching themselves from the roof above.

Crushed in Front of Him.

"My first day in the mine, when I was 14 years old," said my companion, "a man was crushed immediately in front of me. I turned around and ran back to the cage like a crazy rabbit."

"When we left the cage I was chilly, but as we advanced down the gallery we kept getting lower and opening and shutting doors, and the galleries themselves grew narrower and lower. The air became thin, with a heavy, tarlike odor. We had to bend half over to avoid hitting the roof. Soon I was panting like a fish out of water, and I saw the perspiration tracing pale streaks down the coal black faces of my companions.

Walked Three Miles.

"It was a walk of two to three miles to the coal veins. As we painfully made our way forward my companions explained to me how the trams were managed, how the timbering was put up, and, when we finally did reach the listening face, how the coal was undercut with a pick. I cut out my little piece of coal just to qualify as a miner.

"In certain veins you can sit up, but this one is only thirty-two inches high, so the miner has to lie down on his back in the mud—for six hours steady—in the noise and the dust.

Loved Their Trade.

"Nevertheless, I could see that these people loved their rude trade. How affectionately they patted the smooth blocks of coal as affectionately as a peasant pats his cow.

"As for the dangers, they scorned them. Nevertheless, they will admit that on an average twelve hundred men are killed in the British coal mines every year, without counting the big catastrophies.

"I noticed also that my two mine leader companions were vigilantly observant every moment. There had not been a single act of sabotage. The pumps were working, the mine was ready to start tomorrow.

Mice and Ponies.

"I saw a few horses still down below—plump, shiny animals with little black mice scampering around their feet. When we were going up, Mr. Jones said: 'But you ought to have seen the others when we took them on top. They rolled in the grass with their forefeet in the air as if they had gone crazy.'

"And I could understand it. I had been down three hours, but it seemed three centuries.

"On our return, saturated with perspiration, the cold breeze chilled us to the bone. I thought to myself how the miners had to trudge back home in the winter, often some distance, in their dirty, wet garments. For these mines have no baths or drying rooms, such as are provided in America and Germany and in most of the mines in France. Is it surprising, then, that so many miners are old and out of the running at 50?"

CHEMICAL ENGINEERING EXPERT CHARGES GOVERNMENT WHITEWASH OF JERSEY MUNITIONS EXPLOSION

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—Need for explaining to the public the vicious conditions surrounding the Lake Denmark, N. J., disaster remains despite the "act-of-god" whitewash of the navy's own court of inquiry, according to Dr. H. C. Parmelee, editor of Chemical and Metallurgical Engineering. "The court's failure to fix the responsibility for the disaster on any human being," he said, "must not deter others from a thorough study of all the facts.

Public interest demands the most effective effort to prevent a possible recurrence of this tragedy."

"Act of God" No Excuse.

"The chemical engineering profession," said Dr. Parmelee, "cannot accept an "act-of-god" explanation as the last word in a situation that apparently involved many human violations of recognized engineering practice in the storage and handling of high explosives.

"In an area considerably less than one mile square there were crowded 200 buildings in which were stored $84,399,506 worth of munitions consisting of loaded and fused shells, depth charges, aerial bombs, mines and torpedoes in addition to tremendous stores of T. N. T., ammonium picrate, black powder, picmric acid and smokeless powder.

War Department to Blame.

"The court reported that this ammunition was segregated in various magazines in accordance with bureau of ordinance instructions. But is it conceivable that these instructions should contemplate the conditions that actually existed at Lake Denmark?

"The testimony showed that temporary magazine No. 5, the first to explode, contained in addition to bulk explosives more than 1,000,000 pounds of cast T. N. T. in depth bombs and that fifty feet away 2,000,000 pounds of the same explosive was in magazine No. 9, which exploded a few seconds later. Eight other magazines contained from 700,000 pounds to 2,500,000 pounds of explosives in bulk, as well as aerial bombs and loaded and fused projectiles.

Government Violated Law.

"The appalling threat of such overcrowding is better appreciated when it is recalled that the New Jersey state law—which is accepted by the explosives industry as a reasonable and safe precaution based on actual experience—provides that it is illegal to store in any one magazine more than 30,000 pounds of loose or more than 20,000 pounds of packaged explosives such as T. N. T.

Are Government Officials Above Law?

"The same law further provides that magazines which contain 30,000 pounds may be distanced from other explosives by at least 800 feet. 'Extraterritoriality' is the legal loophole which permitted the United States navy to indulge in practices which would have landed a private manufacturer in jail.

Navy Officers Criminally Careless.

"Had the precautions with which the navy was undoubtedly familiar, been carefully observed, there would have been no disaster at Lake Denmark. In fact that depot would have been the insignificant storage place for a comparatively small quantity of carefully segregated explosives.

Congress Should Investigate.

"The president has it within his power to appoint an impartial board, properly qualified to study the disaster itself, the conditions that existed at Lake Denmark and which now obtain at other governmental arsenals, and, what is more important, the underlying faults in the departmental machinery that permitted flagrant violations of established engineering practices. Congress, too, must take a real interest in such an inquiry."

MORGAN'S MAN ORDERS POLISH RULERS AROUND

Kemmerer Settles With Cabinet Bank's Fate

WARSAW, Aug. 31.—Poland's financial situation, in spite of the continued assurances of the cabinet, distinguished foreign "visitors," etc., keeps the local markets and all government officials uncertain.

The Polish-American "Kemmerer commission" investigating the industrial banking situation here for the purpose of making recommendations about a loan from Wall Street to the Pilsudski government held a meeting last week with the cabinet.

The plan of Minister of Finance Klarner to liquidate the agricultural bank and two other government banks and found instead a bank dealing in foreign exchange met with heavy opposition. During the debate the lie was passed by Kemmerer concerning promises he was quoted as having made. Kemmerer now insists that he is still investigating.

Minister Klartzer is under a very hot attack by the Courier Czerwony and the Courier Poranny, two organs of Pilsudski, altho the finance minister seems to be so much entangled in the Kemmerer negotiations that his downfall will at least temporarily end them, and Pilsudski needs money.

In spite of the starving industrial proletariat in the Polish cities, the minister of agriculture, Raczynski, boasted at the meeting that he expected to see grain exports this year amount to 90,000,000 carloads.

As a result of the recent coup the government finally decided to repeal the law against commercial transactions in foreign currencies.

FLYNN WILL SPEAK AT MASS MEETING OF LABOR DEFENSE

Cannon, Ruthenberg and Peters on Program

Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, one of the most active leaders in the big strike of the Passaic textile workers, who is known to American workers in all parts of the country for her work in the interests of labor, will be the chief speaker at a mass rally for labor defense to be held here on September 6 at the Ashland Boulevard Auditorium. The meeting is under the auspices of the International Labor Defense which concludes its second annual conference on the same day.

Miss Flynn will relate the experiences that the fifteen thousand Passaic strikers have had with the police and the courts during their bitter battle for union and for better working conditions. The story of the mass arrests and police terrorism in Passaic will be told by her in detail.

C. E. Ruthenberg, secretary of the Workers Party, whose case arising out of the famous Michigan Communist arrests is now before the United States Supreme court on appeal, will speak at the meeting.

Dr. J. J. Peters, third assistant president of the National Negro Improvement Association, will also appear at the meeting to speak especially about discrimination against Negro workers and farmers, their incessant persecution in many parts of the country, and about the number of Negro workers and soldiers who are still in prison today for defending their civil and political rights.

James P. Cannon, secretary of International Labor Defense, will speak at the meeting on the progress made in the past year of the work of the organization, and the need of labor unity in the question of defense of labor prisoners.

German Swimmer Sets New Record in Swim Across the Channel

Dover, Aug. 31.—Otto Vierkoetten, a German swimmer, is the third person to swim the channel this month and is now the record holder for time in making the treacherous swim.

Vierkoetten started from Cape Gris Nez at 1:35 this morning and accomplished the swim in 12 hours and 35 minutes, which is the fastest ever made in a channel swim, Gertrude Ederle having made the previous record of 14 hours and 32 minutes.

The German swimmer made his landing at Langdon Stairs, a mile and half north of Dover. Vierkoetten was accompanied on the swim by a tug.

MINORITY MEET IN BRITAIN IS EPOCH-MAKING

Third Conference of Historic Import

By TOM FLEMING.

LONDON, Aug. 18.—(By Mail)—The 3rd annual conference of the National Minority Movement which is to be held Aug. 28th and 29th has every indication of being a historic gathering.

The British workers have just passed thru the greatest strike that labor has yet experienced, a strike in which labor's strength was stapped by cowardly and traitorous leaders who paved the way to and perpetrated the great betrayal of May 12.

First To Warn.

The minority movement and the Communist Party alone foresaw the coming of the capitalist offensive and warned the whole working class of Britain of the preparations the government were making for the struggle.

T. U. C. Leaders.

The T. U. C. leaders refused to be warned, in fact experience has taught now that they were entirely against the idea of concerted working class action and sabotaged it right to the last. The working class of Great Britain have been taught great lessons in the last few months. The yellow socialist slogans of Trust Your Leaders has been knocked to the ground.

The lessons of the general strike are taking hold of the workers. The "never, never again" advocates are for the present silenced by the blows from the Minority Movement and the Communist Party of Great Britain.

Program of Struggle.

The Minority Movement has set itself the task of preparing the necessary program for struggle in the trade union movement. At the coming conference all urgent questions facing the labor movement will be discussed in the light of recent happenings. A line of action will be formulated for the future struggle against the reactionary leaders.

The Agenda.

The agenda of the conference is as follows:

1. The General Strike and its Lessons.
   (a) The strike leadership
   (b) The strike machinery.
   (c) The state and the strikers.
   (d) The law and the strikers.
   (e) The future of mass strikes
2. The Reorganization of the Trade Union Movement.
   (a) A better leadership.
   (b) Greater power to the General Council.
   (c) Speeding up union amalgamations.
   (d) Relations between Trade Unions and Cooperatives.
   (e) Development of Trades Councils and their affiliation to the T. U. C.
   (f) How to secure 100 per cent Trade Unionism.
3. Internationl Unity.
   (a) The Russian Workers' Aid.
   (b) The reconstitution of the Anglo-Russian Committee.
   (c) Next steps for securing International Unity.
4. Anti-Labor Legislation.
   (a) The Emergency Powers Act and the workers.
   (b) Seditious laws and the workers.
   (c) Judge-made law and the trade union.
   (d) Amnesty for all political prisoners.

Alex Bittelman to be Speaker at T. U. E. L. Needle Trades Party

Alex Bittelman, editor of the Saturday Magazine of the DAILY WORKER, well known to Chicago needle trades workers, will be the speaker at a package party to be given by the needle trades section of the Trade Union Educational League.

Thrilling Garage Hold-Up.

Former Socialists Now Found in the LaFollette Movement in Wisconsin

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

BLOOMVILLE, WISC., (By Mail). —Inquiry is often made about the members and active workers of the socialist party in years gone. As if this were a mystery.

There were several of these former socialists at our meeting here at the Town Hall in Schley township. They were among those most eager to ask questions. To be sure, they were those most easily answered.

Invariably they had gone over to the LaFollette movement, when they had not been won for the Communist movement. Without exception they are now to be found in the right wing of the LaFollette movement, some even elected to office on the LaFollette ticket. They are now supporting the LaFollette conservatives, Blaine for United States senator, and Ekern for governor.

Left the socialist party. It has completely disappeared from here in Lincoln county, where it once had a foothold. Victor Berger, socialist congressman, Daniel W. Hoan, socialist mayor of Milwaukee, told the workers and farmers to support the LaFollette ticket in 1924. They did to such an extent that the socialist party was completely gutted of its own members and sympathizers. It must be so over other great sections of the state.

Of course, these socialists who have found a place at the capitalist fleshpots, even tho they bear the LaFollette label, try to justify themselves.

"What reason have we to believe that the Communists will not go the same way as the socialists?" was asked, for instance, by one of these former socialists, who is now a LaFollette county supervisor.

All of which necessitated a careful explanation of the different roles played by the Second (Socialist) International and the Communist International, the latter the heir of the First International, of the International Workingmen's Association of Karl Marx. This ex-socialist didn't mind our criticism of the socialists. In fact, he seemed to feel that it justified his present renegade position. He tried to buttress this position by attempting to drag the Communists into the mire with the socialists. Thus, for instance, after he had been completely silenced in the question of Communist loyalty to the working class, he came back with the question, "What is going to stop another Czar from coming into power and rule over the workers of Russia?"

It was a little difficult to discover just what he was driving at. But it seemed that he was under the illusion that those holding official position in that Union of Soviet Republic would develop into a new ruling class to oppress the workers. It was only a hazy and ignorant way of restating the charge of the socialdemocracy that the dictatorship in the Soviet Union is the dictatorship of the Communist Party and not a genuine proletarian dictatorship. But it did not take long to convince this audience of farmers and lumber workers that the workers and farmers constitute the class in power in the Soviet Union today, that they are building the Communist society that is abolishing all classes.

All of which shoved the ex-socialist into a corner and he resorted to some of the arguments of the capitalist politicians. Thus he urged that supporting the LaFollette program and ticket would "get something now," whereas nothing could be expected immediately from support given to the Communists. This, of course, was also effectually shattered by showing that the LaFollette movement is but part of the capitalist political game, trying to give voice to the interests of the small bankers, the rich farmers and the little business man. Since none of these elements was represented at the meeting, the ex-socialist did not get any support for his views.

Another questionar, showing that the British coal strike is being closely followed up here among the farmers, wanted to know why it was that coal was being sent to England from the United States. It was easy to point out that this was due to lack of international solidarity among the workers of the world, especially between the workers of America and Great Britain. It offered an opportunity to point out the role that the workers of the Soviet Union are playing in this great struggle.

But this let loose a flood of experience from a woman comrade of the coal mines, who had seen struggle after struggle betrayed by the Lewis regime in the United Mine Workers' of America. She had finally come to this agricultural section of Wisconsin convinced that the labor unions were no good. "I don't believe in them," she declared rather vehemantly.

But her resistance melted before an explanation of the role of the trade unions in the struggle of the working class for power, and their status in the United States at the present time.

When thoroly satisfied on this question, she was just as energatic in her efforts to learn the position of the Soviet Union, and of the Communist Party in the United States, on the liquor problem. The declaration in the congressional program of the Workers (Communist) Party was explained and she was satisfied, stating that she was going to fight against the evils of alcohol on the basis of the Communist position.

This comrade breathed the spirit that was to be found in the first letter that I read upon returning to Chicago. It was headed "Lost Youth" and read as follows:

"This is a farming community in northern Wisconsin called Marengo. Here a large percentage of the youth are poisoned or poison themselves with moonshine, a pleasant beverage that a young can cook without breaking the prohibition law. This liquor is sold here even to minors.

"We have here at Merengo an active Young Workers' League branch, a Workers (Communist) Party branch (Finish) and a Women's Club (Finnish). The Workers Party, the Women's Club and the Y. W. L. branch all fight against the poisoners of the youth, and teach the youth at large which path to take and why. Young Workers! Come forth to the Young Workers League!"

The saloonkeeper here at the crossroads at Bloomville admitted that alcohol had a stronger grip on the population now than ever before.

"Wine and beer are made in 100 per cent of the homes," he said. "Fifty per cent of them cook 'moon.'"

He insisted that alcohol was conquering the youth to a degree never dreamt of under the days of the saloon.

Our meeting decided that the alcohol must be fought with the educational propaganda of the Communist Party, and that the youth must be won for the Young Workers League, and the children for the Pioneers. That was the lecture that our woman comrade was reading to what she called the "gray heads" that were present. She declared emphatically that we must win the young people. It was rapidly approaching midnight when our meeting came to an end and the audience reluctantly dispersed, the men, woman and children departing for their various homes.

MORE BOSSES SIGN UP WITH GARMENT UNION

Jobbers Hide Behind Industrial Council

NEW YORK CITY, Aug. 31.—Twelve more cloak manufacturers and a jobber yesterday signed the new union agreements guaranteeing the 40-hour week, 26 weeks' work per year, a 10 per cent increase in wages and limitation of the contractor evil, it has been announced. This brings the total settlements to date with independent manufacturers, jobbers and manufacturers who broke away from the Industrial Council to 121.

Jacob Halpern, chairman, and Philip Oretsky, organizer, of the strikers' out of town committee announced the steps of three nonunion shops seeking to operate outside New York.

Mr. Findar Twists Facts.

Replying to a statement by Henry H. Finder, president of the industrial council of the cloak manufacturers' association, challenging figures quoted by the union in its letter to Governor Smith hearing on the amount of work controlled by the council in the industry, Louis Hyman, chairman of the general strike committee, declared:

"Mr. Finder may quote what appear to be official figures to prove that the industrial council, in addition to independent manufacturers, control more than 25 per cent of the industry and thus are sufficiently important for the union to arbitrate with alone, disregarding the jobber element whom we seek to make responsible to the industry. He quotes figures supplied by the unemployment insurance fund which cannot be complete, for the reason that among the present strikers are a number of workers from former nonunion shops in Manhattan and out of town which were not registered with the fund.

Jobbers the Important Bosses.

"In addition, there are any number of manufacturers who, seeking to avoid making full payments to the fund, minimize the number of workers in their shops. Often these have some favorites among their workers, who, unfortunately, seek to avoid payment of their contributions to the fund, and so they are not listed, the sub-manufacturer benefitting also by this omission.

"But the more significant proof that the industrial council, considered strictly as inside manufacturers, do not control even 25 per cent of the industry is evidenced by the fact that a good many of them, if not the great part of them, work for jobbers. The same is true of independent manufacturers. That being the case, it is absurd for Mr. Finder to leave the impression that the industrial council, viewed as a group of exclusive manufacturers, is a force to contend with."

WAR LOOMS IN PACIFIC, SAYS U. S. ADMIRAL

Fears Influence of Soviet Union

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., Aug. 31.—Rear Admiral William V. Pratt, president of the Naval War College, Newport, in a lecture at the Institute of Politics, warned the country of an impending war in the Pacific, and expressed the hope that American diplomacy would se maneuver that the onus of starting the row would rest on the shoulders of some other nation. It was clear that the admiral was hinting at Japan.

Sitting on Volcano.

The world sits today on a martial volcano which is liable to begin erupting at any moment. While the danger of war is not as immediate as it was in 1914, he looked with alarm at the unrest that was prevalent all over the Orient and among the colonial possessions of all the powers, including the American possessions in the Pacific.

Fear Soviet Union.

Admiral Pratt regarded the Soviet Union a menace to world peace because the government of the union would endeavor to turn a local war into a world conflagration. This would be extremely embarrassing to the imperialists, the admiral admitted, as they fear that another world war would mean the end of their happy days.

VANDERBILT'S WIFE THROWS PARTY IN FRANCE THAT MAKES EVEN GRAND DUKES GASP; HOW ABOUT IT, WORKERS?

While millions of American workers are finding it difficult to make ends meet on their meager wages when employed, our parasite class goes crazy with affluence in showing the faded aristocracy of Europe what can be done in the way of riotous spending. The following story by Bartolli, a correspondent of the Hearst newspapers is rendered to give our readers an idea of what is happening to the profits that are wrung out of their bone and sinew:

BIARRITZ, France, Aug. 31. — As an entertainer of royalty, princes and grand dukes, Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt has set the pace in Europe this summer with her beautiful and lavish entertainments at Biarritz, the continent's most fashionable resort. Her latest party, held last week, while the gambling season was in full swing, rivalled for the Grand Prix, had all the distinction for which the "Silver Coast" has been famous ever since former Ambassador Moore began his yearly entertainment for Europe's royalty.

The Love Chamber.

The Vanderbilt villa, "Chambre d'Amour" (or Love Chamber), is perhaps the loveliest to be found anywhere, except in southern California. Last week it was the scene of a "Louis XVI. Night." Fetes in the details of that gay court faithfully reproduced in all its details.

Blue and white velvets trimmed with satin sashes and silver ribbons hung everywhere, while the guests promenaded in white powdered wigs redolent of perfumes manufactured by the bourgeois, Worth, related to American in the fashionable dress-making shops at 5,000 francs a bottle.

As each prince or grand duke arrived his party was escorted up a long avenue with all the traditional ceremony of 200 years ago.

Princess Wigless.

Grand Duke Boris and Grand Duke Alexander were among the early arrivals with Princess Nikita. Princess Hohenlohe of Woldenburg was late because the dressmaker had failed to deliver her wig on time.

The Count and Countess de Olovera, the Marquise de San Carlos de Pedroseo, Countess Robilant, the Marquise de Casa Montalvo, the Duke del Arco, the Marquis Orellana and a host of others called early and dined heartily on the grounds, mingling with the several Americans present, including Mr. and Mrs. Roy MacWilliams, Miss Mary Lacy, Miss Rose Ellis Edwards, Mrs. Wolfe Burton, Mrs. S. Mortimer, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hutton and Miss Kitty Bacha.

TEUT ARCHIVES EDITOR HAILS SOVIET TREATY

Denounces Stories of Secret Agreement

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., Aug. 31.—Dr. A. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, one of the editors of the German foreign archives, addressing the Institute of Politics, protested against what he said was the way in which every move for better commercial relations and a closer friendship between Germany and Russia had been "misinterpreted and suspected in certain quarters."

An Open Agreement.

The treaty of Berlin between Russia and Germany, according to him, was a straight and open agreement for friendly co-operation and equal justice for Germans and Russians in Germany, and concerned itself with the arbitration of disputes and friendly neutrality in the event of war in which neither was implicated.

The story of a secret treaty between Berlin and Moscow he declared a "downright lie from beginning to end, invented to cover and neutralize the fact that suspicions were afoot in Germany and Russia against France, Poland and Czecho-Slovakia."

Struck Naw Note.

The speaker pointed out that the French, Polish and Czecho-Slovakian treaties were concluded before the treaty of Berlin, and that if the Germans and Russians had copied the terms of the other treaties neither France, Poland nor Czecho-Slovakia would have had any right to protest. But, he maintained, the treaty of Berlin did not follow their example.

FOREIGN TRADE OF U. S. REACHES NINE BILLIONS

Producers Still Wait for Their Share

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31. — United States commerce with all the rest of the world will reach the $9,000,000,000 mark for the year 1926, it was estimated at the department of commerce.

In the world market American agriculture and industry have flung $3,576,041,000 in exports during the first seven months of the year, the department announced, while buying $2,640,365,000 of foreign goods in the same time. If this rate is maintained for the next five months America's foreign trade for the year will total about $4,450,000,000 in exports and $4,550,000,000 in imports, leaving an unfavorable trade balance of $100,000.

A World Market.

"Thirty-four countries from Canada to Australia are in the American market to purchase agricultural implements, automotive products, chemicals, electric appliances, foodstuffs, iron, steel, hardware, machinery, petroleum products, shoes, textiles and specialties," the department announced.

Manufactured Exports Increased.

"The fiscal year just closed," Dr. Julius Klein, director of the bureau, added, "brought once more into striking relief the rapid growth in American exports of manufactured goods and the immense importance of foreign sales in this class as a stabilizer in our foreign trade as well as in our domestic industry." Klein pointed out that manufactured exports had increased 16 per cent over the preceding fiscal year.

American farmers exported $16,230,000 worth of grains in July alone, as compared to $25,427,000 worth in July, 1925.

Cotton farmers exported $26,635,065 worth of raw cotton, including linters, in July, a gain of $8,700,000 over the same month last year.

Mine Owners Get Fat.

Besides grain tremendous amounts of other raw products have been shipped abroad. The coal exports in July totaled $30,417,206, as compared to $12,748,863 in July, 1925. The greater part of this increase was due to the miners' strike in England.

Petroleum, crude oil, gasoline and their by-products formed another phase of the export trade, the total amounting to $85,885,000 in July, a gain of $10,000,000 in the trade over July, 1925.

One Dead, Four Are Wounded in Car Barn Battle During Holdup

One bandit is dead, and his pal and four other persons are being treated in hospitals for gunshot wounds here today following an unsuccessful attempt to rob a Chicago Surface Lines car barn of $6,000 in cash receipts.

The bandit party consisted of three men and two girls. The girls were posted as "lookouts" as the men entered the car barn. Street car officials had been tipped off, however; and detectives were posted about the building.

When the bandits entered, the officers opened fire. One bandit was killed, another wounded and captured while the third escaped. Three detectives were slightly wounded, as was Robert J. McKinney, superintendent of the barns.

One of the girls was captured, but she refused to give her name, or those of her companions. Police are searching for the other girl and bandit.

RISING GORGE MARKS BADGER STATE FIGHT

Politicians Say Nasty Things to Each Other

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Aug. 31.—The battle between John J. Blaine, governor of the Badger State and Irvine L. Lenroot, U. S. senator for the senatorial nomination, is waxing hot and wrathy.

The boys have gotten down to calling each other names and that kind of thing. Lenroot challenged Blaine to debate the world court issue with him and Blaine was too busy. Whereupon one of Blaine's admirers offered to take the senator on. Lenroot replied that he didn't want to debate with a scared opponent's messenger boy.

Bear and Court Issues.

Blaine against the world court and for light wines and beers. Lenroot is for the court and prohibition. The senator is supported by the anti-saloon league and christian temperance leagues without number, but it is believed the voters will not vote for him.

There are rumors that Victor Berger, socialist of Milwaukee, does not care who licks Blaine. Berger is sore because the governor has not given the socialists a corner of "Fighting Bob's" patronage. In the interests of socialism, the socialists leaders are now in the sorry position of being without principles or followers.

IRISH FAMILY OF FIVE LIVE OUT IN DITCH

Evicted from Lodging When Funds Went

DUBLIN, Aug. 31.—In Dublin at present there is a family of five, husband, wife and three children, living in a ditch at the Pin Mill, Crose Guns Bridge. The husband, as a member of the Workers' Union of Ireland, was out during the coal lockout.

Like the rest of the coal workers when the fight collapsed, he had to make the best of a bad job and was forced to join the I. T. & G. W. U. to get any work at all. He managed to get some work every week for a time, but when the miners' strike came he was again thrown out and has been out of work since.

They were ejected from their lodgings and what furniture they had has been pawned to get bread. Outdoor relief has been refused as they had not an address, a home. The woman went into the union, but the conditions were so bad she could not stick to it. This is only one of many cases in Dublin, and the same applies all over the country.

Just recently our organizers found a case in Delvin, West Meath, of a family of five sleeping in the ditch quite near to Delvin and Clonyn Castle, which has dozens of rooms, not one of which is occupied. All over Dublin and the country there are plenty of mansions and villas that are either empty or only partly occupied. These must be commandeered and the homeless and overcrowded workers put into them.

Wealth in Abundance at Horse Show.

In contrast these hellish conditions under which the workers are living with the lavish expenditure and riotous living of the hosses and the sweaters from all parts of the world during horse show week in Dublin. Tim Healy and Willie Cosgrave have been entertaining on a scale that would provide food for every unemployed family in Dublin for a week.

But it is all for the foreign sweaters and the lords, dukes and sirs with their fine ladies and retinues of servants. The papers are full of pictures of Maharajahs and other blood suckers all doing themselves well at the expense of the workers.

Every night there have been special receptions and dances for these gentry to sport their figures, while the starving workers hang around the doors of the well restaurants and dance halls feasting on the smell of the rich dishes being prepared for the parasites.

Everywhere the children of these moneybags are trotting around with their prize-winning ponies while the children of the poor are hunting for crusts in the gutter. The blatant display of high living that has gone on all week is enough to cause the 80,000 unemployed men and women and young persons to do desperate deeds of violence.

Not one in 20 of these is receiving the dole or any kind of relief, and their forbearance in the circumstances is really remarkable. In fact, it is cowardly. They must learn not to be so docile and ready to starve while the lords play riot in the country. They have been well betrayed, no work, no relief of any kind, but plenty of feasting and riotous living for the bosses and their families.

The workers must rouse themselves from their apathy and while preparing to take all steps to overthrow such a system of class privilege, at the same time organize to demand their immediate needs of work or maintenance at full trade union rates. Hammer and Plough.

The "Revolution" in Greece

By C. CHRISTIE.

The downfall of the Pangalos dictatorship in Greece did not surprise us. It was inevitable. Any dictatorship, no matter what its economic basis, if it has not sufficient strength to assert itself against its enemies, is evidently near its end. And the Pangalos dictatorship, especially in the last few weeks, was showing a great deal of hesitation in dealing with its political enemies of the bourgeois parties. One day it would arrest and send to exile certain bourgeois political leaders for treason against the State and the next day would bring them in order to arrest again the day after.

A dictatorship will stay in power only so long as it has the ability and the required strength to enforce its will and to crush ruthlessly all opponents. This being so, one seeing the conduct of Pangalos lately, should easily come to the conclusion that his regime had failed and predict his downfall se very near.

Military Coup.

However, we are not at all enthused after the manner in which this end came, i.e. by a military coup d'etat. A merry chase of the fellen dictator over the blue seas. The only proper way to overthrow this abominable tyranny would have been a sweeping revolt of the masses, drawing in its wake the whole system, which is no longer able to govern the country in any other way but by a succession of dictators in power.

The working class of Greece, industrial workers as well as the peasants and refugees, will not fare any better under the present dictator Kondylis, than they fared under Pangalos. Both serve the same interests, (with some internal variations—which is of not much concern to the workers) the Greek capitalists and foreign imperialism.

Workers Can Gain Nothing.

The working classes of the country have nothing to gain from this change of government, and, besides, Kondylis is too well known to the Greek proletariat from the time, when as a military dictator and minister of the interior he inaugurated his fascist policy, arresting, persecuting and imprisoning the class conscious workers by the dozen every day.

One of the things the fellen Pangalos is accused of by the victors, is that he did not keep his promises to the "people"—those promises being tha re-establishment of the "rights and liberties" of the citizenry. But as a matter of fact Pangalos could not be held responsible personally for failure to carry out his promises any more than Kondylis, who makes these same promises now, and is aurs not to keep them. For that matter, no one can make such promises and stay in Greece and fulfil them. Parliamentarism is a thing of the past in Greece now, it has served its purpose and outgrown its usefulness. No man is able, will as he may, to bring it back to life and make it function as a political machine

Sham Parliament.

Even if they succeed somehow to have parliamentary elections, it is going to be a sham parliament, as in Italy, and nothing even remotely approaching the parliament Greece has known before the war, when industry was very small and the coup capital six most negligible. Dictatorship more or less open, more rather than less, will hereafter be the only form of government able to function in that country a bourgeois dictatorship, until the time when the masses will arise to overthrow it and establish their own proletarian dictatorship.

There is no political group, among the bourgeois parties, backed by an economic group, or groups, strong enough to dominate the rest of them. And besides the internal differences of the bourgeois parties, there are also foreign influences, that undoubtedly play a decisive role in the politics of the country.

Even in the prewar period, and especially during and after the war, changes of government took place because of foreign interference. Any one who undertakes the government of tha country undertakes also certain obligations to the foreign interests that he must fulfill, failing which his political life is doomed. There never was and never can be as long as imperialism rules, such a thing as "pure" Greek politics. Politics in Greece were always conducted either by the English, French or Russian "finger," as the various foreign influences were directed upon Greek journalists and politicians.

Deviated From Line.

In the present situation, it is not at all improbable that Pangelos' downfall is, to a very great extent, dua to his deviation from the line drawn for him by British capital. It is not a mere coincidence, that the crisis came right after tha conclusion of the Greco-Serbian treaty.

However, as we stated above, tha present political change will hardly bring any change in the life of the workers of Greece, unless Kondylis will carry on more vigorously fascist measures which he had initiated into Greek politics and Pangalos tried in vain to imitate. In this case Greece either will become a little Italy—if Kondylis succeeds—or the ire and indignation of the working masses will burst out, carrying to destruction the whole robbing crew of fascists, monarchists and "liberal" Republicans.

Poland--The Land of Systematic White Terror

In the Polish prisons there are at present six thousand political prisoners, revolutionary workers and peasants. Only a small number of them have been tried. The greatest proportion of them are in prison on reward which lasts for them two, two and a half and in a number of cases even three years. The Polish courts have made it their custom to deduct the time on reward from the sentence, so that there happens frequently the case that the sentence is six months and that the prisoner, who has passed three years in prison on reward, must serve three and a half years instead.

The number of the prisoners on reward increases with every year, because on the one hand the courts cannot comply with the great number of political trials and on the other hand in many cases where proofs are not sufficient for tha trial, the trial cannot take place, but the prisoner in nevertheless not released and he is therefore endeavoring to facilitate the tasks of the courts in another way—by letting the prisoners die.

The conditions in most of the Polish prisons are such that a longer stay there means death for the majority of the prisoners.

In this respect the "Prison of the Holy Cross" and the Vronke Prison are most famous. The first is situated on a hill almost 2500 feet high and always surrounded by mists. As the food and the heating are completely insufficient and the wetness of the building has a terrible effect on the health, on the average of 150 prisoners die there every year of the 400 prisoners who are imprisoned there (the prison is built for not more than 300). In Czarist times only prisoners with a sentence of less than three years were taken to this prison because one knew that nobody could live there more than that. At present, however, tha prison is for those with life sentence in order to kill them as quickly as possible.

In the Vronka Prison the prisoners are tortured in such a way by solitary confinement and the brutal regime, that suicides and insanity are daily results. Only in the courts of the last year the names of three victims can be mentioned: Kalwka, Gorki, Meisler.

Official Confession of the Prison Horrors.

The Polish prisons have already gained a sad notoriety in the whole world. Already in 1924 progressive bourgeois politicians and radical writers of France protested against these conditions. Tha Polish parliament was compelled to appoint a committee of investigation (Augusti Lemoine ac cual task was to clear Poland before the eyes of the foreign states.

However, after having visited a number of prisons, the committee collected such an amount of material that it did not dare to present it to the public. Only after two years of work in secret sessions (tha members of the committee had promised not to speak about their work to anybody outside) the committee has composed a report for the parliament which was published in March 1926.

Let us mention here some extracts from the official report which certainly rathera tries to veil than to exaggerate the terrible conditions:

"Many prisons are very much overcrowded. In Cracow every prisonar had only an avarage of 2 cbm. air. The overcrowding in Lods is colossal. In Rovno there come on one prisoner only 1.9 or even 1.86 cbm. air . . . The prisoners sleep on tha floor, under tha planksbeds; one sack of straw always serves for two prisoners, the straw in the sacks, however, is old and rubbed into chaff. There are even too few blankets; bed linen is quite out of the question. The cold are tha cause of the many deaths . . . The prisoners on reward live worse than the hard labor prisoners . . . The "Holy Cross Prison" should be quickly liquidated. . . In the Galician prisons the conditions are worse. In the prison of Sambor, which has a quite modern building, the central heating and the canalisation are out of order already for several years. Even the prison hospital is not heated, since several years. The mutiny of the prisoners which took place there and led to the death of one prisoner, is therefore understandable. Also the prisons in Cracow are not heated. In Bialystok during the hunger strike of the prisoners the mouths of the strikers were opened by iron tongs in order to feed them. In this way the death of several prisoners was brought about. . . ."

HEADQUARTERS OF THE PARTY AND THE DAILY WORKER

STATEMENT OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE OF THE WORKERS (COMMUNIST) PARTY

THE Central Committee of the party considers it necessary to make the following statement to the membership on the question of the location of the headquarters of the party and The DAILY WORKER:

Rumors have been circulating in the party in regard to the proposed removal of the headquarters of the party and The DAILY WORKER from Chicago to New York City. These rumors have caused some disturbance in the work of the party, some comrades considering that it was a question of principle for discussion of the party whether its headquarters were located in one city or another.

The headquarters of the party were originally located in New York City. They were removed to Chicago BECAUSE AT THAT TOME and under the circumstances surrounding the party work, Chicago offered a better center to the Central Committee from which to conduct the party work. It may well happen that in the future other cities besides New York or Chicago will offer the best vantage point from which to conduct the work of the Central Committee.

The Central Committee does not believe that the question of where the party headquarters are located or in what city THE DAILY WORKER is published is a question of principle. It is a question of what the circumstances surrounding the party work are, and these circumstances may change from year to year. The question can only be discussed, therefore, from the standpoint of what location at a given time offers the best opportunity for conducting the party work in such a manner that the party may make the greatest progress.

The political committee of the Central Committee considered this matter and came to the conclusion that at present the best location of the party headquarters and The DAILY WORKER would be in New York City. It found, however, a number of obstacles in the way of making any change in the location of the party headquarters and the city of publication of The DAILY WORKER, and therefore decided that no change should be made in the location of the headquarters and the city of publication of The DAILY WORKER.

With this decision the matter is closed. The circumstances and obstacles to any change will make it impossible to reopen the matter during the present year. Should the question again be taken up the Central Committee will inform the membership of its views.

With this decision closed, there comes before the party the task of placing The DAILY WORKER on a sound foundation in its present location. We must "KEEP THE DAILY WORKER" at all costs, no matter where it is located.

The Central Committee will inform the party membership of its plans to this end and the conclusion that at present the best location of the party headquarters and The DAILY WORKER would be in New York City. It found, however, a number of obstacles in the way of making any change in the location of the party headquarters and the city of publication of The DAILY WORKER, and therefore decided that no change should be made in the location of the headquarters and the city of publication of The DAILY WORKER.

With this decision closed, there comes before the party the task of placing The DAILY WORKER on a sound foundation in its present location. We must "KEEP THE DAILY WORKER" at all costs, no matter where it is located.

The Central Committee will inform the party membership of its plans to this end and come to the conclusion that at present the best location of the party headquarters and The DAILY WORKER finds itself during the next few days, and urges the whole party to take up with energy and enthusiasm the task of safeguarding The DAILY WORKER for the future work of the party.

Central Committee,
Workers (Communist) Party,
C. E. Ruthenberg,
General Secretary.

CURRENT EVENTS

By T. J. O'Flaherty.

you see the United States has no monopoly on those little incidents.

THUS British coal mining industry is in bad shape. It can only be rehabilitated to the satisfaction of the owners at the expense of the miners. The British miners must work longer hours for less pay so that the owners may be able to compete with German and Polish coal, which is turned out more cheaply because the Dawes plan forced the German miners to work longer hours that hitherto and the Polish government did the same for the miners of that country.

A. J. COOK stood out against a reduction in the miners' wages or a lengthening of the hours until now. The right wing labor leaders are willing to give everything away. The operators insist on Cook's head. The right wing labor leaders are only too willing. Dark lively days loom on the British labor horizon. What will the rank and file do? Have they yet developed the necessary leadership to contest the field with the MacDonalds and Thomasses? Not yet perhaps. But time is on their side and the British Communist Party which proved its mettal during the general strike is growing in numbers and in efficiency.

THERE is a revolution in Nicaragua and the still existing government of that republic has protested to the league of nations of which it is a member against the alleged action of a Mexican warship in aiding the revolutionary forces. Sometimes a South American revolution is a good thing to dodge explaining, but we note that the revolutionaries attacked the headquarters of the Bragman Bluff Lumber company and the Standard Fruit Steamship company of New Orleans. We are for the revolutionaries until further notice.

THE implications of Nicaragua's action in relation to the Monroe Doctrine, completely eclipse the protest itself. What if the United States resents the action of the league in interfering in a sphere over which the United States has assumed the sole right of political overlordship? The Chicago Tribune points out that Nicaragua's action is inconsistent with a recognition of the Monroe Doctrine. Unless the league watches its step Uncle Sam may play with his whiskers and put on that indignant look which was becoming to him before he got so disgustingly fat.

OPEN SHOP PACT IS TURNED DOWN BY BOSS DYERS

Gary Cleaners and Dyers Still Strike

GARY, Ind., Aug. 31.—An open shop agreement between the Master Cleaners' Association and the Cleaners and Dyers Union of Lake county signed by officials of each was turned down by the Master Cleaners at a meeting in Gary during which the Gary bosses led a successful fight on the pact.

Betrayal of Men.

Three members of the executive board of the union signed the agreement which was to set up open shop conditions in the cleaning and dyeing shops of Lake county in which the union had called a strike. This was entered into at the exclusion of two members of the board, Brothers Harris and Iekenhorst who went to Chicago to see union officials about the validity of such an agreement. They were told, however, that nothing could be done about it since it was signed.

But the action of the Masters' Association puts an entirely different complexion on the affair. And the union members who have been on strike, most of them very indignant about the agreement, will have their say about it at a meeting scheduled for Tuesday night.

Open Shop Agreement.

The agreement declared for an open shop arrangement to run until January at which time the dispute was to be arbitrated. In the meantime the bosses would impose their own conditions on the men. This agreement was very bad for the men, especially in view of the fact they stood a good chance to win and that all union men were sympathetic to the union.

A representative of The DAILY WORKER spoke to the lotter at a meeting of the retail association in Gary. A speaker was supposed to have been present from the Masters' Association but failed to appear. However, the organization took no definite stond.

Members of the teamsters' union have been delivering scab goods during the strike and the cleaners' and dyers' union is going to make an appeal to stop this.

Why not a small bundle of The DAILY WORKER sent to you regularly to take to your trade union meeting?

JOSEPH MANLEY

Statement by the Central Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party

JOSEPH MANLEY died a victim of the dangerous work which capitalism compels the workers to submit to in order to gain their livelihood.

As a structural iron worker he risked his life daily in fulfilling the duties which capitalism requires of the workers of his trade. These dangers could be reduced and minimized if capitalist production did not place economy and profits above the lives of the workers. As it is, there is scarcely a great building which towers toward the sky in the cost of which there is not included the life of some worker engaged in its erection.

JOSEPH MANLEY was a proletarian fighter who for many years had taken a leading part in the struggles of the workers. In his early years he became a member of the union of his trade and fought militantly for better conditions for the workers. Fifteen years ago he was a member of the socialist party.

Like thousands of other workers, he was inspired by the great proletarian revolution in Russia. When the workers and peasants of Russia were raising their darkest hour, during the period of famine brought on by the destruction wrought by counter-revolution and drought, he took up work as the secretary of the Trade Union Committee for Relief of the Famine in Russia and rendered valuable services in arousing the trade unionists of this country to the meaning of the proletarian revolution and raising funds for the assistance of the workers and peasants of the Soviet Union.

THRU his work in this field he came closer to the Workers (Communist) Party and found in it the expression of the leadership in the struggle against capitalist oppression and exploitation, and became a member of the party. He served the party as industrial organizer, helping to develop a militant trade unionism carrying on the class struggle against capitalism.

When the movement for independent political action by the workers and farmers, which he supported, reached its height in the mass demonstration for a party of workers and farmers in the convention of July 3, 1923, which formed the Federated Farmer-Labor Party, he was elected the national secretary of that organization, in which position he worked for the building of a broader party of workers and farmers by supporting the movement for the St. Paul Farmer-Labor convention of 1924. When this movement received a temporary setback thru the LaFollette party, he became the campaign manager of the Workers (Communist) Party in the 1924 election.

THE struggle over the policies the party should pursue, during the year 1924-1925, left him dispirited. Altho a good proletarian fighter, Comrade Manley did not understand clearly that such struggles are part of the life of a proletarian party, and that thru them it clarifies itself and creates greater internal strength, and that it is the duty of all revolutionists to cling more closely to their party in such a period. Because of this he allowed his membership to lapse and drifted out of the activities of the party. Those closest to him declare, however, that before his death he realized his error, and that he would again, had he lived, take up his work as a party member.

Despite the fact of his temporary weakness and that during the last year Comrade Manley was not in the ranks of the party, the Central Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party believes that his long years of service to the working class movement entitle him to the respect of the workers and it makes this statement to do honor to his services to the workers' cause.

CENTRAL COMMITTEE,
WORKERS (COMMUNIST) PARTY OF AMERICA,
C. E. RUTHENBERG, General Secretary.

FRANK CRITICISM MARKS DISTRICT CONFERENCE HERE

The most thoro discussion with open, frank criticism of failures and shortcomings ever held at any meeting of District 8 marked the district conference held Sunday, August 29. The effect was a wholesome one. The comrades could return yet more convinced of the possibilities available for the party and with plans for more systematically organized activities. The conference increased their faith in the ability of the party to respond to its tasks.

Delegates In From District.

Representatives were present from the Chicago sections, from most of the language fractions, and from the cities of Waukegan, Kenosha, Milwaukee, St. Louis, Hammond and Gary. The conclusions reached by these representatives were unanimous. The agenda consisting of only two points: one, the problem of adding more life to the party and the Y. W. L., and the trade union work in connection therewith.

Reports were made by the district organizer and the secretary of the trade union committee surveying the present situation, the periods of prosperity, however, not embracing all industries; the status of the labor movement with its official policies becoming increasingly reactionary, the insufficient participation in active work by many party members and the difficulties following the party reorganization. The results were shown in dropping party membership, insufficient development of functioning party committees and particularly of shop nuclei, insufficient sale of party propaganda material.

Encouragement.

The reports also stressed the points of encouragement. The results of publication of shop papers, development of united front activities in support of workers' struggles, the achievements recorded in many respects in trade union activities, and emphasizing the need of much greater concentration on elementary tasks.

The delegates agreed unanimously with the estimation of the existing conditions and the lessons to be drawn which were put forward by the reporters. The delegates furthermore went deeply into the various phases of the pending work in view of these lessons and many valuable contributions were made, not only on the theoretical correctness of policies, but more yet by way of giving practical examples of how our objects can be attained the most successfully.

Future Program.

The following program for the immediate future as proposed by the district committee was unanimously agreed to: First in general, give more concentration on developing contact in shops, particularly of heavy industries, development of shop nuclei, extension of shop papers, more systematic organization of mass propaganda activities, literature sales, distribution of party papers, and complete program of party education for the coming season, proposals in regards to work amongst the Negroes, strengthening the Y. W. L. and providing necessary financial assistance for party activities.

More specifically the following points of concentration were proposed and accepted unanimously:

Build DAILY WORKER.

1. Building of The DAILY WORKER. 2. Development of progressive movement amongst the coal miners. 3. Participation in the elections with development of certain possibilities for united labor ticket. 4. Initiation of specific campaign to organize the unorganized. A concrete program of details on each of these four points were adopted.

MINERS' EXECUTIVE STILL FIRM AGAINST MACDONALD PRESSURE FOR BETRAYAL

the Labor Party parliamentary group, is still going on and so far has not resulted in any decisions being announced. Undoubtedly the MacDonald-Thomas group is trying hard to induce the miners' executive to surrender and lead a betrayal.

The parliament, after renewing the "emergency powers act" has adjourned until November 9, turning down a proposal of MacDonald to meet on Sept. 7. MacDonald is having said he hoped that a peace proposal would be formulated by that time.

The resistance of the miners and labor generally to any surrender and their growing resentment at attempts to trick and betray them is shown by the demonstration staged by miners and other militants from the recently adjourned National Minority Conference, in front of the Labor Party organ this morning. The demonstrators demanded the editor retract statements made in an editorial asserting that the miners should have accepted the Samuel's memorandum last May and called the strike. After registering their protest and singing the internationale, the demonstration ended.

CLEVELAND ATTENTION!

All petitions to put the party ticket on the ballot must be at the district office no later than Friday morning, Sept. 3. Petitions brought in later than that date will be of no value. Every signature will be required so do not fail to turn in your petitions.

JOSEPH TUMULTY ENTERS CONTEST FOR PRESIDENT OF ILLINOIS MINERS' UNION TO SUCCEED FARRINGTON

rators, published a special article Aug. 5 which lauded Farrington as "an able leader who is highly esteemed by the operators" and that 7 years ago the late Francis S. Peabody wanted Farrington to be a "labor representative" on the board of directors of the Peabody Coal company. The article added sinisterly, "whether Farrington was appointed to the Peabody board, your correspondent does not know. His stock (with the operators) has risen, rather than fallen, since that date."

In Others' Footsteps.

Farrington follows the notorious Tom Lewis, Phil Penna and other union officials in the golden path to the capitalist camp. His first utterance of policy after the uncovering of his acts was a statement that union miners should take a 35% cut from the present Jacksonville scale. This would bring their wage to $5 a day. By his change of employment Farrington has increased his own wage $60%, bringing it to $25,000 a year. The Peabodys have just swung 8 large Pennsylvania mines from the union to the open shop, operating the first to resume work at the low 1917 scale.

Big Fight Over Ouster.

That a battle royal raged during the meeting of the executive board which resulted in a motion suspending Farrington from office is whispered around the corridors of the district office in Springfield. The Lewis forces wanted to expel Farrington from office and from the union at one fell swoop. Farrington's most loyal supporters were opposed to taking any action until the president's return and the middle-of-the-road boys led by vice-president Flahwick favored suspension, at the same time granting Farrington the privilege of a trial under the constitution. This position carried the day.

Flahwick, who was closely linked with Farrington in all the former's crooked work during recent years has his eye on the presidency. There is a suspicion that Flahwick knew of Farrington's intention to go over to the Peabody payroll and that there was an agreement between the two, that Farrington would stand for reelection and then resign, appointing Flahwick to fill the vacancy.

It is rumored that Flahwick is urging William Sneed, to withdraw his candidacy for the presidency, offering Sneed the vice-presidency. This is believed satisfactory to the Peabody interests. Sneed is just as reactionary as Farrington. John L. Lewis is moving every ounce of influence he possesses to install his own machine on the ruins of Farrington's. But those who claim Farrington is thru because of this exposure do not know what they are talking about according to Springfield union politicians. The Peabody Coal company employs 30,000 miners and the company's resources are enormous. Farrington with his salary of $25,000 a year and a liberal drawing account for "emergency" work will be able to take over the greater part of his "union organizers" into the Peabody apparatus and continue his union wrecking policy.

Walker Embarrassed.

Another political figure in the trade union movement who will be embarrassed by the Farrington exposure is John H. Walker, president of the Illinois State Federation of Labor, former president of the Illinois Miners' Union and crony of Farrington's. Walker and Farrington are named by Senator Caraway as beneficiaries of the Sannel insull slush fund in the recent primary elections. Both are influential cogs in the Small machine. Both supported Frank L. Smith, and both are bitter foes of radicalism. Walker resented the imputation that he would take money from a capitalist politician and he stated that Farrington was equally pure.

Trouble at Convention.

The endorsement of Frank L. Smith will come before the state convention of the Illinois Federation of Labor and it is reported that Walker will be seriously handicapped without the presence of Frank Farrington and his army of delegates. The miners' union, the flat janitors, the building trades and the teamsters' union are also the strongest numerically at state conventions. The three latter have their main strength in Chicago. They are extremely reactionary and as the leaders do not always walk in the straight and narrow path, locally, John H. Walker's influence with Small comes in exceedingly handy when those boys need a pardon for one of their jailed gangsters.

Johnny Draws His Pay.

In return for those considerations Walker is allowed to retain his position with a salary of over $100 a week, which is looked on as a miserable pittance by less highly titled officials of other unions.

John Fitzpatrick and Ed. Nockels of the Chicago Federation of Labor are finding it more difficult every day to face their old progressive friends. The Frank L. Smith scandal hit them pretty hard and now comes the expose of Farrington with whom they were associated in boosting Frank L. Smith. Verily, indeed, the way of the transgressor is not easy.

AUTO COMPANY AT FLINT, MICH. COERCES VOTE

General Motors Tells Flint to Appropriate

By a Worker Correspondent.

FLINT, Mich., Aug. 31. — After a threat issued by the General Motors corporation, not to use their newly acquired $4,000,000 plant unless the voters of Flint, Mich. install a new sewer system the "Loyal" Flint City Council has decided to give the voters another chance to make good.

The General Motors corporation recently bought out the huge plant of the Flint Motor Co. at the fancy price of $4,000,000 for the purpose of manufacturing the closed Buick bodies now being made in Detroit, and recently tied up several times on account of labor troubles.

The city fathers of Flint immediately got busy and asked the voters of Flint to favor a $120,000 appropriation to install a new sewer system to accomodate the General Motors corporation's program of still further expanding the former Flint plant. On August 17 the voters of Flint defeated this measure, and immediately Mr. H. H. Bassett, president of the Buick Motor Co. issued a statement to the effect that the new $4,000,000 plant will be left idle and the Buick bodies continue to be made in Detroit, Unless the voters of Flint change their minds and put in new sewers for the General Motors corporation.

One of the reasons why the Flint voters turned down the new sewer proposition is that in the thickly populated sections of the east and west side of Flint where the workers live, there are no sewer accomodations, while the south side where the $4,000,000 plant is located, already has sewers and is not built up at all.

Immediately after the statement by Bassett, in fact the same day, the local politicians appeared before the city council with a resolution requesting that the sewer proposition be given another vote.

"I am satisfied that the citizens of Flint are loyal to their town, loyal to their institutions, to the General Motors . . . (!) I have been assured that the sewers to be built were for the benefit of the General Motors corporation. This is not true. General Motors never asked for anything. It was not justified in asking for . . . General Motors is only asking for what the city has always done in the past 20 years," said the man who introduced the resolution.

And now the citizens of Flint will again be asked to vote huge sums of money to improve the property of the General Motors corporation at the expense of the health improvements in the working class residential sections.

It should be borne in mind that the huge majority of the Flint voters are employed by the General Motors corporations.

SESQUI-CENTENNIAL CELEBRATES SALESMANSHIP; CRUDE AND DIRTY

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 31.— Sesqui-Centennial . . . one hundred and fifty years in which to paint the idea of business enterprise for private profit. The exposition is blatant, crude, as is America today, flaunting its painted stucco salesrooms over the flatness of the filled-in marshland. For sky-line, the monotony of flat roofs . . . with here and there an ornamented turret.

The most significant statue is an enormous bottle of Bromo-Seltzer, forceful warning to those whose constitutions are too weak to stomach modern "jazz." This landmark greets you at every turn of the artificial "lagoon," as your imported gondola glides over the bloated carcass of a dead cat or pulls up alongside the roller-coasters of "Frontiers Inland."

Russian Room Brighter.

There are other interesting contrasts, which stand out in spite of the slipshod, half-finished state of the exposition. In the art exhibit for instance, after wandering thru dozens of rooms filled with dull portraits and still-duller landscapes, you suddenly come upon a burst of color and motion in the Russian room. One canvas in this room has caught the spirit of the whole huge show. Across its face marches the typical American proletariat army . . . darby hats, pick axes, shovels, market baskets bursting with "Uneeda Biscuits," all neatly labeled. And in the background, the menacing smokestacks of our industrial towns not forgetting the ever present reminder of the next world war, T. N. T.

Two rooms away the walls are covered with the most exquisite Persian rugs. Attached to one of them is a card which states that it was woven "by a slave," for the entrance of a mosque . . . and bears the inscription: "Only in the service of the Lord, do I find Life."

Advertising Started Early.

On a quiet street they have succeeded in reproducing a part of beautiful old Philadelphia . . . Here is Washington's house and Franklin's, and the Gerard bonsa with the old "counting house," the first Philadelphia bank. Here too is Franklin's old printing press noiselessly turning out the first copy of the Philadelphia "Public Ledger" . . . March 25, 1816 . . . "Price One Cent." It is interesting to see that for its eight columns of news there are eight columns of advertising, proving that "Old Ben" was a worthy ancestor of his successor, "The Saturday Evening Post," and knew how to turn a penny for profit.

That the exposition is primarily concerned with furnishing a medium for advertising American business interests goes without saying. Our old friends of the hill board and street car cards greet us at every turn. Wrigley's, Waterman's, the B. and O. railroad vie with the Wall Paper Association and Standard Oil for your eye and your money.

Japanese Typewriter.

Even the Chinese and the Japanese have caught the fever. Next to a Japanese typewriter which can write up and down or sideways, one sees portraits of American children skillfully embroidered in colored silks for the small sum of $200 and the Japanese Export Corporation displays lifesize figures of Japanese men in native costume, topped off with American felt hats.

But the crowds are bored, they can see all this any day in any one of our 100 per cent American cities, with a few skyscrapers, a traffic cop, an ambulance and a fire engine all thrown in for the same price.

Workers Party Nucleus Makes Durant Motor Co. Forego Plan to Cut Pay

By a Worker Correspondent.

ELIZABETH, N. J. — There is a plant here known as The Durant Motor Co., making Durant and Star cars. The conditions were as bad as in any other open shop in the country. Last February there was a shop nucleus of the Workers Party organized. The nucleus proceeded to work and started to issue a bulletin known as the Durant-Hays Hunt Radiator. The bulletin was very well received by the workers and was well read by them. It described the bad conditions in the shop and urged the workers to organize.

Last June the company made an attempt to cut the wages of the upholsterers and trimmers. A strike followed which lasted for a few hours and the men won the wage cut back.

While the men were out and were standing on the sidewalk near the plant, Mr. Hilfers, of the New Jersey Federation of Labor came asking what the trouble was. The men told him all and said that they were willing to join a union. As the wages of upholsterers they succeeded in forming a local of that union. Meanwhile workers of other departments heard about it and also started to organize, but as there was no union they could not be admitted, so they formed an A. F. of L. local known as "Auto Body Workers' Union."

Both local unions are functioning well and have already their respective charters. Last Friday both locals held a joint open meeting which was well attended. Workers are showing a very good spirit, as since they started to organize, their conditions are improving.

The Machinists Union is also coming into this drive and those three organizations will most likely succeed in organizing the plant and establishing a basis for organization in the auto industry.

LOCAL 38 OF I. L. G. W. TRIES UNION DRIVE

Left Wing Executive to Organize Girls

By WILLIAM LUPU,
(Worker Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.— (By Mail) —After many years of unmotorialized efforts by former administrations to organize the dressmakers, the left wingers have launched a vigorous drive against the dressmaking sea holes of this city.

The task, however, is now more perplexing than ever before.

Of the varied problems, two are most menacing: First, how the apathetic ladies' tailors may be egthused to help organize their sisters, the girls; second, how to stave off destructive criticism, which springs from the bitter opposition—the right wing.

Unity Prime Requisite

Local 38, comprising several crafts—ladies' tailors, alteration tailors, theatrical tailors, and custom dressmakers —has ever since its inception, for almost two decades, grappled with the vexing problem of unorganised dressmakers.

From Bad To Worse.

The problem has, of late, become more serious than in past years, the trend of fashion tending to create "soft work," the kind of ladies' apparel that girls produce at wages forty percent lower than men receive.

Fashionable Fifth Avenue shops, inveriably, catering to their patrons' fancy, whose vogue whimsies have lately been Parisified, display soft line modes, for which fabulous prices are paid to the highly reputed fashion shops, in comparison to the meager wages of the dressmakers.

Lack of Spirit.

Year after year, the ladies' tailors were wont to bear competition until they have settled down, indifferently, working wherever and whenever they chance to find a job.

Some of them, being misled to abandon the hope of ever succeeding in organizing the girls, have adopted a pessimistic attitude, even when the underpaid girls are willing to help in unionizing the dressmakers.

The executive board, however, has faithfully resolved to forge ahead, barriers notwithstanding, until Local 38 will have organized the dressmakers, and raised the standard of conditions for all of its members.

A. C. W. MEMBERS PROTEST AGAINST PIECE WORK PACT

Resent New Concession in Montreal

By VICTOR FRANK
(Worker Correspondent)

MONTREAL, Aug. 31. — The last meetings of Montreal Locals of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union proved that the general officers of the union what the workers think of the new concession to the Montreal clothing manufacturers.

The official press of the Amalgamated Union for the last few weeks talks about the "victory" of the Amalgamated general strike in Montreal, and now they claim that the membership must agree to piece-work, because this is the only way to bring the manufacturers back to Montreal from the little country places where they ran away from union control.

Much Bitterness.

It is hard to believe the bitterness that prevails now among the Montreal Amalgamated members. They all agree that piece-work will bring more demoralisation into the Montreal clothing market than there was before the general strike. The general office is threatening to withdraw the charter and financial support if the members will not accept their policy.

The sentiment against the new piece-work policy is such that pressers' local decided to tax their members five dollars each to form a fund to fight piece-work. The same sentiment prevails amongst the operators and cutters.

Which Will They Do?

The Montreal Amalgamated members are awaiting further actions of their general officers. The problem is: Will the general office of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers take into consideration the strong sentiment of their Montreal members condemning piece-work or will they go over the heads of their members and bring in the system against which the workers are protesting.

It is foolish to believe that the Montreal clothing Workers will be able to compete thru the piece-work system with French girls unorganized and in the small country towns of Quebec province.

Collector For Passaic Discovers Shopkeepers Oppose; Workers Help

By M. PERLIN
(Worker Correspondent)

During the house to house collection in Chicago on August 22 I had some experiences that may interest other collectors. In a bakery at Division and California a worker sweeping the floor searched his pockets and gave his only ten pennies, saying, "I wish I could give ten dollars." The customers gave something, but the nicely dressed young men at the cash register said, "I wouldn't give a cent for the strikers because they are no good. They want higher wages and shorter hours, and that isn't good."

Dislikes Strikes.

In a lunch room nearby a short fat fellow with beady eyes and an oily liker said, "I'm the boss of this store and I don't want you to bother my customers."

I went ahead without paying any attention to him, and he threatened to have me thrown out. I threatened to organize a strike of his customers, and the effect was very good. He gave me a quarter, apologised, and invited me to proceed with the collection.

Floored Him With Mere

At another place the boss wanted to debate, "See here," he said: "The strikers are fools. They stay out of work half a year, and even if they gain a little raise in wages, they have already lost more."

But I argued with him on the basis of Marxian economics that the workers have nothing to lose but their chains. When they work for low wages they only prepare for themselves a time of unemployment; when they strike they may raise their wages. If he wasn't convinced, some others may have been.

CALIFORNIA LABOR BACKS LABOR'S FOE

Socialists Refuse to Take United Action

By WM. SCHNEIDERMAN.
(Executive Secretary The Daily Worker)

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Aug. 31. — "When thieves fall out," it is possible for honest workers to find out the true state of affairs in the California political situation. The two outstanding candidates for the republican nomination for governor are F. W. Richardson, present governor, and Lieut. Gov. C. C. Young.

Richardson is the most ultra-reactionary that ever ran the state of California. He is supported by the Southern Pacific railroad interests, because he placed one of their leading officials on the state railroad commission, which has saved the Southern Pacific millions of dollars.

In return for this slight favor, the head of the Southern Pacific donated $10,000 to the campaign treasury of Governor Richardson. The latter is also supported by the infamous Los Angeles Times, which carries on the most vicious attack upon organized labor of any newspaper in America.

A Fake Liberal.

Richardson's chief opponent is C. C. Young, who poses as a liberal and progressive, with the support of the Hearst newspapers, Senator Hiram Johnson, and "Boss" Parrott, who runs Los Angeles. Young was a supporter of La Follette in the last presidential election, but was discreet enough not to do so too openly, and to this day maintains a benevolent neutrality regarding Coolidge and Dawes. One of the most powerful backers is Paul Scharrenberg, secretary of the California Federation of Labor, and head of the state conference for progressive political action which, together with the socialists, conducted La Follette's campaign in California in 1924.

How To Tell "Friends of Labor."

Young has the official backing of organized labor, in view of the recent action of the Los Angeles Central Labor Council in endorsing his candidacy, which even went so far as to circularize its affiliated membership to register republican for the primary elections. As California is normally a republican state, nomination virtually amounts to election. The Central Labor Council went further, and endorsed a number of other candidates for office, some of whom are notoriously anti-labor.

The unique method they use is by counting the number of times they voted for a measure endorsed by Labor, and if it outnumbered the votes on measures disapproved by Labor, then they were "friends of labor." One of the ways in which some of these anti-labor candidates secured the endorsement of the Central Labor Council, was by their "wet" record.

Silent on Repressive Law.

Young is in no sense a labor candidate. For 16 years he has been a part of the state political administration, posing as a liberal. At the present time, when asked about his stand on the criminal syndicalist law, under which nearly 200 I. W. W. members were sent to San Quentin penitentiary, he refused to commit himself for fear of alienating the support of some of the "respectable" people who are behind him.

The labor party which flourished in Los Angeles three years ago is long dead. The socialist party has nominated Upton Sinclair for governor, and he so far refused to join with the Workers Party to place an independent Labor Party ticket in the field, fearing to lose its place on the ballot. If they place technical considerations above the interests of the workers and farmers, then they are surely discredited in the eyes of all militants.

Socialists Refuse United Action.

Even their own locals are sending in inquiries to the state headquarters of the socialist party as to what stand they are taking in regard to the Communists' proposal for a united front. The indications are that the Workers Party will be forced to place its own candidates in the field, and continue its fight to unite labor's forces on the political field.

Garment Strikers Ask A. C. W. For Strike Aid

A NEW NOVEL By Upton Sinclair

(Copyright, 1926, by Upton Sinclair)

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.

J. Arnold Ross is a wealthy independent California oil operator who was first Jim Ross, a teamster, and then a merchant before he went into the oil business. Bunny, his son, is a sensitive boy, learning the oil business and now going to high school. Dad has a field in the San Elida Valley on the Watkins ranch. The Watkins family are holy rollers. Eli Watkins has become a religious fakir with a shriek of his own. Bunny had met Paul Watkins when they were both much younger. He liked Paul who had run away from home because he didn't like the religious discipline imposed by his father. Paul is now a carpenter in the new Watkins field and on his sister Ruth is keeping house for him. The Watkins field is really Bunny's and he has been made very wealthy thru the bringing in of a great well which has come to fourteen derricks, in the meantime war with Germany looms and the men in the oil field under the leadership of an organizer from the Oil Workers' Union, Tom Aston, prepare to strike for an eight-hour day and a raise in wages. Paul becomes a leader of the strikers and a battle is on between the oil workers and the Oil Operators' Association which supplies thugs and gunmen to the strikebreakers. Everything is going Dad during the strike. Bunny is back at school and receives the reports only thru the press. He is somewhat sympathetic to the strikers and doesn't believe the calumnies printed in the press about the strikers.

The German submarines had sunk one American vessel too many, and America was going to war; Congress had been summoned, and the whole country was on tiptoe with belligerency.

The newspapers had pages of despatches from Washington and New York, and from the capitals of Europe; so it was not surprising that the news of the Paradise oil strike got crowded out. Once in a while you saw an inch or two buried in a back page; three strikers had been arrested, charged with beating up a strikebreaker on a dark night; it was declared by the operators that the strikers had attempted to set fires in the district, and that German agents were active among the trouble-makers: some little thing like that, to remind you that three thousand men, and the wives and children of many of them, were waging a desperate struggle with starvation.

Dad of course had daily reports of what was happening, and so Bunny got the news. Little by little the operators had gathered up a supply of men, paying them extra wages, and bringing them to the field. They were seldom skilled men, and there were many accidents; nevertheless, a number of the wells were back on production, and in two or three cases some drilling was being done. But on the Ross tract everything stood idle; and Bunny could see that his father was irritated by this situation. He was losing a fortune every day—and at the same time losing caste with his associates, who thought he was either crack-brained, or a traitor, they could not make out which. Of course, the Big Five were glad enough to see one of the independents cutting his own throat, but they pretended to be indignant, and spread rumors and propaganda against their rival, and magnified the trouble he was causing in the field.

Bunny could see all this, and he got the sting of it from the gossip which Aunt Emma brought home from the clubs, and Bertie from her house-parties and dinner-dances. And then he would think of the men, clinging pitifully to their hope of a better life, and his heart would be torn in half. There was only one thing that could justify Dad's course, and that was for the men to win; they must win, they must! It was the way Bunny felt when he sat and watched a foot-ball game, and cheered himself hoarse for the home-team. He had an impulse to jump into the arena and help the team—but alas, the rules of the game forbade such action!

There had been more trouble with the guards at the Ross tract, and Dad was going up to the field, and Bunny went along for a week-end. It was springtime now, and the hills were green, and the fruit-trees in blossom—oh, beautiful, beautiful! But human beings were miserable, millions of them, and why could they not learn to be happy in such a world? It was springtime all over the country, and yet everybody was preparing to go to war, and form vast armies, and kill other people, also groping for happiness! Everybody said that it had to be; and yet something in Bunny would not cease to dream of a world in which people did not maim and kill one another, and destroy, not merely the happiness of others, but their own.

They came to Paradise and there was the strange sight of idle men, hanging about the streets; and of guards at the entrances to all the oil properties. There was somebody making a speech on a vacant lot, and a crowd listening. It was a great time for all sorts of cranks with things to teach—itinerant evangelists, and patent medicine venders, and Socialist orators—the people heard them all impartially. Bunny found that his reading room was being patronized now, there were men who had read all the magazines, even to the advertisements!

Dad interviewed a committee of his men. It was an impossible situation, they reported, the guards were deliberately making trouble, they were drunk part of the time, and didn't know what they were doing or had done. Therefore the union had put up some more tents, and the men in the bunkhouse were about to move out. Those who had families, and occupied the houses, would try to stay on, if Mr. Ross would permit it; there was no place for the families to go; and they dared not leave the women and children alone in the neighborhood of the guards. Dad interviewed the captain of the latter, and got the information that the men had liquor, of course; how could you expect men to stay in a God-forsaken hole like this without liquor?

Bunny went up to see Ruth and Meelie—the place to get the news! Their girls were hard at work baking, but that didn't occupy their tongues, and from Meelie's there poured a stream of gossip. Dick Nelson was in the hospital with a part of his jaw shot away—that nice young fellow, Bunny remembered him, he had worked on Number Eleven well; he had knocked a guard down for dirty talk to his sister, and two other guards had shot him. And Bob Murphy was in jail, he had been arrested when they were bringing the strike-breakers into the Victor place. And so on, name after name that Bunny knew. Meelie's eyes were wide with horror, and yet you could see that she was young, and this was more excitement than had ever come into her life before. If the devil, with his hoofs and horns and pitchfork and burning smell, had appeared at a meeting of the Tabernacle of the Third Revelation, Meelie would have enjoyed the sensation; and in the same way she enjoyed this crew of whiskey-drinking, cursing ruffians, suddenly vomited out of the city's underworld into her peaceful and pious springtime-decorated village.

This is No Beggarly Religion

Dr. Annie Besant is no piker when it comes to throwing a little religious party. She crowded everything the traffic could bear into her Chicago entertainment and the result is not surprising. Theosophy has taken a great leap forward.

What spiritual soul in quest of supernatural consolation would not jump at a religion that offers an honest-to-god christ as an attraction? Particularly if the christ is as young, handsome and mysterious as Krishnamurti, this intriguing Hindu with the thick luxurious lips and a mouth that suggests a Don Juan. Here is a god with a future. Unless all signs fail he should get far in his profession. It cost money to make him what he is today. But Mrs. Besant had it. And even if thousands of poor slaves—perhaps Hindus that Mrs. Besant likes to free in her spare moments—are sweating their lives away to keep Annie's coffers replenished, sure Krishnamurti may save their souls, provided they are crazy enough to understand theosophy.

Mrs. Besant is no sack-cloth-and-ashes monk when it comes to dressing up for a celebration. This vestal does not neglect to trim herself when about to appeal to her spiritual groom. Among the little things she wore at the theosophist convention are the following ornamenta: a royal swastika, inlaid with rubies, on a gold wire necklace; the vulture, rod and serpent scepter of Egypt wrought into a pin; a crystal gazing ball suspended from a rope of crystal beads; a gold bracelet with a gold heart bangle; a gold and lapis lazuli bracelet with a wrist watch inset; a fleur de lis brooch entangled with necklaces; a seal ring of carved stone covered half of the first finger of her right hand; three other rings of plain gold; slippers embroidered with gold and silver pomegranates.

Mrs. Annie Besant is what you might call, a well dressed woman. Theosophy, once regarded as a bait for the freakiest of freaks with even less money than brains, is now a crozier's length ahead of christian science.

More Treachery in the British Miners' Strike

According to news dispatches, Ramsay MacDonald, leader of the parliamentary labor party, delivered a speech in the house of commons in favor of district agreements to settle the miners' strike.

This would mean the destruction of the union as a national body and the reduction of its influence to a minimum.

The miners have consistently stood out against separate agreements. It is one of the most important demands on their program. The operators have been equally insistent on separate agreements.

It is no surprise to see Ramsay MacDonald line up with the operators. The gentleman who accepted $150,000 from a tory biscuit manufacturer has nothing in common with the working class. MacDonald was not merely speaking for himself when he expressed himself in favor of splitting the miners' union. He spoke for the officialdom of the labor party and for the right wing of the official leadership of the Trade Union Congress.

It is doubtful if history has recorded a more perfect piece of treachery than that perpetrated by the T. U. C. and Labor Party officials against the striking miners. They are shown as the willing agents of British imperialism. When it came to choosing whether they should stand with the working class or with the exploiters they stood with the latter. Those flunkeys have no more use for the workers than the leaders of the liner liberal and tory parties have. In their ambition to become His Majesty's government they need the votes of the working class. That is the only reason they give them lip service in the piping days of peace. But when a labor struggle endangers the empire they show their true colors.

That the British miners have withstood the many blows dealt to them by false friends as well as their historic enemies is one of the marvels of the class struggle. Their steadfast courage, their bulldog tenacity and their self-sacrificing spirit will illuminate the pages of history. But if the future workers' government of Great Britain decides to build a museum of infamy to perpetuate the memory of their most outstanding betrayers, in that hall of shame the most conspicuous positions will be reserved for the plaster images of Ramsay MacDonald, J. H. Thomas and the other leaders who sold out the British miners in 1926.

Calvin Coolidge has ordered federal employes to tip porters, waitresses and taxi drivers wisely and not too well. It should not be forgotten that Cal was a successful lawyer by being a darned good bill collector.

It is not surprising that Mrs. Coolidge took a fancy to the president when she first met him. The first lady of the land, by divine right of the House of Morgan, once was a teacher in a deaf and dumb school. Perhaps she mistook Cal for her favorite pupil.

Portugal may not cut a big figure in the league of nations, but some of her leading citizens have knocked Wall Street for a row of Latvian lats. A $14,000,000 swindle with a political motive is nothing to be sneezed at even in Wall Street.

It now remains for Jack Peabody to state that he put Frank Farrington on his payroll at $25,000 a year salary because of "auld lang syne."

Former War Secretary Wants Debts Cancelled

Cleveland, O., Aug. 31.—Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War under Woodrow Wilson, was on record today in favor of American cancellation of foreign war debts and partial relief of German's burden.

In an article appearing in the house organ of a Cleveland bank, Baker urged such action to overcome the turbulent economic conditions thruout Europe.

Arbitration Not For N. Y. Movie Operators

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—Motion picture operators of New York, Local No. 306, refuse to put their demands to arbitration in the deadlock between them and the Motion Picture Theater Owners' Chamber of Commerce. The employers' organization is composed of smaller houses. The union has already settled with the big firms, gaining 10 per cent wage increases.

Life and Work in the Soviet Union

7. The Trade Unions and Voluntary Societies.
By ANISE.

THE Communist Party makes no secret of the fact that it controls and "leads" not only the Soviet government, but the trade unions, the co-operatives and the host of voluntary organizations that have sprung up since the revolution. Running a state is only part of the party's job; the Soviet state, by itself, is not supposed to produce socialism. That is the job of the Communist Party, using the state, the unions, the co-operatives, the voluntary organizations as instruments for the purpose.

Trade union membership has risen in the past year and a half from five and a half million workers to seven million seven hundred thousand. How do the Communists control this vast membership, of whom they form only 8 per cent? In every union, every shop committee, the Communists form their "fraction," which always acts together for its program. This is done quite openly and simply: it is no more considered by the rest of the workers than the students in an American university object when the athletic association plans and puts thru some athletic program with the tacit support or even the cordial co-operation of the less athletic students. The Communist program is not regarded as one program set over against another program; it is rather the joint program of the working class, formed by all the workers who are energetic enough and intelligent enough to care about forming it, and who enter the Communist Party for that purpose.

Communists Active Everywhere.

WORKING together in factory trade union meetings, the local Communists in every plant organize classes, clubs, special voluntary organizations. The Communists fix the general policy of these organizations and then invite the non-partisans as members. There are "Friends of Children" (the helpless waifs), "MOPR," for the relief of political prisoners abroad; "Down with Illiteracy Society," "Friends of Aviation," as well as many physical culture societies. Over ten million have joined these organizations in the past two years. All of them, while the membership is largely non-Communist, were initiated by the Communists and started by them along a predetermined line.

"Production conferences" is another recent development, organized on the initiative of this party in factory, and composed of workers and members of the technical staff. These conferences aim to increase production by studying all the reasons for low production and by making suggestions in any and all fields. . . . Some 34,000 workers in the Moscow district alone are in such organizations. . . . Cultural "big brother" committees are also instituted in factories, where the workers agree to interest themselves in improving the life of a certain village or township. These are all voluntary committees, and there are now a million persons working on such committees and thus drawn into social work. Incomplete returns from twelve provinces show that such cultural assisting committees have built 678 reading huts, opened 131 schools, 6 motion picture halls, 20 traveling motion picture shows, have given 17 tractors, organized 123 experimental farm plots, 75 co-operatives, besides introducing all sorts of new culture into hundreds of villages, from medical work to electrification.

Another special organization initiated by the party, but composed largely of non-party members, is the group of "delegates" or women delegates. This began as a body representing the women of industry, in proportions of one to every thirty or forty women. Now there is one delegate elected to every ten women in industry. They are the more energetic and intelligent of the women and thru them the party reaches the great mass of unskilled women workers, drawing them gradually into participation in union work, government work, finally into party work. As a result of this program, recent elections showed 21 per cent of women in the city soviets.

How the Party Leads in Rural Districts.

RURAL districts, where the party organization is still extremely small, are none the less directly influenced and by the party thru the co-operatives and the soviet organisations. In a village soviets the proportion of Communists, never large, has been cut in half by the past elections and is now only 6 per cent of the total membership in village soviets, 18 per cent in township soviets, and 47 per cent in township executive committees. Part of this was due to the deliberate program of the Communists themselves to draw more non-party peasants into participation in government work. None the less, the actual figures came as something of a shock and were spoken of freely at the party congress as showing the "failure to group the masses of poorer and middle peasants around local party groups." Investigations and "cleaning" of rural party organizations is now under way.

Inner Party Democracy.

At every party "discussion" claims are made by the group which fails to carry its points that the party is run by a small group at the center dictating everything. To some extent this is true in every large organization. The party officially answers this charge by stating that inner party democracy consists:

1. In the fact that all leading organs from the central committee down to the factory committees are elected, and that elected leaders are responsible to the party in the person of central committee and local organizations.

2. In the fact that all members of the party are drawn actively, as far as possible, into the working life of the party, and that all measures taken by the center are first widely discussed in mass organisations.

3. The fact that the framework of party leadership is systematically being widened.

The directing organ of the Communist Party is the central committee, composed now of 63 members and 42 alternates and holding sessions every two or three months. This body elects a political bureau of nine members and five alternates, which directs all matters of political policy, and an organization bureau of eleven members and five alternates, which decides on organisational matters. Under these, five secretaries (the chief of whom, of course, is Stalin) carry on the party's daily work.

Whatever freedom and "democracy" may exist in the preliminary elections and discussions, which once a decision is reached it is binding without further discussion on all members, who are expected to observe "iron discipline and complete unity and Communist firmness" in carrying it out, thru government apparatus, or trade union channels, or in co-operatives or voluntary social organisations, wherever they may be assigned to work.

MATTHEW WOLL FUMES AGAINST BORAH, RUSSIA

Bitter Condemnation of Passaic Action

(Special to The Daily Worker)

Montreal, Aug. 31.—Matthew Woll, a vice-president of the American Federation of Labor and member of its Executive Council in session here, makes a bitter attack on Senator Borah for his interest in the Passaic strike of textile workers.

The A. F. L. officialdom had followed a policy of non-recognition of the strike, and had rebuked the strikers for appealing to the Council for aid or organizational support without first joining the United Textile Workers Union.

Hates Everything Progressive

A committee headed by Jett Lauck, railroad labor economist, with the participation and help of Senator Borah, succeeded in persuading the U. T. W. to admit the 16,000 militants on strike in Passaic. Up until that time the strike had been supported by progressive labor on a voluntary basis, and especially by Communists, both in America and abroad.

Woll in his statement manages to condemn Jett Lauck, Borah and the Russian government all in one breath. After stating that the Lauck committee could not approach the Executive Council, with any recognition in this strike only the United Textile Workers, Woll continues:

"Labor has no reason to look upon the activity of Senator Borah as having been friendly to the workers of America. To the contrary, his consistent efforts to have the United States recognize Soviet Russia against the constant protest of the American Federation of Labor clearly indicates that labor and Senator Borah are not in accord either in matters political, economic, domestic or international.

At the present time the United Textile Workers are actually conducting the strike as a result of the work of, among others, Senator Borah. At the same time that Borah and Lauck were trying to bring about this result, the American Federationist, organ of the Executive Council, was publishing large advertisements of the Botany Mills, the largest employer concerned in the Passaic strike.

This is not the first time that Borah and Woll have clashed. During the consideration two years ago of a Senatorial committee headed by Borah of the reasons for and against recognition of Russia by the United States, Woll became very angry when alleged evidence he wanted to present against the Russian government was rejected by the committee as unreliable.

Cutting their way thru a rear door of a drug store postal substation here today, robbers carried out 12 cases of bonded whiskey, 100 gallons of wine, $150 in stamps and $250 in cash. The safe was removed from the postal station and carried to an adjoining building, where it was blown open.

A Correction by Comrade Losovsky

The above letter from Comrade Losovsky is made necessary not thru any fault of our own but by reason of the stoppage of our English exchanges during and for some time after the British general strike.

We received no copy of Lansbury's Weekly in which the statement of Swales, Hicks and Tillet appeared and we received the copy of the Sunday Worker containing a statement by Purcell and Hicks we assumed, carelessly perhaps, that this was the statement referred to.

We think it unnecessary to say that we were in entire agreement with the estimate of the role of the center group in the British trade union movement made by Comrade Losovsky, even to the extent of believing that some of the same sharp criticism should have been leveled at them before their weak and cowardly position became quite so apparent.

As a matter of fact we went to a good deal of trouble to do what we thought was attracting attention to Comrade Losovsky's article and far from desiring to create an "extremely ambiguous situation," we are trying to give all possible information on the subject at issue.

The criticism contained in the editorial from the Sunday Worker which we published in connection with the article certainly does not tend to lighten the burden on Hicks and Purcell. (Editors Note).

EDITOR, The DAILY WORKER,
Chicago, U. S. A.

Dear Comrade:—

On July 3rd you reprinted my article entitled, "Who Needs These Declarations?" in which I exposed the maneuver of the so-called "left wing" leaders of the general council, who were attempting to screen their past treachery and prepare for future betrayals by means of equivocal statements in the press. In the course of this article I incidentally pointed out, in friendly fashion, that our very valuable comrades of the Sunday Worker were unconsciously aiding the misleaders by "welcoming" their hypocritical statements.

ALLOW me to point out to you that you are entirely in error in saying that my article refers to the Sunday Worker of June 13th. My reference was (as stated in the article) first to a public statement by Swales, Hicks, and Tillet published in Lansbury's Weekly (of May 22). The comment of the Sunday Worker which I rightly criticised was contained in their issue of May 23, (not the article of three weeks later which you quoted), which said: "We welcome the statement issued by Swales, Hicks, and Tillet the other day, just as we do the other declarations in today's Sunday Worker.

NOW it is true that three weeks later our good comrades on the Sunday Worker had finally learned the lesson which I was trying to point out in May, in my article, namely that Hicks & Co. were in a united front with Thomas against the miners. That is good, but it is not good that the knowledge of these facts which it is your duty to transmit to the readers of The DAILY WORKER should be confused by your erroneous editorial note, which objectively serves to divert the attention of the readers from the main subject, which is examination of the treacherous role being played by the so-called "left" leaders, and fix it instead upon the question of whether the Sunday Worker was correctly quoted or not.

EVEN at the moment when you were writing that editorial note, the "left" leaders were committing new treason. They had tricked Cook into a new "united front" with them, on the basis of silencing criticism and "recriminations." Surely for those who carry the burden of guilt such as the members of the general council, this was a bargain at any price; but they were not content. Having silenced Cook for the moment, they violated their own side of the pledge, by publishing thru Bromley (another "left") their complete official attack upon the miners . . . an act taken full advantage of by the mineowners and government. Can criticism of such low betrayal be too sharp or too prompt?

In view of the extremely ambiguous situation created by your editorial note and method of handling my article, I must ask you to publish this letter in The DAILY WORKER.

With Communist Greetings,
General Secretary,
Red Internationael of Labor Unions.

We will send sample copies of The DAILY WORKER to your friends—send us name and address.

LABOR PARTY RIGHT WING SPLITS UNION

Organize Dual Trades Council at Battersea

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BATTERSEA, England, Aug. 31.—A dual Trades Labor Council has been set up here and is engaging in a vicious campaign to destroy the official council. This new body has the blessings of Eccleston Square, that is the officialdom of the labor party.

The general opinion amongst active workers in the labor movement at Battersea is that this dual council is but another attempt on the part of the leaders of the labor party to split the movement rather than let it be controlled by Communists.

Comrade Sklolvsala has the unquestionable support of the official council, and has been returned as a Communist member of parliament from this constituency.

This has been a thorn in the side of the labor party leaders for some time, hence their endorsement of the dual council.

CHAPTER II.

THE STRUGGLE OVER OUR GENEALOGICAL TREE.

Our Ape-Relatives and the Vertebrate-Stem.

Since the great Lamarck established the idea of the vertebrate at the beginning of the nineteenth century (1801) and this Parisian colleague, Curier, shortly afterwards recognised the vertebrates as one of his four chief animal groups, the natural unity of this advanced section of the animal world has not been contested. In all the vertebrates, from the lowest fishes and amphibians up to the apes and man, we have the same type of structure, the same characteristic disposition and relations of the chief organs; and they differ materially from the corresponding features in all other animals. The mysterious affinities of the vertebrates induced Goethe, 140 years ago, long before Curier, to make prolonged and laborious studies in their comparative anatomy at Jena and Weimar. Just as he had, in his "Metamorphosis of Plants," established the unity of organization by means of the leaf as the common primitive organ, he, in the metamorphosis of the vertebrates, found this common element in the vertebral theory of the skull. And when Curier established comparative anatomy as an independent science this branch of biology was developed to such an extent by the classic research of Johannes Muller, Carl Gegenbaur, Richard Owen, Thos. Huxley, and many other morphologists, that Darwinism found its most powerful weapons in this arsenal. The striking differences of external form and internal structure that we find in the fishes, amphibians, reptiles, birds, and mammals, are due to adaptation to the various uses of their organs and their environments. On the other hand, the astonishing agreement in their typical character, that persists in spite of their differences, is due to inheritance from common ancestors.

The evidence thus afforded by comparative anatomy is so recent that anyone who goes imperfectly and attentively thru a collection of skeletons can convince himself at once of the morphological unity of the vertebrate stem. The evolutionary evidence of comparative ontogeny, or embryology, is less easy to grasp and less accessible, but not less important. It came to light at a much later date, and its extreme value was only made clear, by means of the biogenetic law, some forty years ago. It shows that every vertebrate, like every other animal, develops from a single cell, but that the course of its embryonic development is peculiar, and characterised by embryonic forms that are not found in the invertebrates. We find in them especially the chordula, or chordalarva, a very simple worm-shaped embryonic form, without limbs, head, or higher sense-organs; the body consists merely of six very simple primitive tissues. From these we have developed steadily the hundreds of different bones, muscles, and other organs that we afterwards distinguish in the mature vertebrate. The remarkable and very complex course of this embryonic development is essentially the same in man and the ape, and in the amphibians and fishes. We see in it, in accordance with the biogenetic law, a new and important witness to the common descent of all vertebrates from a single primitive form, the chordaea.

THAT there is not always something in a name was again proven when an auditing commission appointed by the Chicago chamber of commerce went over the books of the Cook county sanitary district and found everything but a financially hygienic situation. If names mean anything at all, the sanitary commission has something to do with sewage and public health. But the auditors found that everything was a sideline with the sanitary boys, except padding the payroll with deserving ward heelers and legal luminaries who find loopholes in the law for the political crooks to escape thru.

Cuba is a perplexing problem he admits in a rather puzzled manner. Despite the Platt amendment Cuban politicians succeed in lining their pockets from the public till and Mr. Kittredge shudders to think of what those generous souls would do but for the purifying influence of American interference. PROFESSOR Ripley of Harvard threw a bombshell into Wall Street last week when an article written by the Harvard economist came to the attention of the nation's financial capital. Ripley demanded that more light be thrown on corporations and their condition for the better protection of small investors who are usually decoyed by the doctored reports of stock selling agencies and insiders who stand to make profit on fluctuations in stock. The professor might as well save his ink. The corporations will do pretty much as they please as long as democrats and republicans run the political machine for them. Let's hope the professor got well paid for the article.

SHOOT DOWN WORKERS IN MILL STRIKE

Open Shop Uses Gas, Guns and Clubs

BULLETIN

MANVILLE, R. I., Sept. 1.—With national guard soldiers, armed with rifles, barring the public highway bridge to the Manville-Jenckes mill, with barbed wire entanglements thrown up and with leaders of the 1,700 textile strikers protesting that they will demand redress for the firing by state troopers and deputy sheriffs in which 14 persons were injured, the strike situation today was at fever heat.

The protest was carried to the governor of the state who announced that he had not sanctioned the calling out of the troops but was investigating the battle at the bridges.

Crowds gathered near the barred entanglements today and were evidently in an angry mood over the closing of a public highway.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MANVILLE, R. I., Sept. 1.—Riot guns, revolvers and tear gas bombs were used by state police and deputy sheriffs against strikers of the Manville-Jenckes cotton mill, with the result that five strikers were seriously wounded, a boy bystander's face torn by a revolver bullet and one deputy and one state policemen were wounded by reckless shooting of the guns of their own men.

An Open Shop Attack.

The strike began on August 18, when the company started an open shop campaign and lengthened the hours. It brought in non-union loom fixers to work at the mill in piece of restoring union men it had laid off. The workers struck, being joined by the workers in the Globe mill at Woonsocket and the Social mill, making some 3,000 strikers in all.

On Sunday night the strikers began to picket the mill when scabs were learned to be arriving, brought in with beds and stoves and quartered in the mill. A force of forty state constabulary and deputy sheriffs had been posted at the head of the Blackstone river bridge to guard the plant, the the bridge is public property.

Provoke Reprisal.

The brutal behavior of the police and the appearance of scabs in the mill windows resulted in a rain of stones. The mill superintendent, A. Sweet, advanced on the crowd of strikers, waving a revolver and threatening to shoot. The crowd, thus provoked, closed in on him and gave him a severe beating. The police then used their clubs with increased brutality.

The trouble increased by this. Last night the crowd at the bridge had grown to nearly 1,500. When a man tried to cross the bridge a state policeman knocked him down with a club. The crowd charged, but was met with tear gas bombs and a brutal clubbing.

Shoot Workers Down.

Then when Colonel E. S. J. Chaffe of the state police withdrew them away from the bridge the crowd thought that crossing it was allowed, but when they advanced they were suddenly and without warning fired upon by police riot guns and revolvers. Five strikers and sympathizers went down, one very seriously wounded.

The wanton nature of the shooting is seen in the fact that even after this the police fired another volley without warning, and later on still another. Colonel Chaffe had meantime called for troops, and soon after midnight a national guard detachment of 35 arrived on the scene in motor trucks.

Union Charges Provocation.

Strike leaders make the direct accusation that Colonel Chaffe's police incited and provoked the crowd by brutal attacks and fired without warning. One of the bystanders, Aram Auclair, a boy of 18 and nephew of the mayor of Woonsocket, was struck in the jaw by a stray police bullet.

OUSTED MINERS OPEN FIGHT FOR REINSTATEMENT

Farrington Will Ignore Board Decree is Report

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Sept. 1. — On the heels of Frank Farrington's suspension from the presidency of the Illinois Miners' Union for having signed a contract with the Peabody Coal company at a salary of $25,000 a year, a movement has developed, having for its object the reinstatement of those members who were expelled from the union by Farrington because of their radical views and their refusal to allow the operators to break contracts with the union et will.

Local unions will pass resolutions demanding the reinstatement of the ousted officials. Farrington's fall has put new spirit into the progressive miners who had their best efforts so often frustrated by the machinations of Farrington and his corrupt machine.

Miners To Act Quickly.

With Farrington now exposed to the whole membership as a paid agent of the Peabody Coal company, the local unions are expected to act quickly without fear of having their charters lifted on the slightest pretext. It is not considered likely that the Fishwick-Nesbit crowd will be in a hurry to ape the methods of boss Farrington, this side of the elections.

To Defy Decision.

According to reports in circulation here Farrington has notified the district office that he has no intention of permitting the executive board or Lewis to force his resignation. If true, this is unpleasant news for Farrington's closest cronies who hoped he would take his medicine and say nothing. Those elements are so closely tied up with the suspended president and their political hands are so soiled with corruption that they dare not oppose Farrington and so openly espouse his cause would be to commit political suicide. They now sit be-

The Shady Record of Frank Farrington

THE following sketch of Frank Farrington's career in the United Mine Workers of America is a summary of a series of articles that appeared in THE DAILY WORKER in October 1924, under the title, "On a Labor Fekar's Trail." Farrington's latest exploit in accepting a $25,000 a year salary from the Peabody Coal company, while still president of the Illinois Miners' Union, makes it impossible for even his closest friends to condone his action. He now stands suspended from office by action of the district executive board.

John L. Lewis and his cronies and the bureaucracy of the Illinois Miners' Union are equally responsible with Farrington for the shady actions of the past years committed under Farrington's leadership in Illinois. The DAILY WORKER does not confine itself to publishing facts unpalatable to the reactionaries and sometimes considered scandalous by the liberals. It goes further and urges the workers to take action, get rid of the reactionaries by organizing their forces and replacing them with leaders who will serve the workers and not the employers. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty" and the rank and file must be always on guard, because it often happens that the radical of today is the reactionary of tomorrow. The interests of an individual leader can be harmonized with the interests of those he is elected to fight, but the interests of the masses can never be in common with their exploiters. Rank and file activity, intelligently directed is the only safeguard of honest leadership.

ARTICLE I

A VETERAN member of the Illinois Miners' Union once informed the writer that "all the coal Frank Farrington ever dug would not keep a gas heater from freezing to death." The speaker may have used poetic license in order to emphasize that Farrington's relations with the miners of Illinois have mostly been as a bleeder of union funds and a willing ally of the coal operators in extracting as much profit as he possibly could out of the bone and sinew of the coal diggers, but it is true that his life as a coal digger was very short.

The purpose of the following sketch of Farrington's career is to expose him to the members of the Illinois Miners' Union in his true colors so that they may have the necessary evidence at their disposal for forming an opinion as to his real character when they cast their ballots in the approaching election for the officers of District 12, for the next two years. So long as Farrington and his gang remain at the head of District 12, just so long will it be impossible for the union to make any progress or function in the interests of its members. The following brief sketch will show that Farrington started in to feather his own nest since he first joined the union and that he grew wealthy by forming a united front with the coal operators against the coal diggers.

Farrington first made his acquaintance with coal mining in Streator, Illinois. After considerable "ups and downs" he got to the secretary of Local Union 600, but in a very short time he had trouble with the union over his carelessness in handling the funds. This incident did not stagger his ambition, and shortly afterwards, we find him at a sub-district convention at LaSalle, where he figured in the proceedings by attacking the sub-district president for squandering the funds, because the official in question charged one dollar a day for hotel expense.

In 1909 Farrington ran for president of the Illinois Miners' Union and was defeated. His friend, John H. Walker, ran for international president against T. L. Lewis, and met the same fate. The two defeated candidates did the next best thing under the circumstances. Walker got a job for Farrington on the payroll of the Illinois State Federation of Labor while Walker was placed at the pap of the Illinois Miners' Union.

It was about this time that Farrington first blossomed out as a capitalist politician. A certain Judge Hadley

WOMEN OF BRITISH COAL STRIKE ARRIVE IN MOSCOW GETTING BIG OVATION FROM SOVIET WORKERS

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., Sept. 1.—The first group of the British miners' delegation, including the miners' wives, among these the wife of A. J. Cook, secretary of the Miners' Federation, arrived here today, and were greeted by a tremendous demonstration for the unity of the English and the Russian labor movement and of sympathy of the toiling masses of the Soviet Union for the heroic struggle of the British miners.

Annie Cook, speaking to the great crowds, declared: "We came to thank the Russian workers for their help. A million women and two million children require immediate aid. Many families are living merely on bread. Several cases of the death of mothers from exhaustion have been registered in a number of districts. Particularly is the need now felt because of the coming of autumn and the rigors of winter."

Andreyev Urges Greater Support

Chairman Andreyev of the Soviet Labor Union delegation to the Anglo-Russian committee, reported in the presence of the British miners' delegation, to the Central Council of the Labor Unions of the U. S. S. R., on the course of the conference of the committee.

Andreyev pointed out that the Soviet delegation suggested concrete steps to increase the material support of the miners on the part of the Anglo-Russian committee and the General Council as well also that the Soviet delegation had introduced measures against the importation of fuel into England.

The Central Council unanimously approved the action of the Soviet delegation, and further adopted a resolution entrusting its delegates to the forthcoming congress of the British trade unions to declare decisively that the labor unions of the Soviet Union are ready to give the utmost further material support to the heroic struggle of the British miners.

U. S. Starts Anti-Militant Labor.

At the same time the Central Council, in an appeal to the labor unions of the U. S. S. R., invites them to aid the British miners by levying a one per cent assessment upon the salary of all members. Simultaneously, the Central Council is notifying the Red International of Labor Unions that it offers to conduct a campaign for a similar levy among all organizations affiliated to the Red International.

Mexican Labor Favors Drastic Measures

WHITE PINE CAMP, N. Y., Sept. 1. The Knights of Columbus today placed their appeal for the use of force against the Calles administration before President Coolidge.

James A. Flaherty, Supreme Knight, accompanied by all of the supreme officers, made the request. He roundly condemned the Calles regime in Mexico, and even went back as far as the Carranza administration in his complaint.

Flaherty denied that the Knights of Columbus sought armed intervention. "We called attention to the existence of the embargo on the shipment of arms into Mexico.

"We did ask that this government give neither support, sympathy nor aid to the Calles regime."

Mexico City, Sept. 1.—Counter-memorial to the petition of the Catholics is to be presented to congress by radical labor elements. This will ask that the existing religious regulations be made more drastic. The sponsors of the memorial declare that it already has two million signatures, including trade unionists, agrarians, tradesmen and others.

Secretary's Son in Altercation.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1.—Philander C. Knox, son of the late secretary of state, was recovering in Casualty hospital today from a severed artery suffered, according to the police report, in an altercation with his wife, Mrs. Josephine Poole Knox.

Thieves Relieve Bank of $7,000.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Sept. 1.—Four armed bandits held up and robbed the Perry Jefferson branch of the Liberty Bank here today of between $6,000 and $7,000 and escaped in an automobile.

U. S. HINTS AT WILLINGNESS TO TALK TO SOVIET

Department Spokesman Breaks Silence

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1.—Breaking the long silence of the state department on the question of Russian relations, a spokesman of the department today said that the administration is perfectly willing to discuss with the Soviet Union the question of Russian debts to this country both public and private.

Observers take this to be a very significant departure, or at least a preparation for one, in the attitude of the state department towards the Russian question. Powerful interests have of late declared themselves in favor of resuming trade relations with the Soviet Union and it is recalled that only last week the New York Journal of Commerce issued a special supplement urging a resumption of relations with the Soviet Union.

Much Caution.

The department spokesmen however, are very cautious. They deny that a willingness to talk about debts implies a deviation from the policy of the state department towards Russia laid down in 1923. But for the past three years, it has been noted that even a consideration of the debts has not been mentioned by the department, which put its attitude on the basis of a fundamental disagreement, economically and politically with the Soviet regime.

Aside from the agitation for a resumption of trade in which the leading advocates are large business firms now doing a profitable business with the Soviet Union, the state department has been put more or less to the necessity of making some sort of official pronouncement in order to live up to the repeated declarations of the Soviet foreign office on the latter's willingness to undertake a consideration of the debts between the two countries. Spokesmen for the Soviet Union have been quoted as saying that all that is necessary for a beginning of the negotiations is for the United States to allow a Russian debt commission to come to this country to go into the question of debt claims, both public and private, with representatives of the United States.

U. S. Debt Claims.

According to the state department the public debt is some $20,000,000 representing principle and accrued interest advanced to the Kerensky government. Private claims being pressed by such firms as the International Harvester Co., Standard Oil and the Singer Sewing Machine Co. amount roughly to about $100,000,000. In addition to this the National City Bank of New York and J. P. Morgan and Co. have claims of $50,000,000 in old imperial bonds outstanding in this country.

Soviet Counter Claims.

The Soviet Union has expressed a willingness to talk the settlement of these debts over, reserving of course the right to press counter-claims, based doubtless on the invasion of Russia by American troops in the days following the revolution.

UNKNOWN SAILOR HERO OF SOVIET RIVER DISASTER

150 Reported Drowned in Boat Collision

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LENINGRAD, Sept. 1. — An unknown sailor is acclaimed today as the hero of the Bureveatnik disaster, when some 150 persons were drowned as the Bureveatnik, a Soviet passenger ship, sank in the Morskoi Canal on Sunday night after colliding with a pier in an effort to avoid a collision with the German steamer Greta.

Turned Off Steam.

This unknown sailor, a member of the crew of the battleship Murat and a passenger on the Bureveatnik, returning to his station at Kronstadt from a holiday, ran into the boiler rooms as soon as he realized the Bureveatnik was sinking and opened the steam cocks. His action is believed to have prevented an explosion and an even worse disaster. He was unable to regain the decks, however, and was drowned.

Most of them who lost their lives are believed to have been trapped below decks, as only nineteen bodies have thus far been recovered. A rigid inquiry into the causes of the disaster and the possible lack of life-saving apparatus on a ship carrying 400 passengers and forty crew is under way.

Scene of Panic.

The sinking of the vessel was accompanied by scenes of wild panic, and it is estimated that at least forty women were among those who met death by drowning.

Many passengers were thrown into the water and others jumped, saving their lives by clinging to the stone piling of the pier against which the ship smashed.

Assistance Futile.

The crew of the German steamer Greta lowered a lifeboat, but it was almost immediately swamped by frantic persons who insisted upon clinging to it and trying to save their lives. When the boat was swamped those who had already been picked up were thrown into the water and drowned.

Wants Prisoners Paid; N. Y. Federation Will Bring in Independents

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., Sept. 1.— Extension of workmen's compensation to include injuries of state institutions permanently injured by their employment was favored by the New York state federation of labor convention. Compensation should be paid upon the prisoners' release, the convention recommended.

John Sullivan, reported as president of the federation by the convention, declared that the organization would attempt to bring into the American Federation of Labor ranks as many of the independent unions in New York as possible. He denounced radical organizations. He made no mention of the A. F. of L. investigation of the fur union, as he is a member of the committee appointed to do the work.

CALGARY, Alta., Sept. 1. — Already 700 horses have been purchased for shipment to the Soviet Union in Canada, I. D. Burns, a local auctioneer, and Dr. Sinclair, who represents the dominion government as veterinarian, are buying horses in Alberta for shipment to Leningrad.

The Soviet government intends to purchase 1,000 horses in Canada this year. The horses weigh from 1,000 to 1,200 pounds. They are too light for Alberta demands, but are just the thing needed by the Russian farmers. The dominion government guarantees payment.

AN OPEN LETTER BY NEGRO LEADER ON THE FIFTEENTH AMENDMENT TO THE NEW YORK HERALD-TRIBUNE

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.— William Pickens, field secretary National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, in the following open letter to the New York Herald-Tribune shows conclusively that statements made by one Alexander Lanier declaring that Negro voters are not discriminated against are absurd pointing out cases of discrimination in various parts of the country:

To the Editors of the New York Herald-Tribune.

The letter from Alexander Sidney Lanier of Washington, D. C., in the issue of August 8 is hopelessly wrong in its implications that there is no discrimination against the Negro as a voter in the South. But we are not going to deal with the mere implications, we are going to challenge the absolute truth of two of his statements.

Fifteenth Amendment.

First, he denies emphatically that the Fifteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution authorizes the overthrow, "without regard to race, color or previous condition of servitude," the right to vote." And to prove that he does not, he quotes from the amendment: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude."

That does not seem to Mr. Lanier to guarantee to anybody the "right to vote," since it does not make voting necessary at all, but simply guarantees against race discrimination if and when there is voting. But Mr. Lanier forgets that this provision must be taken together with that earlier provision of the same constitution which says: "The United States shall guarantee to every state in this union a republican form of government."

Against Race Discrimination.

Now everybody knows that no republican form of government can exist without voting, however restricted this voting may be, and the Fifteenth Amendment guarantees to every man that this restriction shall not be against his race. In brief, the Fifteenth Amendment only guarantees against race discrimination where voting is allowed at all, and artfully in spite of the original constitution, by guaranteeing a republican form of government, makes voting necessary. States may "restrict but cannot altogether drop popular suffrage and the restriction cannot be against race. Hence the guarantee. If an idiot or an ignoramus is denied the right to vote on account of his idiocy or ignorance, it still this idiot or ignoramus is guaranteed the right to vote "without regard to race."

In the same letter Mr. Lanier also says with emphasis: "At present there is absolutely nothing in the constitutions or laws of any southern state that infringes or in any way violates this amendment, the ignorant and prejudiced charges that are constantly being made to the contrary notwithstanding."

A Good Example.

This statement is so absolute, universal and unconditional that to refute it will require only one example to the contrary. Here it is, from the latest revised constitution of Texas: "In no event shall any Negro be eligible to participate in a democratic party primary election held in the state of Texas; and should a Negro vote in a democratic primary election, such ballot shall be void and election officials are herein directed to throw out such ballot and not count the same."

This is from the constitution of Texas. We will not stop to quote on the laws based on this constitutional discrimination. In this case a swallow makes a summer.

And how one word as to the implication that there is no discrimination. Even in Southern states where letter of the law avoids a plain course of discrimination, so as to avoid technical conflict with the Fifteenth Amendment, the law is made with the plain intention, as the words of the lawmakers show, to enable the administration of the law to discriminate against Negroes. For example, a law will require educational "fitness" of candidates for registration, and then authorize only white registrars to judge of the Negro's "fitness." Such tricks are too numerous to mention here, but we would offer to debate them thereby with Mr. Lanier or anybody else.

NAMES SEVENTEENTH CHILD IN HONOR OF TWO FAMOUS LEADERS

CANONSBURG, Pa., Sept. 1. — Andy Harmison, noted militant miner of Canonsburg, has named his seventeenth child, a boy, William Z. Foster Alexander Howat Harmison, in honor of these two famous leaders. Andy swears that if the boy lives up, even a little bit, to the character of those for whom he is named, Andy will be able to die in peace.

Andy showed two years ago that he is a man of courage to stand by his convictions. When he was applying for citizenship papers the ku klux klan framed up the judge to ask Harmison what he thought of Lenin, Trotsky and the Russian revolution.

"Lenin! Trotsky! Two of the most brilliant men that ever lived!" said Andy. "And the Russian revolution? Good for the Russians! The sooner we have one here the soonar we workers will get what is coming to us." Andy didn't get his papers.

One Killed, Score Are Hurt in Suburban Crash

One man was killed, another was probably fatally injured and nearly a score of passengers were seriously hurt early today when a crowded Rock Island suburban train crashed headon into a Pennsylvania freight train near Beverly Hills station.

The dead man was John Risberg, fireman of the Rock Island train. Several passengers were so seriously injured their recovery is doubtful. All of them are residents of Chicago and suburbs.

ALL MATERIAL PREPARED FOR LANDIS SCABS

Extension of Strike May Circumvent Them

Piles of building materials, floor tile, pipe fittings, electric conduit tubes, etc., were being accumulated on the ground level of the De Wolf building at 100 West Monroe street Tuesday. This job was struck on Aug. 23 by the Chicago Building Trades Council because of the use of non-union workers in the same trade with union men.

At the same time the interior building material was being stored on this job, the Citizens' Committee for the Enforcement of the Landis Award was issuing a statement that it had coming from Milwaukee, Detroit and New York fifty-three iron workers, six steamfitters and a number of electricians as well as other mechanics to be used in breaking the strike here and also on the Jewelers' building, from which union men were called last Saturday by the council for the same reason.

The imported strike breakers will find several weeks' material stacked in the building in which they are expected to work and may put in all the overtime their scabby frames can stand without fear of getting ahead of the job.

Laborers on the De Wolf building, also strike breakers during a moment when the guards provided by the Citizens' Committee had assembled in another corner to listen to a private joke, told a representative of The DAILY WORKER that there were about forty men in their trade at work there and that they were getting 80 cents per hour, without bonus. They claimed they did not like the work but were forced into it by untoward circumstances, etc., the usual scabby line of talk.

Union bricklayers are still at work on the walls, now up to the eighth floor.

Extend the Strike!

The Chicago Building Trades Council was in session Tuesday to decide whether or not to strike fifteen or twenty more Landis award jobs on the grounds that they are using non-union workers in 19 trades where ably contracts have been made. The argument for striking these buildings has always been that increasing the size of the strike will be the best way to prevent the Citizens' Committee from bringing in enough scabs to finish the buildings on which construction has already been stopped.

Armour Tries Bonus System to Speed Up Packing House Labor

Having given the old age pension system a black eye as an incentive to employes to work hard at lower than market wages, Armour & Co. are trying another bonus scheme with out any of the philanthropic trimmings that made the morning-after so bitter to the workers. The packer's scheme is for employes that stand speeding up better than the rest and giving them, 7,000 in number, an average bonus of about $70 for a 6-month period.

"There is nothing of philanthropy or charity in our plan," an Armour official is quoted. "We have found that cash rewards encourage faster and better production. It simply is a question of substituting a bulge in the pocketbook for the former pat on the back."

The memorial pat on the back was the elaborate old age pension of Morris & Co., the packing concern absorbed by Armour in 1925. When the absorption was over the employes found that there was no more pension, Armour had absorbed everything except that obligation.

McAndrew Claims Right to Make Teachers Work On Day and Night Shift

William McAndrew, superintendent of schools in Chicago is fighting the attempt of the administration committee of the school board to prevent him from assigning double duty to certain school teachers. The board seeks to prevent the appointment of day school teachers to teach also in night schools, and McAndrew insists on technical grounds that he has the right to do this.

Superintendent McAndrew has been very active in introducing all manner of time clock methods, plans of every kind and other schemes for decreasing the teaching force in Chicago while piling extra work on the individual instructors.

All Unorganized Farmers Stand in Great Need of Being Thoroly Organized

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BLOOMVILLE, Wis. (By Mail).— The nightshirted ku kluger, who was once a power hereabouts, has disappeared. The klansmen, in all their regalia, at one time held their great open air initiations here, as in other parts of the state and nation. Crowds of curiosity seekers came to witness the performance.

One of these initiations was given added zest by an event not on the regular program. This is a country where dynamiting stumps out of existence is one of the major duties of the farmer, just as the New England farmer picks rocks before he can raise his crops. At one of the klan ceremonies several farmer boys placed huge charges of dynamite under a great pine stump, blowing it into the sky along with masses of stone and dirt.

Farmers hereabouts call it "a miracle" that no one was killed or injured. It is one of the tales that is repeated about the ku klux klan, as if that organization were something of the faded past.

When the Nonpartisan League was at the height of its power in North Dakota it also swept into this state. It won many farmers in this section to its cause. They sent their representatives to the gathering at Madison, the state capitol, that was to plan and carry out the reforms that the farmers inside the old capitalist parties, thru the use of the primaries. But the last vestige of "The League" has disappeared. It gave no memorial.

The Farmers Equity Cooperative Exchange, commonly known as "The Equity," has also departed into the limbo of the dead past.

The farmers here do not, therefore, take any organization of any kind very seriously. "Struggle seven for the right to demand?" I asked.

"Nothin' at all," was the reply. "Except that creamery down there."

Just a few steps down the road was the plant of the Ideal Butter and Cheese Cooperative. I visited it and had a talk with the manager. Everything was spick and span. The farmers here are proud of their town. Everything was moving along satisfactorily. Last year the gross business was $100,000. There were ambitious plans for improvements, the installation of a refrigerator plant, beautifying the surrounding grounds, etc. etc.

But it seemed to me as if the farmers who brought their cream to the factory to be made into butter to be shipped on to the big cities, even as far away as Chicago, couldn't see beyond the boundaries of the little patch on which their own cooperative creamery stood.

I was told that no effort had been made to develop connections with the creameries of other farmers, even in the immediate neighborhood, in an effort to develop the marketing of their own product, independent of the great distributing agencies.

All that they knew was that several other dairies were not so successful. Some co-operative dairies had, in fact, been put completely out of business when some capitalists came along from New York City with $300,000 and built a condensery at Merrill for turning out condensed milk. This condensery sent its trucks out along the country roads to buy up the milk at good prices. The result was that the farmers deserted their own co-operatives and offered lower prices for the milk and cream necessary for the making of butter and cheese.

This creamery at Bloomville had successfully withstood the coming of the condensery. Its successful operation permitted it to pay good prices, both to members and non members. It returned to the farmer the byproducts from the manufacture of butter, as an added inducement. So it keeps going.

But it is doubtful whether the farmers understand even the simplest rudiments of co-operation. The plant manager, brought in from another section of the state, also is the business manager. The executive committee meets seldom. There is supposed to be a membership meeting once a year, but it is a perfunctory gathering. Yet this is the only tie that binds the farmers together for the protection of their own economic interests.

Great interest was shown by those in attendance at one meeting at the Town Hall in Schley Township when I pointed out the great interest of the Communist movement in the development of the co-operatives. The farmers here had never heard of the role played by the co-operatives in the Russian bolshevik revolution. It brought the Workers (Communist) Party closer to them, the only party of the exploited that had come to them when all the other organizations were gone. Our Communist Party can win the farmers as well as the industrial workers in the cities.

TRY TO SAVE WITNESS FOR SACCO TRIAL

Condemned Man Who Confessed, Needed

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BOSTON, Sept. 1.—In an effort to save Celestino Madeiros alive for possible testifying at the Sacco-Vanzetti new trial motion hearing, Defense Attorney William G. Thompson has appealed to Governor Alvan Fuller to delay execution of Madeiros.

Madeiros has confessed that he and the Morelli gang of Providence committed the payroll robbery and murder for which Sacco and Vanzetti have spent over six years imprisoned.

Madeiros lost the appeal for a new trial on exception from his second convictions on the charge of murdering a Wrentham bank clerk. His attorneys have applied for commutation.

Sacco-Vanzetti's Attorney Thompson hopes to have Madeiros support his previous confession by verbal testimony when Judge Webster Thayer recovers enough to hear the new motion. Thayer has given an informal promise that he will be in court again in September.

SMITH SCOLDS GARMENT UNION FOR REJECTION

Expects Union to Come To Arbitration

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK CITY, Sept. 1.—Governor Al Smith has taken advantage of the nice words used by the officials of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union complimentary of the commission which took two years to tell the union it was opposed to the union demands.

The union's letter declining the governor's proposal to arbitrate was so full of praise of the governor and his commission that he has promptly replied by a query as to why the union did not accept the commission's recommendations.

Profits From Advantage Given.

In addition, the governor, after agreeing with the union that his motives are the highest and concerned only with the welfare of the workers, proposes on that ground that the union accept his advice and arbitrate. In fact he attacks them for not arbitrating, and upholds the Industrial Council of manufacturers, who stand in need of backing in view of the determination of the rank and file of the union to continue the struggle to victory.

"As you indicate in your letter," says the governor's reply, "the commission has shown keen appreciation of the complexities of the industry and have directed their efforts toward basic and permanent improvements. These recommendations were accepted by the manufacturers but rejected by the union."

More "High-Minded Devotion."

"For eight weeks the strike has been going on and the height of your short season is here because of the deadlock I proposed a speedy and final arbitration. Usually it is the employers who hesitate to accept arbitration, but this time it is the union. In urging this plea upon your leaders, I had fully in mind the welfare of cloak and suit workers. While I appreciate much that you say in your letter, I regret that you have not given a favorable reply."

Will Ask Conferences.

As the union had suggested that conferences be arranged in which the jobbers be called upon to negotiate, the governor ends by saying:

"I shall communicate with the several parties, asking them to take part in such conferences. I shall also request the impartial chairman in your industry to co-operate by renewing meetings. Should this line of effort not prove successful, I shall expect to be invited again the question of arbitration."

Lawyers Victory Evaporates.

The temporary injunction, recently vacated by Supreme Court Justice Crain, which vacation was hailed by the union leaders as of great moral value to the workers, has now been reinstated by decree of Supreme Court Justice Black prohibiting the officers and members of the I. L. G. W. U. from "molesting" members of the fake union or "Designers' Mutual Aid Association of America." The bosses are backing this newly sought.

Rail Mediation Board Fails of an Agreement In its first Big Case

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—Mediation failing, the demands of conductors, brakemen and switchmen on eastern railroads are going to arbitration in Chicago. The new railroad mediation board provided by the Watson-Parker act has been unable in a month of closed hearings to bring agreement between the heads of the train service brotherhoods and officials of railroads east of Chicago and north of the Ohio river.

B. L. Cease editor Railroad Trainmen, and E. F. Curtis general secretary Order Railroad Conductors are the two arbitrators chosen for the unions. The railroads will name two and the four will choose two other impartially selected arbitrators to make a board of six.

Joint C. Waller New York Central vice-president, signed the arbitration agreement for the eastern railroads' conference board. W. G. Lee, president Railway Trainmen, and L. E. Sheppard, president conductors, signed for the unions. Lee says that if arbitration fails the unions will demand targets on the degree of justice to receive by this agreement over increases by the railroads. Conductors in freight service get $6.13 a day for eight hours, brakemen $5.61. Trainmen and switchmen are seeking wage increases of $1.10 a day per hour.

U.S. OFFICERS INCITE WAR IN PHILIPPINES

Transported, Fed and Incited Moros

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MANILA, Sept. 1.—It develops that thara is certain proof that the Americans, particularly the constabulary officers directly under the command of Governor General Wood, who had visited Zamboanga in Mindanao the day before had planned the demonstration of Moros against independance which nearly resulted in an armed and bloody clash between the Moros and Filipinos.

A Put-up Job.

The Filipinos charge that the American brought the Moros from surrounding territory, transporting them into the city, housing and feeding them in the constabulary barracks and preparing their banners.

Major Allen S. Fletcher, commanding the constabulary, was hardly able to stop the Moros, excited and encouraged in a warlike attitude by Fletcher and his men, from opening armed attack, and was forced, to ask Colonel Carmi Thompson, Coolidge's investigator, to remain on the ship until he could round up the warlike Moros in the barracks.

Filipino Proves His Charge.

When Thompson came ashore, Augustin Alvarez, a former governor of the province, in his speech welcoming Thompson, pointed in the incitation of Major Fletcher as an example of American fomentation of trouble. He said:

"The only reason for the ill-feeling between the Americans and the Filipinos in Zamboanga is that the Americans interfere in politics and try to separate the Moros from the Filipinos. Every time a party like yours visits us they emphasize our differences. I am sorry to say that the military barracks, where the Moros are now garrisoned, ads the headquarters of the imperialism and jingoism in Zamboanga.

"It is the army officers who are most interested in stirring up trouble between the Moros and the Filipinos. It was Major Fletcher who sent to the hills and got the Datus and their followers to come here to protest against Philippine independence and appeal for the Bacon bill. Major Fletcher promised them everything up to heaven. It is because Americans act like this, in spite of many American business men who make their homes here, that we oppose further American capital."

While Alvarez was speaking, surrounded by several thousand Filipinos and many Moros, also, who demanded complete Philippine independence, savage yells rang from the constabulary barracks where Major Fletcher was supposedly trying to hold the Moros from an outbreak.

Tries to Break Up Meeting.

Shortly Fletcher himself, accompanied with other American officers, rushed thru the audience, warning Colonel Thompson that if the Filipino meeting was not broken up in five minutes the Moros might get out of hand and begin a pitched battle. Thompson refused and at the end of the meeting, went to the barracks where he addressed the Moros and asked them for "co-operation."

Passaic Relief Body Organized in Cincy by "Mother" Bloor

(Special to The Daily Worker)

CINCINNATI, O., Sept. 1.—"Mother Bloor" came to Cincinnati bringing the message of the Passaic textile strike, "Mother Bloor" made a complete tour of all the unions in the city with the plea for immediate aid in the way of funds to be sent to the relief committee for textile strikers at Passaic, N. J. "Tess," a girl striker from the Passaic strike scene, accompanied "Mother Bloor" on these lectures, giving an actual account of conditions which she had to contend with while an employe of one of the mills.

OFFICIAL STATEMENT BY MEXICAN LABOR SUPPORTS CALLES' POSITION

That organized labor in Mexico is with the Mexican government in its measures against the defiant organized Roman Catholic clergy has been apparent from the first day of the passive resistance by the church to law enforcement. The Federated Press has now received important statements issued by the Mexican Regional Confederation of Labor (CROM) and the central labor body of the CROM at Mexico City. Both statements appear in the official organ of the CROM.

The statement by the Mexico City labor body contains decisions indorsed by the national executive of the CROM for transmission to all affiliated central bodies. These decisions are in part as follows:

Organize Demonstration.

"The Mexico City Federation of Labor will organize a demonstration to support the government in which all members shall participate.

"Similar demonstrations should be held wherever there are affiliated organizations of the CROM.

"To wire support to the president of the republic.

"To ask the national executive of the CROM to cable the principal labor organizations of the world explaining the origin and character of the religious conflict. The action of the A. F. of L. was to proclaim neutrality.

Fight Boycott.

"To counteract the economic boycott proclaimed by the league of religious defense.

"To ask the president of the republic to purge his administration of all members of the Knights of Columbus and other reactionary elements.

"The Mexico City Federation of Labor shall circularize all affiliated unions and give them precise instructions on how to support the government.

"To ask the national executive of the CROM to develop persistent written propaganda in all the military barracks, as was done during the defiuerta affair. To ask authority for presenting motion pictures in the barracks explaining to the soldiers the character of the situation.

"Extraordinary power is given the executive committee of the federation, including pecuniary measures for failure to carry out decisions.

"All publication of religious matter in the press shall be suspended during the crisis, the Federation of Typographical workers to be responsible for any infringment of this decision.

"Open Rebellion."

"Foreign to any intention of raising fundamental questions of creed," the federation statement concludes, "and desiring more than ever to respect the religious beliefs of its members, the federation cannot, however, remain indifferent in the face of the criminal activities which the reaction is carrying out, in open rebellion against the laws of the nation going so far as to attempt to paralyze completely the life of the republic by provoking an economic crisis, so sharp as to throw the country into a state of anarchy.

"If what we have already seen is not sufficient, it is enough to cast an eye over Mexican history to convince us that the intervention of the church in administrative matters has been disastrous for the people in the present epoch of social evolution it would render futile the sacrifices of those who have gone before. The soldiers of the revolution did not die so that the people might fall again into the clutches of the fanaticism which capitalism and the clergy have ably exploited during so many centuries."

LEAGUE DON'T WANT U. S. IN WORLD COURT

American Voters Turn It Down Cold

GENEVA, Switzerland, Sept. 1.—It is freely predicted by those who are on the "inside" that when the representatives of 34 nations of the league of nations gather Wednesday to vote on whether or not the United States shall be allowed to join the world court, the vote will be to reject the application of the U. S.

Oklahoma C. O. P. Seconds.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla, Sept. 1.—The republican party's state convention here has petitioned its representatives in the U. S. senate, J. W. Harreld and W. B. Pine, to vote for withdrawal of the proposal that the United States join the world court.

Elections Test Court Issue.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 1.—California is voting today on candidates for the U. S. senate, which will reflect the voters' sentiment for or against the world court. Senator Shortridge voted for the court, and his opponent, Judge Robert M. Clarke, has campaigned against it, supported by the Hiram Johnson machine.

In Wisconsin, which votes on Sept 7, Senator Lenroot, who led the administration fight for the court, is opposed by Governor J. J. Blaine, who is making opposition to the court one of the chief issues. New Hampshire and Oregon also are soon to vote on this issue.

DURHAM, N. C.—(FP)—Rep R. O. Everett of Durham, who led the unsuccessful fight in favor of the child labor constitutional amendments in the lower house of the North Carolina legislature, won out in the recent democratic primary.

Philippine House Votes Over Wood's Veto Bill to Take Plebiscite

MANILA, P. I., Sept. 1.—The Philippine house of representatives yesterday followed the senate in adopting over the veto of Governor General Leonard Wood a bill for a plebiscite on independence from the United States. # 6,000 Workers Jailed By Pilsudski Regime Conference Protests

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—Abolition of the reign of white terror and general amnesty for the 6,000 political prisoners in Poland is demanded in a resolution forwarded to Prime Minister Bartell of Poland and to the Polish consul general by a conference of International Labor Defense delegates of New York.

The meeting represented about 50,000 workers. It is part of a national campaign by the International Labor Defense in answer to a desperate appeal from the workers and peasants of Poland who are being subjected to savage tortures and herded into filthy dungeons for participation in strikes and other working-class activities. Pilsudski is reported to have released all fascists, but no revolutionists.

NEW ORLEANS—(FP)—Warrington House, for years the home for the down-and-outs, where a bite to eat, a place to sleep and a few nickels for a shave and haircut were available, has been closed for lack of funds from the community chest. # NATION LICKED IN WAR LICKS VICTOR IN BIZ

Germany 3rd, U. S. 2nd, France Eating Dust

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1.—Germany, also defeated and almost bankrupt in the world war, today stands third among the leading nations of the world in foreign trade, according to the United States department of commerce.

Surpasses France.

A comparative analysis of international trade statistics by the department shows that Germany, since the war, rapidly has been regaining her former position in the commercial world. She already has surpassed France and now stands next to the United States in foreign trade. The United Kingdom leads.

From 1924 to 1925 Germany's foreign trade increased 35.5 per cent, while France's trade decreased 1 6 per cent. At the same time the foreign trade of the United States increased only 11.1 per cent and that of the United Kingdom 10.8 per cent.

Beats Pre-War Record.

In 1913 the value of Germany's foreign trade was $14,950,000,000, and in 1925 it reached $5,952,000,000. Due to the decreased value of the dollar, however, the 1925 figures do not actually show an increase over the total in 1913.

France's foreign trade in 1925 was valued at $4,262,000,000 and in 1913 at $3,953,000,000.

Meanwhile, the United States, with a foreign trade valued at $9,136,000,000 in 1925, is pressing the United Kingdom, which in 1925 had a total trade valued at $10,857,000,000.

Imperialists Send War Vessels in Vain

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SHANGHAI, Sept. 1. — The swift victory of the Cantonese armies against Wu Pei-fu has reached to the occupation of Hankow, after capture of Wuchang, on the south bank of the Yangtze, Hankow on the north bank of the river being occupied the same day.

Alarms Imperialists.

This is alarming the imperialists, and Japan, one of those most deeply interest, is rushing destroyers and gunboats up the river from Shanghai to "protect Japanese interests." Already ten gunboats of Japan are in the Hankow region.

Three divisions of troops of Wu Pei-fu evacuated Hankow, known as one of the most important cities of central China, before the Cantonese troops could cross the river. The Cantonese were aided by workers and peasants behind the lines of Wu's troops, who cut the railway lines and made Wu's continued resistance untenable.

Make Wu Unpopular.

When Wu's troops left they looted the Chinese city (Hankow is a foreign settlement and considerable industry) and robbed and raped in the customary white guard fashion. The Chinese population looks upon the Cantonese as the liberators from oppression.

The Cantonese army, often called a "red army" on account of its program of the liberation of China from imperialism, is in full control in the province of Hunan and have mined the Yangtze between Hankow and Changsha, to prevent the foreign imperialists from aiding the reactionary troops of Wu Pei-fu. British and Japanese gunboats which have tried to aid Wu have been fired upon.

Smoot's Son Visiting Soviet Union; Reports Show Steady Progress

MOSCOW Sept. 1 Ernest W. Smoot, son of the senator, is taking away favorable impressions of Russian life, it was stated today. He visited Moscow and Leningrad, talked to a number of important officials and saw factories and other state administrations.

Free to investigate.

He said that he found conditions here much better than he expected and was surprised at the frankness of the officials and business executives in giving complete freedom given to visitors to conduct independent inquiries.

He was fortunate in having the company of Leonard Woolfolk, a boy in Russian business and who speaks Russian fluently.

Making Steady Progress.

Mr. Smoot said that Russians readily admitted the weakness of their system and methods but, considering the difficulties they are facing and their lack of experienced personnel they seemed to be doing well and to be making steady progress.

The people appeared to be cheerful and happy, he said, and the authorities generally trying to improve conditions in general.

Garment Workers Aid British Mine Strike

FOREST PARK, Pa., Sept. 1.—Unity House guests contributed $392.76 to the striking British miners' relief over one week end. The house is maintained by the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union for its members to enjoy a rest and vacation. Fannie Cohn, union educational director, read message from Elias Wilentz, of the Joint Board of the British delegation in America and told of conditions in the British mine fields.

Poland--The Land of Systematic White Terror

Proposals of the Thugutt Committee.

Thus despite all its endeavors the committee did not succeed in hiding the horrible facts. It found itself compelled to make a number of proposals the adoption of which through the parliament would give the appearance as if one endeavored to abolish the bad conditions. The commission demanded:

1 Provision of greater financial means to the prisons for their improvement, sufficient provision with heating material, repairing of the heatings, establishment of prison hospitals, provision of the most important equipment (plank-beds, straw sacks, blankets, etc.)

2 Immediate liquidation of the Holy Cross Prison because it is not fit as a prison for reasons of health.

3 With regard to the overcrowding of the prisoners, the prosecutors should be advised to use imprisonment on reward more rarely. Introduction of probation Deduction of the imprisonment on reward from the sentence. .....

The material gathered in this series of eight articles on the barbarous white terror in Poland is sent to The DAILY WORKER from a committee composed of workers' organizations in that militaristic and blood-stained land. The suppression of trade unions, the shooting down of unemployed, the torture of imprisoned workers told in this account is enough to rouse the indignation of even those unsympathetic to the workers' cause.

6. The Ministry of Justice is asked not to prevent the free citizens from forming organizations for prisoners' welfare (This means that up to the present no help for prisoners was permitted!)

Parliament requests the Ministry of the Interior to see to it that the prisoners in the police prisons are not maltreated (!)

All proposals of the committee were rejected by the parliament, a proposal, however, was adopted to increase the salaries of the higher prison officials and of the prison clergymen.

Inhuman Tortures.

The police prisons of Poland have the fame of torture chambers of the Middle ages. For weeks the prisoners are subjected there to all kinds of tortures till they make "satisfactory" statements. Many of them are tortured to death. It would be in vain to try to give a detailed picture of the tortures which are applied, usual routine beating of the soles, squeezing of the sexual organs, squeezing of the fingers between the door or by means of special instruments, tearing off the finger nails, nailing of electricity till muscle contractions take place, raping of women, torturing of children in the presence of their parents, pumping of water and urine through the nose, etc. etc. One does not exaggerate if one says that there is no torture which the Polish police has not applied against its political prisoners.

A Matteotti Murder in Cuba

(By a Cuban Trade Unionist)

ARTICLE II

Yesterday we told of the disappearance of Alfredo Lopez, secretary of the Havana Federation of Labor, and sketched some of the preliminaries leading up to his vanishing, without doubt by an assassination carried out by the murder bands of the fascist Machado government of Cuba, a creature under the control of U. S. imperialism and directly under the orders of General Crowder, who is unofficially a monarch over the Cuban people. The present article continues with the story of Lopez' arrest the day before he "disappeared."

Tracing Lopez' Printing Shop.

Next day, after Lopez' arrest, the policeman and detectives searched Lopez' printing shop to see if they could find the pamphlet's original. Due to persecution, Lopez moved his shop every other month, or every time the policemen discovered it, so the policemen did not know where it was this time. But after a few hours' investigation they found the place.

Armed Policeman Raid Print Shop.

Nine policemen with revolvers in hand then went into Lopez' printing shop, and in presence of Lopez' partner, because Lopez was not in there at that time, searched in every corner, shelf and box that was in the shop.

The police told Lopez' partner that they had orders to kill the author of the pamphlet. A few minutes later, they searched into Lopez' house, where they found Lopez and told him again to quit his activities—otherwise his head would "smell of powder." Lopez answered again that he had nothing to do with the pamphlet. Then the police went away and left Lopez until the next night when his mysterious disappearance took place.

The friends of Lopez told him to quit his position and hide himself in some place for a few days, but Lopez refused to do that, saying that if he was guilty he hidden somewhere, he would thereby set guilty of what he was innocent. Therefore he refused to hide, and instead remained on his regular job.

The Kidnapping of Lopez.

Next day, the evening of July 20, at 8 o'clock, after his supper in company with his wife and children, Lopez left in a stream of lies about Lopez' home with the intention of going to the Labor Temple. But Lopez never got to the Labor Temple that night.

Alfredo Lopez left his home, wife and kiddies at 8 o'clock on the 18th of July and never will return. He never will see again his dear wife and his five loved children. The fascist government got him, and although we do not know how they got him, we know that they got him.

The Life of the Press.

The day after Lopez' disappearance, Lopez' wife went before the secretary of the interior, Zayas Bazan, with her five children, and asked Zayas Bazan what had become of her husband, or where he was. The secretary (fascist) answered on an ambiguous manner, saying that he did not know anything about Lopez and furthermore the secretary said:

"What do you ask me for? Why don't you come to me when I have asked to do with the case? Do you think I have your husband hidden in here?"

Mrs. Lopez answered Zayas Bazan in plain words—"You people called him into this office—you told him to quit his activities, etc., so it seems to you, for you people are the only ones who would assassinate him."

Lopez was the right hand of the Havana labor movement, so that the Havana workers must mourn his death.

The difference between the kidnaping of Matteotti in Italy and the kidnaping of Lopez in Cuba is that the body of Matteotti was found after a week of searching while the body of Lopez never could be traced.

Now I have finished the description of the kidnaping of Lopez which is my main objective but I cannot finish this article without describing the action, repression and valiancy of Cuban workers which I will tell story of that tomorrow.

Publishers' President Important Speaker at Pressmen's Convention

PRESSMEN'S HOME Tenn., Sept 1. Praising Major Berry, who broke the Pressmen's strike in New York asking for greater cooperation from the workers in print shops, opposing the shorter work day and bewailing the great danger to the employer in that the control of union labor may fall into the hands of unwise leaders," Fred A. Walker, chairman of the Publishers' Association of New York was a main speaker at the annual convention of the Pressmen's Union.

Smaller Crews.

He cited the driven labor of the Smith at which many of them are enough to put on the crew of a multiple press, instead of the thirteen used in Boston. He wants the hours per in the crew hereafter plainly stated in contracts, and expects contracts in the future to say little about wages and much about production.

He heartily approves of piece work the he admits it is difficult to apply its principles in the press room. He thinks some progress in that direction can be made.

Labor Men Be Dutiful.

His opposition to the shorter work day is because, on newspapers "the proprietor cannot control events nor anticipate the hour of going to press." He must be ready when the news comes to pass it on expeditiously to the rest of the world, and must therefore be ready to work when necessary. His fellow workmen expeditiously to to his duty." Walker did not discuss the advisability of more and shorter shifts to even better accomplish this duty."

DURING the month of August, 1608 party members paid the United Labor Ticket Assessment, leaving something like 6,000 party members who have not paid the assessment.

Thus far the national office has dependad upon the voluntary action of the nucial secretarias to secure the collection and remittance of the assessment. This method has failed to secure a response such as should be made by our party functionarias.

The collection of the balance of the assessment cannot be given up. The complete collection and settlement is a mattar which involves the functioning of the party organization too seriously to close the matter with the assessment fund in its present status.

The lists of the secretarias who received stamps and have not been settled for are being turned over to the district organizers with instruction to secure a report from every comrade who received thess stamps. Those comrades who have not given the collection of the assessment the attention they should have, as responsible party functionaries, can save the district organizers a considerable amount of time and work by taking action to clear their record immediately.

The slogan now is: EVERY STAMP MUST BE ACCOUNTED FOR! EVERY SECRETARY WHO RECEIVED STAMPS WILL BE HELD RESPONSIBLE FOR AN ACCOUNTING OF THE STAMPS HE RECEIVED.

CHARLES CLINE, TEXAS MARTYR, I. L. D. GUEST

Will Attend Conference Here Sept. 5

Charles Cline, just released from the prison where he served thirteen years of his sentance in the famous case of the Texas martyrs, will be present at the second annual conference of International Labor Defense opening here at Ashland Auditorium on Sept. 5.

Cline will speak at the mass meeting which will be held in the Ashland Auditorium on the evening of Sept 6, in addition to Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, James P. Cannon, C. E. Ruthenberg, and Dr. J. J. Peters. At this meeting he will tell the story of his case and that of his comrades.

The Frams-Up.

Cline was the only American, who, together with the Mexican revolutionary Captain Jose M. Rangel and a number of his compatriots, had prepared a small expedition to join the Mexican Rebels for liberation against the despotic Diaz government. The expedition was pursued by Texas officials and finally seized. A spy, Ortiz by name, was found tied to a tree, dead. There was no evidence to show who had killed him, but Rangel and Cline, together with the other members of the expedition who had been captured were tried and sentenced to barbarously long terms of imprisonment.

Filmsy Evidence.

Cline wrote at that time "The charge was conspiracy to murder, of having conspired to kill a man whom I never saw and never communicated with in any shape, form or fashion, could not even speak his language, for I was tried as a principal, tried upon flimsy circumstantial evidence."

The defense proved that I was no where near the place had never seen the man nor spoken to him nor had any communication with him whatsoever. At the first trial they could not get a jury. On the change of venue to San Antonio on the first trial the jury disagreed. On the second trial I was convicted.

Three Trials

On an appeal a plea of former jeopardy was raised and the court room was reversed. I was given two days on the third trial without a plea of former jeopardy I was again convicted and upon appeal, the conviction was affirmed.

The American Federation of Labor, the Mexican Federation of Labor, the Mexican national legislature, the city of Mexico city, and numerous other public men in both countries save me and again responded the release of the brave rebels who were held in prison for terms of from one to fourteen years. The convictions grew out a fight in Local 502 between the klan and antiklan elements. The antiklan elements opposed the klan while Farrington and his machine used the hooded knights to get rid of the rail-oads.

The last quarterly report of the district office shows that Farrington paid $2,000 to two special prosecutors who assisted the prosecuting attorney of Franklin county in getting rid of the progressives.

ROBBERS in police uniforms no longer confine their activities to the banana stands. A porter in a haberdashery store had just relieved the night watchman when a uniformed person approached, pulled his gun and pointed the nasty end of it at the porter. This is a way Chicago cops have so the porter was not worrying accordingly. But when he was locked in a basement while the alleged policeman and a confederate were getting away with $5,000 worth of stock the porter thought things were pushing a little too far. Everything that glitters may not be a policeman's star. And again it may.

The Shady Record of Frank Farrington.

was placed on the unfair list by the organized workers of Collinsville, Illinois, because he issued an injunction against the miners in that region.

Farrington Defends Injunction.

THE injunction was issued at the request of the Lumaghi Coal company. But Farrington issued a circular, which was published in full in The DAILY WORKER of Oct. 13, 1924, defending Judge Hadley by explaining that the injunction was not against the miners who were on strike, but against the officers of other locals restraining them from calling miners out on strike, or compelling their fellow workers. Farrington had not a word of criticism of the injunction. This was his new known publicity appearance in the political field on behalf of his masters. But it was not the last.

In view of the attack made by Farrington on the subdistrict president who collected a dollar a day for his local expense, his own expense account, while a member of the international executive board will prove interesting reading.

During the year 1923 his expense account reached the grand total of $1,015.25 while the expenses of John L. Lewis and Frank J. Hayes combined were only $2,953.63, or $61.62 less than that of Farrington.

Farrington's first essay in the role of strikebreaking was in the year 1917, when he was sent to Vancouver B. C. to take charge of a strike in that district. His headquarters were in Seattle, and it is reported that most of the money contributed by the International Union for the support of the strike never got nearer the strikers than Farrington's suite of rooms in a Seattle hotel.

There is a record of a speech delivered by this strikebreaker before a meeting of the Trades and Labor Council of Nanimo, B. C. in which he denounces the strikers for getting arrested, calling them fools for not keeping their mouths shut. His handling of the Vancouver strike, no doubt put him in the good graces of the Illinois coal operators as we find the coal barons quietly pushing Farrington on his return from Vancouver and grooming him for the position which he occupies today.

WITH THE YOUNG WORKERS

CONDUCTED BY THE YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE

History of International Youth Day

September 3 is International Youth Day. On the 11th International Youth Day let us briefly review the history of our world youth movement. The Young Communist International was founded on the 20th of November, 1919, at its Berlin conference. The working class youth movement, however, from which the Young Communist International sprung, commenced much earlier at the end of the previous century. The immediate predecessor of the Y. C. I. was the International Relations Committee of the socialist youth organizations founded at Stuttgart in 1907. Altho opportunism was growing and getting strongest at the time this organization had in the beginning a completely revolutionary character. The leaders of this organization were, Karl Liebknecht, Rolland Holst and Alberl, who were the representatives of the left wing of the Second International and who later became Communists.

Education Thru Struggle.

The principles on which these youth organizations were fonctioned centered around the fact that the socialist education of the youth could be carried on only by active participation in the class struggle and by calling to the working youth of all countries to join the struggle against militarism and against their economic exploitation. It was for this reason that opportunism was compelled to carry on a struggle against the Independent proletarian youth organizations. In Germany where this action of the opportunists was most successful, the revolutionary elements of the Stuttgart Congress decisions had already been shoved aside in the years 1905-10 and replaced by the opportunistic method of "leading the youth." Instead of the class struggle activity there came a purely cultural activity carried on by apolitical methods. However, a number of leagues (Italy, Sweden, Norway, Switzerland, etc.) remained their independence, from the opportunists and took an active part with the left wing of the working class movement in the class struggle.

In Germany also even before the beginning of the world war an opposition was growing up inside the "working youth." And in this was given the seeds of the future split of the proletarian youth movement.

The Copenhagen Congress.

The spirit of opportunism could be felt at this time also in the question of international relations. The Youth International was also a loose federation of national organizations. The whole working class movement was confined to its national boundaries at the time. At the Copenhagen Congress in 1910 the vital question of the relations of the youth to the party was dealt with, but no international directives were issued as at the Stuttgart Congress. A resolution was passed which said nothing definite and remained on paper. This same congress elected Mr. Danneberg of the Austrian Socialist Youth as the international secretary. This gentleman saw his highest duty in non-activity and a sabotage of the international work.

Betrayal of Social Democrats.

While the coming of the world war the political and economic situation of the working youth was tremendously intensified. The betrayal of the social democrats at their support of the war completely exposed the opportunist character of the overwhelming majority of the socialist parties and the Second International. This was the signal for the left to organize a revolutionary youth international. The proletarian youth conferences (Zimmerwald, etc.) which declared to set aside Stuttgart and to establish the international organization at the Berlin conference in 1915 and commenced a struggle against the war and against opportunism. Apart from a few points upon which it was unclear, for instance the question of disarmament, the left international during the war maintained a revolutionary attitude and in this action it considered the workers' movement as its chief weapon. It was the left section in Berne Switzerland, which decided to set aside Stuttgart and to call the International Day of struggle for peace. This decision against the war and the solidarity of the international economic situation of the young workers.

Birth of Y. C. I.

Between 1915 and 1919 the proletarian youth organizations developed on the one hand in the direction of the left and on the other in the direction of the Communist International which afterwards definitely in the program the basis of the revolutionary youth organizations in the struggle for the dictatorship of the proletariat and made the youth movement a part of the international Communist organization, the international general staff of the world revolution.

And so International Youth Day has its birth in 1915 as a protest against the world war and it grew in strength and importance during the years which followed. It might be said that the International Youth Day is the international front against war. In America in connection with the Young Workers League has taken over the initiative in the International Youth Day with young workers' leagues in many countries. Germany, Austria, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Switzerland, Scandinavia, Holland, Belgium, Canada, Mexico, Japan, China, Australia, South Africa and Palestine are among the countries where the Young Workers League of America has taken over the initiative in the International Youth Day.

The Workers' Children In Camp

By FANNY PLOTKIN.

The Young Pioneer Training Camp now being run in Illinois is one of the greatest achievements for the district. It is not only a camp, but a training ground for future leaders. The camp is not only to give a group of Pioneers an enjoyable time, but to make everyone of them future organizers. We have succeeded in this. We have made every Pioneer who has been at camp realize the importance of the slogan, "Organize the unorganized working class children!" We have done a great deal to start work in many of the smaller cities in the district as Maywood, Hammond and Waukegan. The children of these small towns are going back with a broader viewpoint of the movement than they have ever had.

Discipline is one of the points greatly stressed at camp. The lack of Communist discipline is the thing which has caused many of our groups to end as failures. This will be stopped now. The children who have been at camp will act as a nucleus in all groups to help them grow in with the correct Communist understanding towards all problems they will be faced with.

Another thing that they have learned is the correct way to discipline comrades who have disobeyed instructions. Instead of making these comrades wash dishes or stay out of sports they have hit upon the true Communist way of punishment. They tell the disciplined comrades to read up on Lenin, Liebknecht, or other working class leaders and tell the rest of their lives in their nightly educational meeting before the campfire. Important working class anniversaries are also discussed in this manner. This brings a new spirit in the work in helping develop the comrades greatly.

This year's camp is almost over. What is now needed is more work in the working class districts to support such a camp. Also we must have a camp for more children and have a bigger and better camp next year.

It was the wish of the campers which played a big part in the success of the camp. We must have ... for the camp ...

MILL STRIKERS BATTLE TROOPS IN R. I. STRIKE

Rush Mill Gates and Beat Armed Boss

MANVILLE, R. I., Sept. 1. State constabulary are guarding the Manville-Jenckes mill here following a pitched battle yesterday between mill strikers, numbering over 1,000 men and women, and constabulary which strikers heard that scabs were being brought in by armored cars.

The strikers stormed the mill and rushed the mill gates, and when the mill superintendent, Sawdi, threatened the strikers with a revolver, he was rushed by the strikers and severely beaten before the state troopers could reach him.

Sympathetic Strike to Tie Up Manville Jenckes

Providence, R. I.—Leaders of two other Manville-Jenckes plants are ready to join the strike of the thousand cotton textile workers at the Manville plant of the gigantic combination added with a few days ago. Manville workers went out when the firm refused to discharge non-union boomworkers taken on after the plant's loading had laid off union workers. Telephone mill workers and Social mill workers of the same firm threaten sympathetic action under their union officials. The workers are organized in the United Textile Workers. Federal conciliator Richard D. Brown is trying to patch up the trouble between the workers and mill management.

LYNCHERS BURN NEGRO TO DEATH IN COUNTY JAIL

First Chop Off Foot; Blind Him With Poker

WYTHEVILLE, Va., Sept. 1. — "We want him to scorch first, and then cook slow," said the white hooded leader of a mob here, as with a dull axe he chopped a foot off the living, burning body of Raymond Bird, a Negro.

Bird was in jail, arrested for no crime that anybody seems to know anything about, the only rumor is that he was accused of being spoken to and smiled at by a farmer's daughter near here. A crowd of about 150 men, attired in fantastic regalia, some as women, some as clowns, but most in the hood and gown of the K. K. K., approached the jail at 12:45 Sunday morning, while Bird slept in his cell. They were handed the keys by Jailer J. C. Richardson.

Burn His Eyes Out.

Bird was soaked with gasoline, and set on fire. As the flames seared him he was mutilated with axes and other instruments, and wet brooms were used to keep him from burning too fast. When he screamed and tried to break thru the line of rifle barrels that penned him in the corner, some one poked out his eye with a red hot poker.

The jail guards stood around and watched with buckets of water to prevent the fire from spreading to other cells, but made no move to interfere with the ceremony.

When the dying man's groans softened to a murmur, a rope was brought and the charred body was dragged outside to an automobile. It was tied to the car to be taken further, but first, as it passed along the line of mob-sters echo could not reach into the jail, it was beaten and hacked until the head was only a mass of pulp.

A long procession of automobiles followed the car that dragged Bird down a country road to the neighborhood of the farmhouse where the white girl is said to have smiled upon him, and there he was hanged from a tree. "Just high enough to be a good target," the same white hooded leader announced. From fifty guns in the crowd shot and bullets were poured into the blackened, bleeding corpse of Raymond Bird, and then the guns were loaned around so that other protesters of the honor of the white race could enjoy the sensation of firing round after round into a Negro's dead body.

The mob dispersed and the sheriff got out of bed and came to cut the body down. No arrests have been made.

Barbers' President for Wages Instead of Tips

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.—Barbers should depend on high wage standards rather than tips, General President James C. Shanessy of the International union told the 23rd annual Journeymen Barbers Association. The state barbers urged the passage of a license law requiring the licensing of all barbers and all persons doing barbering work in beauty parlors and providing for the examination of all applicants for such licenses. The bill also calls for the supervision of sanitation in barber shops and beauty parlors. Fifty-four state local unions were represented. Officers elected by the state association for the ensuing term were: President, Harry Quinto, New York City; Vice Presidents, Julius Frank, Buffalo; Barney Jacobs, Brooklyn and Charles Battaglia, Schenectady; Secretary-treasurer, Patrick Reagan, Rochester.

HOW WORKERS REST IN U. S. S. R. SOME VISIT "WATERING PLACES"

(By The Waman Worker NEFEDOVA)

The train rolls at full speed. In two hours it has to reach the Watering place station in the Caucasus.

The special car for the working people is filled with those who are going to spend their vacation, or take a medical cure in that part of the Soviet Union.

There is lively talk among the travelers. Many of them are riding here for the first time and they are anxious to see how the Caucasus looks. They have heard many tales about its beauty and about the famous Caucasian watering places. They say it is a paradise.

The train stops. It is the Watering place station. There is a shout, "Here we are. Go ahead comrades!"

Romantic Scenery.

Another train which has to take us to the different watering places is already awaiting us. It is a small one with little cars that look like tramway wagons. Thru the window of this small car I admire the beauty of the country, entirely covered with green vegetation. The train passes the magnificent mountain ranges of Mashuk, Verbiudke, Sholdivka and here is the place where our famous poet Lermontov was killed in a duel.

At the several railway stations the agents of the watering places receive the invalids. After revising the special traveling pass-booklets given to every man or woman entitled to be admitted into a sanitarium, they invite them to enter autocars and take them to one of the cure houses.

After the cleverly made medical examination the regular life in the sanitarium begins. The gong becomes our guide.

At 8 o'clock it rings for breakfast; at 11 o'clock for lunch; then at 1 o'clock for dinner. At 4 o'clock again some food is offered and at 8 o'clock in the evening it calls us for supper.

Healing Waters.

After supper is finished we take our cups and walk into the park to get some water from the mineral springs. This has to be done according to the prescription of our doctors. One is drinking water from source No. 17, another should have it from No. 4 or No. 20 and so on.

From all parts of the union working people come here in order to rest and to better their health.

There is here also an institute for a mud-cure.

It is in full activity as can be seen by looking at its chimney, busily puffing and sending toward the sky clouds of smoke and steam, in this institution about 500 patients daily are looked after. Many invalids also enjoy the sun bath. There was a time when only the nobles and the rich bourgeois were admitted there, but now the matter looks quite different. This wonderful place henceforth is for us! For the working people!

Taxilia Workers Thrive.

Look at those women! They are our Moscow weaver girls. Look how they walk proudly as peahens and they do not feel abashed when many spectators admire them. Their heads are enveloped in the silk Caucasian bright colored shawls. Their pretty faces are sunburned and look happy.

After the water cure all visitors go to enjoy the music which an orchestra plays in the garden.

Usually on Sunday a party is organized to make a trip into the mountains where many most picturesque waterfalls can be seen. Early in the morning the visitors admire the majestic snow tops of the gigantic mountain, Elbrus.

"How do you feel now?"—asks one comrade of another at the railway station after the term of leave is ended. "Very well, I think I am quite prepared now to work hard the whole year."

HOODED SLAYERS LASH AND SHOOT PUTNAM NEGROES

Terrorize Florida Town Beat Whites Too

PALATKA, Fla., Sept. 1. — J. Jefferson Hanrock, the sheriff of Putnam county, is suspended from office by order of Judge A. V. Long after a preliminary investigation here at last been ordered by District Attorney Adkins into the reign of terror conducted here by men wearing the regalia of the K. K. K.

Two Negroes have recently been shot to death and an unknown number have been severely beaten and tortured during the last year and a half. Between fifty and sixty white persons, several of them women, have been kidnapped and lashed by the same group of masked night riders.

Murdered in Car.

The Negroes killed were a certain William Pinckney and a friend of his. They were in a car searching for the mother of Pinckney, who at that very time was being taken, along with a man found visiting her, to the outskirts of the city, where they were afterwards so badly beaten with leather straps that they were unable to make their way home.

When the car containing Pinckney and his companion came near the mob that went to meet it, and after stopping it and ascertaining who was within, fired a volley at close range and killed both of its occupants.

Thruout all of these assaults the sheriff's office and the police department have failed to beatir themselves. When one white woman, Mrs. Pearl Hand, the proprietor of a hotel where he was being stripped and lashed right on the street the electric lights in that part of town went out. After the beating was administered the lights were turned back on again. While the town was in darkness the police left their posts and disappeared. They returned with the lights.

Kluxers Blackmail.

Defuniak Springs, home of former Governor Sidney J. Catts, has been experiencing a similar visitation of hooded and masked thugs. They resort to blackmail as well as inflicting punishment on those who provoke their ire.

A courageous farmer who met a band of thirty of them with a shotgun and defeated them in the unequal contest arrested seven of his assailants. They were tried, but let off with light fines.

The grand jury of Putnam county is meeting now and calling witnesses, but many of those who undoubtedly could talk are not willing to say more than that they have been threatened with death if they do not preserve silence.

STEEL WORKERS TO HAVE LABOR DAY PICNIC THIS MONDAY, EAST GARY, IND.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

GARY, Ind., Sept. 1. — Big preparations are being made here, by the Lake County conference for the defense of Sacco and Vanzetti, for the Labor Day picnic and protest meeting to be held on Labor Day, Monday, Sept. 6, at the picnic grounds, Pine Street, East Gary.

J. Louis Engdahl, editor of The DAILY WORKER, and Paul Petras, in Hungarian, will be the speakers.

The Lake County committee, which covers the Gary steel district, represents 15 labor and fraternal organizations, and is constantly increasing its influence. The picnic grounds can be reached by taking the Valparaiso car at 11th Ave. and Broadway to Pine St., East Gary.

MEXICO PLANS PROTEST AGAINST PRESS ATTACK

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 1. — The Calles administration may protest to Washington against the vicious campaign conducted in a section of the United States press against the Mexican government.

Precedent for such action could be found in the protest of the American embassy in Mexico City during the Wilson administration when certain actors in Mexican theaters used Woodrow Wilson as the butt of their jokes.

Boycott Played Out.

The catholic boycott has lost its kick and this form of sabotage no longer merits serious attention. The action of the Western Federation of Labor in threatening to stay people als against catholic leaders who were actively directing the boycott, was decisive in forcing the boycotters to come to their senses.

The Catholic end of the struggle is now being directed openly from Rome. The episcopate declares its readiness to carry out any instructions the Vatican may see fit to send.

War Time 'Frame-Up' Artist Now Arrested for Old Embezzlement

By CARL HACKER

(Spec.al to The Daily Worker)

CLEVELAND, Sept. 1. — Fred Krafft, active a spy in the I. W. W. and the socialist party during the war period, is reported as being held in Birmingham, Alabama, on a four-year old federal indictment for embezzlement, it was learned here. He was the "nemesis of accounts" for the Cleveland Credit Men's Association.

Together with A. E. King, Kohut tried very hard to "frame" Mayor Hanahan of Pinola, a socialist, in 1918 on a liberty bond charge. Failing in this they came to Cleveland, entered the socialist party here and became active members. However, it was not long before they were discovered. King, the bobbie of the two, mainained his innocence and tried to remain within the organization.

A short time after their exposure in the socialist party here members came across a spy report in the Legal News, which is received by all attorneys in the city to keep them posted on the court docket, praising King for his work in the radical movement and at the same time announcing his appointment to a position of collector of accounts for the Creditors' Association. It also pointed out that he was a capable attorney, speaking seven languages.

Only a few months after that the daily papers carried quite a different story to tell concerning him. They reported that the "nemesis of accounts" had disappeared from the city, and with him was gone eight thousand dollars.

Blind Poet Arrested; Union Comes to Help

Persecution of blind vendors on Chicago streets, allayed for a time by pressure on Mayor Dever, broke the Chicago Federation of Labor, has begun again with the arrest of T. Paul Sullivan, a blind poet. Sullivan, who belongs to the Fraternal Order of Blind Men, was selling his booklet of verse, Antidotes for the Blues, when the police arrested him. The Fraternal Order, with labor backing, immediately summoned the mayor. Welfare Commissioner Mary McDowell and others to appear at the trial but when the case came up it was dismissed.

The police were fast set to hounding the blind on the streets when an alleged philanthropic organization, The Lighthouse, sought a monopoly of begging funds for the blind. Investigation showed that a large proportion of the money begged by The Lighthouse went to salaries of directors and superintendents, all of them able to see, while the blind had to work long hours for from $1 a week up. The superintendent told The Federated Press that $11 a week was plenty for the blind to live on.

Buffalo Labor Ticket Conference Sept. 9

BUFFALO, N. Y., — The Central Labor Council of Buffalo has issued a call to all local unions for a conference to take action on the question of the attitude of the trade unions in Buffalo in the political campaign which is to be held on Sept. 5

This action of the Central Labor Council was taken after local No. 84 of the Molders' Union had issued a call for a united labor ticket conference to be held on September 3rd. The decision of the Central Labor Council does not commit it to any particular line of action but simply asks all the local unions to send delegates to the conference for the purpose of discussing the coming elections and the attitude which labor should take.

After the decision of the Central Labor Council to hold such a conference, Molders' Union Local No. 84, withdrew its call for a united labor ticket conference on September 3 and gave its endorsement to the Sept. 9 conference in the following resolution;

WHEREAS: The Central Labor Council has finally agreed to call a conference for the purpose of inaugurating a more cohesive political movement of Labor; and,

WHEREAS: Confusion may now arise should we proceed with the plans to call a similar conference as we decided to do some weeks previously after the Council refused to act on our insistent demand that such a conference be called; and,

WHEREAS: Our insistence and finally our decision to call such a conference was prompted by a realization of the need for united action by Labor to take steps to wrest control of the agencies of government from the hands of the employers who today maintain undisputed control of these agencies and use them for the purpose of defeating the workers who are compelled to engage in struggle for higher wages, shorter hours and better working conditions, and,

WHEREAS: The conference now called by the Central Labor Council, can and should result in placing a United Labor Ticket in the field in the coming elections, thus unifying the forces of labor behind labor candidates; Now Therefore be it,

RESOLVED: By Local 84, International Molders' Union of N. A., that we heartily endorse the conference called by the Central Labor Council for Thursday, September 9, and be it further,

RESOLVED: That we send copies of this resolution to every local union and to the press so that all concerned may know that we have rescinded our call for a conference and do support the conference of the Central Labor Council; and be it further,

RESOLVED: That we respectfully urge every local union to send delegates to the conference called by the Central Labor Council and that these be instructed to support the proposition of placing a United Labor Ticket in the field in the coming elections.

The progressive trade unions of Buffalo will fight at the September 9 conference for the nomination of a United Labor Ticket in county and congressional elections and will not support any proposal to endorse so-called friends of labor on the old party tickets.

Chicago Needle Trades Workers Celebrate at Saturday Night Affair

It is said that every dark cloud has a silver lining. We can't vouch for it, but if this is so then the lining must have been sewed in by the needle workers with a distinct contempt for the gloomy outlook of the reactionary union officials as they contemplate with sullen eye the fourth great needle trades conference of progressives to take place soon in New York.

But you were ever on pins and needles, you know how we felt when we were trying to devise some new and original ways of entertaining you. But we have worked that all out now and have arranged for the slickest time you ever had in your life.

So when you come down next Saturday, Sept. 4th, at the Workers Lyceum 2733 Hirsch Blvd, to make merry with the rest of the needle and thread wielders, to thbread the light fantastic kindly leave your worries and troubles safely locked up in your old sewing box.

Foe of Imperialists to Send Delegate to Congress at Brussels

American representation at the Brussels world congress against oppression of colonial and semi-colonial peoples to be held in November is assured by the participation of the All-America Anti-Imperialist league, which will send a delegate.

Imperialism, torture and exploitation of backward countries and suppression of independence movements are among the evils to be considered by the congress. Many colonial and nationalist leagues in various parts of the world have arranged to be represented at Brussels.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J. — (FP)— Wage increases of 4 to 15% are asked by the Natl. Bro. of Operative Potters in conference with the U. S. Potters Assn. The agreement expires Oct. 1. John T. Wall, president of the union, from East Liverpool, Ohio, leads the union group. The union reported 8100 members last year.

GRANITE CITY, Ill.—(FP)—Despite the federal anti-picketing injunction, the strike of 500 employes of the National Stamping & Enameling Co. of Granite City is being prosecuted with vigor. Organized labor of Granite City and nearby cities is contributing liberally. The main issue is union recognition. The company is operating open shop.

GOVERNMENT SHOWS LIVING COST AVERAGES 75% HIGHER THAN 1913

WASHINGTON—(FP)—The cost of living in the United States in June, 1926, was 74.8% above 1913, according to the semi-annual report of the U. S. department of labor. This level is about 1.6% below December, 1925, but is slightly above the level of June, 1925. It is 16% below the average of 1920 when the cost of living reached a peak.

The department's figures are based on the average cost of the budget of a worker's family of five, including three children. The budget is actually that of workers relatively better paid than the average.

The increase in living costs since 1913 varies considerably. Detroit reports the greatest increase, the cost of living in that city standing 84.2% above 1913. For Portland, Ore., the increase is 54.6%. For other cities the increases are Baltimore, 78.4%; Buffalo, 84.3%; Chicago, 77.8%; Cleveland, 81.9%; Houston, 69.1%; Los Angeles, 71.2%; New York, 73.6%; Philadelphia, 80.6%; San Francisco, 60.7%.

House furnishing goods cost 110.4% above 1913. Increases in the other budget items are fuel and light, 80.7%; clothing, 68.2%; food, 69.7%; miscellaneous 103.3%. As shown in previous Federated Press articles the department tends to underestimate the advance in rents. Rents charged for worker living quarters have advanced more than the general average. For this reason it is probable that the cost of living to the average unskilled worker is considerably higher than the 74.8% over 1913 shown by the department.

A NEW NOVEL

OIL

By Upton Sinclair

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.

J. Arnold Ross is a wealthy independent California oil operator who was first Jim Ross, a taxmiter and then a merchant before he went into the oil business. Bunny, his son, is a sensitive boy, learning the oil business and now going to high school. Dad has a field on the San Elido Valley on the Watkins ranch. The Watkins family are holy rollers. Eli Watkins has became a religious fanatic with a church of his own. Bunny had met Paul Watkins when they were both much younger. He liked Paul who had run away from home because he didn't like the religious discipline imposed by his father. Paul is now a carpenter in the new Watkins field and his sister Ruth is keeping house for him. The Watkins field is really Bunny's and he has been made very wealthy thru the bringing in of a great well which has grown to fourteen derricks. In the meantime war with Germany has broken out and in the oil field under the leadership of an organizer for the Oil Workers' Union, Federation, prepare to strike for an eight-hour day and a raise in wages. Paul becomes a leader of the strikers and a battle is on between the oil workers and the Oil Operators' Association which supplies thugs and gunmen to the and receives the reports only thru the press. He is somewhat sympathetic to the strikers and doesn't believe the calumnies printed in the press about the strikers.

Bunny asked about Paul, and learned that he had been put on the strike committee, and was editing a little paper which the union was publishing; it was lovely, and had Bunny seen it? They produced a copy—a double sheet, mimeographed on both sides for economy, and with a little oil-derrick at the top of the first sheet, alongside the title, "The Labor Defender." It was full of strike news, and exhortations, and an appeal to the governor of the State against the violence of the deputies and the refusal of the sheriff to take their whiskey away; also there was a poem, "Labor Awake, by Mrs. Weenie Martin, a Tool-dresser's Wife." Paul had just got back from a trip to some of the other fields, where he had gone to persuade the men to join the strike; in Oil Center they had tried to arrest him, but he had got a tip and got away by a back road.

America was going to war, and everybody was thrilled about it; at school they were singing patriotic songs and organizing drill corps. This oil war was so little in comparison that nobody heeded it, but it got hold of Bunny, and came to seem the big war to him. All this arrogance of power, this defiance of law and decency, this miserable lying about workingmen! There Bunny got the truth, he got it face to face with the men and women whom he knew; and then he would remember the tales he had read in the newspapers—and would hate himself, because he lived upon money which had been obtained by such means! His father was paying the "assessments" of the Federation, and thus paying the salaries of these blackguards—paying for their guns and ammunition, and for the bottles of whiskey without which they would not stay!

What did it mean? What was back of it? One thing—the greed of a little ruling group of operators, who wouldn't pay their men a living wage, but would work them twelve hours a day. They were driving the men with revolvers and rifles, holding them away from the wells, their only source of livelihood, and starving them back to work on the old unfair terms. That was the story, just that simple; and here, in Ruth's little kitchen, you saw the process from the inside. The girls had to reduce the price of the bread they sold, because some people couldn't afford it otherwise! Oil-workers never do save much, because they have to move about, and to bring their families, or to send them money. And now their savings were used up, and the contributions which came from other fields were not enough, and Paul, who had been saving money to study and become a scientist, was using it to support hungry families, and Ruth and Mealie were giving all their time and even old Mrs. Watkins was helping when she could.

Bunny carried this anguish back to his father. What were the people going to do, when they no longer had food to keep alive? Dad gave the answer, they'd have to go back to work! "And lose the strike, Dad?" Yes, he said, if they couldn't win, they'd have to lose. That was the law of strikes, as of everything else. Life was stern, and sooner or later you had to learn it. They must give up and wait till a time when their union was stronger. "But, Dad, how can they make it stronger when the operators boycott them? You know how they weed out the union men—right now, if they give up, most of the companies won't take back the active ones." And Paul said he knew, that, bit the men would have to keep on trying, there was no other way. Certainly he could not support the strike by keeping his wells idle! The men must understand that he couldn't stand the gaff much longer, they had no right to expect it, they must either close the other wells, or see the Ross wells opened. And Bunny turned sort of sick inside, and went about hiding a thought like a dirty vice: "We're going to bring scabs into our tract!"

The Cloakmakers' Strike in New York

The strike of 40,000 members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union in New York is in danger. Not because of any lack of fighting spirit of the rank and file, which has shown itself willing and anxious to battle militantly for the demands necessary to the well-being of the workers and the healthy growth of the union, but because of the eager willingness of the right wing Sigman elements to compromise the struggle.

The left wing itself is not without fault, for its lack of assertiveness of its own leadership, particularly when its methods and its leadership are known to have the full support of the membership.

Developments have now reached a crisis. This is shown by the disgraceful letter written over the signatures of Morris Sigman, president of the International, and Louis Hyman, chairman of the strike committee and joint board leader, to Governor Smith of New York state.

This letter was in reply to Governor Smith's demand, practically amounting to an ultimatum backed by the full power of the state, that the garment workers go back to work and submit to compulsory arbitration. It is easy to see what the motive of this is, in view of the governor's program of "industrial peace" with which he is appealing to the capitalists for support of his presidential ambitions. Breaking strikes, by armed force or compulsory arbitration, is the bid of all reactionary aspirants for president. This is understood by all class-conscious workers.

But what was the reaction of the union leadership to this attack on the workers? The right wing Sigman group, socialists, combined with Hyman, representing the center, a leader from whom the workers had a right to expect better things, in a craven letter, full of eulogistic sweetness toward this enemy of labor and his commission that, while it rejected the immediate demand of the governor, opened the way for his further pressure upon the union to do just what was "reluctantly" declined "in our present conditions."

The left wing is apparently playing only a negative role in this affair. Its fault is in remaining too much in the background, letting the right wing, which refuses to support a militant strike policy, take the lead—to the injury of the union and the possible frustration of its demands for which the membership have put up a heroic struggle.

The lessons of the Furriers' strike could well serve as an example of reactionary leaders seeking to weaken a militant strike policy. They were defeated there, because the left wing would not allow the fighting morale of the struggle to be undermined and destroyed by Green and Frayne. And it is worthy of comment that Governor Smith's ultimatum follows in suspicious coincidence from Green's visit to Smith. The right wing's immediate surrender to the principle of compulsory arbitration and its sickening fawning of "impartial" arbitrators and outside tribunals such as the governor's commission, completes the picture.

Instead of denouncing the capitalist governor who aspires to be a capitalist president by enforcing "peace" at the expense of the garment workers, Sigman of the right wing, objectively leads to this end by applauding him and his commission, asserting "great pride" for his "keen interest" in the workers, throwing bouquets at the commission that denied every essential demand of the union, for its wisdom and "high-minded devotion" and accepting arbitration in principle.

That arbitration is declined "in our present conditions" and conferences directly with employers favored, is a half surrender, for what employer would agree in conference to the terms of the union when the way is opened to trick the workers into arbitration?

That Hyman, who covered himself with glory when he fought Sigman last year for the rights of the New York membership, should allow himself to be made use of by the compromising right wing in this shady maneuver, is a matter for sharp criticism by the fighting garment workers of New York who have a right to demand that he correct his mistake and look to them for support in so doing—where support must be mutual, and cease to lean upon the discredited Sigmanites, whose strength lies only in duplicity, intrigue and the weakening of the strike.

As for the left wing, it must take a lesson, as stated above, from the Furriers' strike. Only the left wing, this latest development shows, can be trusted to lead the union in struggle. Only the left wing can express in action the fighting spirit of the workers, to whom they can and should appeal for full authority to lead the strike from now on until victory.

There is nothing weak in the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union except the leadership. The strike has so far been successful despite the compromises of the right wing. The left wing must take control and lead the strike to victory. We are confident the membership will back them up to the hilt.

Mexico Makes it Snappy

The government of Nicaragua, which is a subsidiary of the House of Morgan, protested to the league of nations that Mexico gave aid and comfort to the revolutionaries who are just now making things torrid for those who run Nicaragua in the interests of American imperialism.

In due time the league of nations notified Mexico of Nicaragua's protest and the Mexican foreign minister won the world's championship in diplomatic brevity when he sent the following cablegram to Sir Eric Drummond, British secretary of Great Britain's league:

"Referring to your telegram of August 25, I have the honor to state that Mexico has no foreign relations with the league, but I thank you for your attention—Suenz, foreign minister."

We are ready to bet big money at odds that Sir Eric dropped a perfectly good monocle on the polished floor of the league headquarters at the same time ejaculating with raised eyebrows: "My word!" when he read this astounding telegram.

We are also willing to risk our reputation for political precocity on the assertion that this is one action of the Mexican government that will not cause displeasure at Paul Smith's.

WHY DOES GREEN INVESTIGATE?

Left Wing Leadership Wins a Strike—Smashes Employers' Attack on Fur Workers—Green, Frayne and Company Fails to Save the Bosses—Green Orders Hostile Probe—Union Membership Supports Left Leaders

THE DAILY WORKER has previously published the letter of the New York Joint Board of the Furriers' Union to William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, expressing surprise and protest against the so-called "investigation" ordered by the A. F. of L. executive council of the successful general strike conducted by the Joint Board against the employers, in which the union won a remarkable number of demands, among them the 40-hour week, by militant strike action.

We now give in continuation the following correspondence, the letter of Green to the Joint Board and finally, again protesting the unprecedented action of the A. F. of L. proceeding upon a hostile investigation because the union won a strike. Green's letter follows:

Mr. Ben Gold, Manager,
Joint Board Furriers' Union,
New York, New York.

Dear Sir and Brother: I herewith reply to your letter of August 5. It is difficult to reconcile your expression of surprise and astonishment over the appointment of a committee, by authority of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, for the purpose of making an investigation into the internal affairs of the International Fur Workers' Union, when you take into consideration the fact that you knew that such an injunction would be made.

At a conference held at the Hardiman Hotel on or about April 15 at which the officers of the International Fur Workers' Union, yourself and other representing the general strike committee of the Fur Workers' Union met, Sell and Brother Hugh Frayne representing the American Federation of Labor, were present. It was definitely understood that after the strike activities involved thousands of fur workers, and as such was of such a character as to necessitate the investigation into the internal affairs of the International Fur Workers' Union, that it would be made by a committee representing the American Federation of Labor.

The representatives of the American Federation of Labor participating in the conference to which reference is made, referred upon the request of you as member of the Joint Board of Furriers' Union and the officers of the International Fur Workers' Union, as well as your associates, as well as the officers of the International Fur Workers' Union acquiesced in the proposal that an investigation be made.

It is obvious that you knew that after the strike was over this investigation would be made, that it would be made by a committee representing the American Federation of Labor and that all the allegations and charges made by the contending factions were to be investigated and for the good

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

NOW that Mussolini has abolished elections, our bourgeois admirers of the great man may alter their hitherto exalted opinion of him. Excepting old Art Brisbane who would excuse Benito for any act of violence except suicide. The American capitalists can get along very nicely without a dictatorship yet. And even those that would like it now, find too many obstacles in the way. As long as Mussolini confined himself to crucifying the working class he was a brilliant statesman. But the goddess of capitalist democracy must not be dallied thus willing to be teased.

THE story of Mussolini's latest daily edict came on the heels of a story of a workman who was given ten months in prison for participating in a strike. Being used to work on the outside the fascist judges gave him hard labor on the inside. We observe right here that William Green, president of the A. F. of L. has not urged the Coolidge administration to withdraw recognition from the Mussolini government on the ground that it is a dictatorship. Oh no! Wall Street is setting along very nicely with Mussolini. And William Green is getting along very nicely with Wall Street.

WHILE on this subject it may be in order to call attention to the growing coolness of the A. F. of L. chiefs towards Mexico. This changed attitude must not be entirely attributed to the influence of the catholic church in A. F. of L. councils. Rather should we look for an explanation to the disappointment of Wall Street with the Calles administration. The high hopes once entertained of Calles by the House of Morgan have been badly bent, and William Green follows the general orientation of the House of Morgan as a tail follows his dog.

NO doubt Wall Street expected the Pan-American Federation to be very useful in its plan to subjugate the South American working class and successfully inoculate them with the virus of class-collaboration, which is simpler and more effective language is the theory that the best interests of the workers can be served by a policy of helping the boss extract the maximum profit out of his business, so that he can afford to give the worker higher wages. That might work out alright in some future era when tigers shed their stripes and their claws and pole cats exude eau de cologne. Instead of something else.

THOSE things have not come to pass. The Calles administration is fighting on two fronts, against the catholic church in Mexico and against American imperialism. It is a power ful combination. The A. F. of L. bureaucrats being committed to the policy of helping the boss become richer at the expense of the toilers does not like this situation in Mexico and fears that its influence over the workers south of the Rio Grande is almost nil. The Mexican workers are socialistically inclined and craw

WEISBORD TO SPEAK AT I. L. D. RALLY

HYMAN SPEAKS OUT AGAINST ARBITRATION

Warns Bosses, Direct Dealing or Nothing

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK CITY, Sept. 2. — A bitter reply was made last night by Louis Hyman, chairman of the general committee of 40,000 striking cloakmakers, to attacks by Henry Finder, chairman of the Manufacturers' Industrial Council, on the eve of a series of conferences called by Governor Smith to end the two months' tieup of the garment industry.

Won't Fall Into Trap.

Hyman charged Finder, in statements yesterday in the press, with interpreting Smith's calling of these conferences as a foredoomed failure, which would be welcome to the Industrial Council as paving the way to enforced arbitration. Hyman again reiterated the union's position that it will not refer its demands in the present controversy to arbitration.

His statement follows:

"Finder's attacks which he makes against the union just prior to going into conference called by Raymond V. Ingersoll at the request of Governor Smith, serves to indicate that Industrial Council leaders will participate without the object of reaching an understanding with the union, stubbornly insisting upon accepting but one of the union's demands.

"These manufacturers take this position because they infer from Governor Smith's letter that, when they disagree with us on every point and the conferences break up, the governor will compel us to refer the entire dispute to arbitration.

"From this viewpoint, the governor's letter is a hindrance instead of a help in reaching some sort of an understanding. The union will not refer our demands to arbitration.

"We would like the leaders of the Industrial Council to know this before the conference begin."

Finder Lies.

"Finder's accusation that the union has, in sig strikes, worked hand in hand with jobbers against legit manufacturers, is absolutely false and without foundation. We have, on several occasions, and we want to repeat this here, stated that the majority of the present jobbers were manufacturers, many of them were members of the Protective Association which, since reorganized is now the Industrial Council. It was then that the Protective Association, as now the Industrial Council, which fought against the union and attempted thru every means to lower workers' standards. Because thru the system of jobbing and sub-contracting, they are able to bring these evil conditions about, the system was developed.

"The same procedure is still employed. We see no difference between the jobbers and the Industrial Council when the union demands that jobbers be responsible for the conditions of the workers. They work hand in hand and are fighting to defeat the union and thereby render the workers de-

LABOR UNION OF VENEZUELA CABLES CALLES

Supports Mexico in Fight With Church

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Sept 2 — The Venezuelan Labor Union, which has its headquarters in Brooklyn at 4 Willoughby street, owing to the white terror of the present government of Venezuela which is united to the catholic church, and crushes the labor unions with prison and death has published in its organ, thereto titled "Free Labor," the following announcement concerning its stand in support of the Mexican government:

"Concerning the patriotic and sensible attitude observed by General Plutarco Elias Calles, president of Mexico in enforcing in an admirable manner the respect due to the fundamental laws of the nation, the executive committee of the Venezuelan Labor Union, in its regular assembly voted unanimously to send to the head of the Mexican government the following cablegram:

"President Plutarco Elias Calles, Mexico, D. F. The Venezuelan Labor Union applauds your energetic attitude in defense of the laws of the nation. Signed, M. Flores Cabrera, President."

STRIKE LEADER WILL SPEAK AT I. L. D. MEETING

Annual Conference to Open Sunday Morning

Albert Weisbord, leader of the Passaic textile strike, will attend the second annual conference of International Labor Defense and speak at the mass meeting in Ashland Auditorium on Monday, September 6. A telegram to this affect was received from Weisbord by the national office of I. L. D. today.

Indicted Several Times.

For over seven months, Albert Weisbord served the Passaic textile workers as their leader and organizer, imparting to them his enthusiasm and fortitude in the face of brutal persecution by the police and the bosses' judiciary.

Because of his unflinching determination to lead the textile workers to victory, Weisbord was singled out for more arrests and indictments on false charges than any of the other strike organizers. He is even now at liberty only on bail running into tens of thousands of dollars and has a number of indictments hanging over his head.

"The name of Weisbord is now well known thruout the entire land and his presence at the conference and the mass meeting which follows it on the evening of September 6, at the Ashland Auditorium, will be an event of great interest.

Cline to Speak.

The mass meeting on September 6 will also be addressed by other well known figures in the labor movement. Charles Cline, for whose freedom from a Texas prison hundreds of American labor organizations have taken a favorable stand, is coming from the South whence he was just released after serving a thirteen year term with the other Texas martyrs, to speak at the conference and the mass meeting.

Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, who has fought in the front ranks of the labor movement for years, and who took a leading part in organizing the Passaic textile strike, will also speak at the conference and mass meeting. James P. Cannon, secretary of International Labor Defence, C. E. Ruthenberg, secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party, himself awaiting a supreme court decision on his case, and Dr. J. J. Peters, third assistant president general of the International Seamen Improvement Association, complete the list of speakers.

The conference is to open promptly at 10 o'clock Sunday morning, Sept 5, and there is already every indication that it will be a successful one, and certain to stimulate the work of united labor defense in the coming period. The national office of International Labor Defense expects an attendance of between two and three hundred delegates at the conference.

Cannon to Report.

The first day's session will be taken up with a three and detailed report on the past work and future tasks of I. L. D. by its secretary, James P. Cannon. Weisbord, Cline, Flynn, Ruthenberg, Peters and others will address the conference on that day.

The second day of the conference will be occupied with detailed discussion of the experiences of the past year and the drafting of plans for future organizational work. Local secretaries from all parts of the country will occupy the floor at the second day's session with discussion of experiences and plans for the practical work of the next year.

The mass meeting for Weisbord, Flynn, Cline, Ruthenberg, Cannon and Peters takes place in the same building, the Ashland Auditorium, at eight in the evening of Sept. 6.

RAILROAD BROTHERHOODS AND MARINE TRANSPORT UNIONS OF U. S. TO AID BRITISH MINERS

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Sept. 2.—Bearing the written pledge of support of the 21 standard American railroad and marine transportation unions, Ben Tillett, British transport leader and member of parliament, sailed for home on the Barangaria after a month's tour of American labor centers as chairman of the visiting British Miners' Relief Committee. The text of the resolution of support and the appeal for funds that the American railroad unions signed together was made public by Tillett. It reads as follows:

TO THE RAILROAD WORKERS OF AMERICA:

A million British coal miners, with their backs to the wall, are heroically fighting for a living wage and decent working conditions.

They have been locked out for 16 weeks. During all that time they have withstood the assaults of the mine owners backed by a reactionary government which seems determined to scrap many of the rights and privileges enjoyed by Englishmen since Magna Charta.

A finer exhibition of pluck and bulldog determination to resist injustice is not recorded in the history of the labor movement. The union's treasury is empty, the miners' savings wiped out, their credit exhausted. They and their wives and little ones are facing starvation, but they refuse to quit. These marvelous coal diggers know how to die but they do not know how to surrender.

Their fellow workers in Britain have given to the limit of their resources, but as a result of the recent general strike, their financial condition is precarious. The trade unionists of Continental Europe have contributed generously of their meager earnings, every penny representing genuine sacrifice.

It is clear, however, that if the miners are to win, America must come forward with substantial sums. Therefore, as executives of Associated Railroad Labor Organizations, we are issuing this appeal to our members in the United States and Canada.

We hope you will give as generously as your circumstances will permit

Passaic Union to Get 8,000 Under Charter; Withdraw Mill Police

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Sept. 2.—Charter for Local 1603, United Textile Workers of America, has been turned over by the union to the Passaic local formed by striking wool textile workers. Already 3,400 signed applications from strikers have been accepted by the U. T. W. and 4,000 more are being certified as signed.

Thomas F. McMahon, U. T. W. president, has agreed to preside at the demonstration in Passaic over the admission of the strikers to the American Federation of Labor union. Special police guarding Garfield mills are to be removed by the city council. The council informed the mill owners that the cost of the service to them was $700 a week.

MADISON, Wis., Sept. 2.—Characterizing "foolishly false" Senator Lenroot's statement that the recent edition of Labor circulated in Wisconsin asking for his defeat, had cost $30,000, Edward Keating, manager of the publication, today wired Senator Reed of Missouri, to immediately convene the senatorial investigating committee "to refute the canard."

"He said the edition had cost less than $5,000 and that the entire expense had been contributed by the "organized railway workers."

By W. FRANCIS AHERN, Federated Press Staff Correspondent.

SYDNEY, Australia.—The Australian labor party and the organized industrial workers in Australia are engaged in a hot campaign against the referendum proposals put forward by the federal anti-labor government to secure a closer control over the unions.

The first of the two proposals is that the government should have, among other things, power to create, regulate, control and dissolve corporations

R. I. Federation Backs Manville Strikers

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MANVILLE, R. I., Sept. 2.—Little signs of peace in the textile strike in this district were visible today while 100 national guardsmen continued to guard the bridge on the public highway near the Manville-Jenckes mill, scene of the murderous attacks by state troopers and deputy sheriffs upon strikers, sympathizers and bystanders.

Barbed wire entanglements and machine guns commanded the approaches to the trenches and sentries were posted beneath the bridge as fraudulent reports were spread that an attempt was to be made to dynamite the structure.

War Moves Against Labor.

Guardsmen with steel helmets, rifles and ammunition paced the beats and rolling kitchens have been brought up to cook food for the troops. In addition to the entanglements at the bridge approaches, loop-holes have been erected out of cotton bales and machine guns have been mounted on each, two at either end of the bridge and two in the center. Soldiers are constantly on duty at each parapet.

MANVILLE, R. # A. F. OF L. IS STILL SILENT ON ATTITUDE TOWARDS MEXICO

Unofficial Hint of Break With Calles Made

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MONTREAL, Sept. 2. — The executive council of the American Federation of Labor adjourned its sessions at the Mount Royal Hotel here without taking a public position on the question of the attitude of the A. F. of L. towards the situation in Mexico. There was a hint that the developments between now and the time the A. F. of L. convention convenes in Detroit in October will influence the recommendations to be made to the convention on Mexico. There is also a rumor that those who are opposed to the Calles government on religious grounds have promised a break with the Mexican Federation of Labor.

As usual, the council had nothing to disclose regarding its report to the coming convention. Officially, it was even less communicative concerning the Mexican situation.

It was learned, however, that the question, if it is raised at Detroit will not be put on a religious basis. There is a group that is opposed to a continuation of the relations between the two labor movements because, as they say, they have little in common and can benefit each other to only a negligible degree. This group, of course, has the backing of the group that opposes the Mexican labor movement on religious grounds.

On the other hand there is a large body of sentiment in support of the Pan American Union which would be practically wrecked by a falling out between the labor movements of Mexico and the United States. The advocates of maintaining the union seem to make no hesitation about putting the question on the following basis: The rapprochement between the A. F. of L. and the latin American labor movements made a beginning in the process of strengthening American influence in those countries and a break with the Mexican labor movement would shatter these relations.

PASSAIC RELIEF CONCERT IN N. Y. RAISES $15,000

Carmi Thompson Wants Government Ownership to End in Philippines

MALANGAS, Mindinao, P. I., Sept. 2.—Colonel Carmi Thompson, confidential agent of President Coolidge, inspected a rich coal mine here on which the government has spent during the last few years $2,700,000 in development work and recommended that the mine be immediately leased to some experienced and reliable private company on a fixed royalty.

Thompson said that he had seen in the Philippines government-owned coal, sugar, cement and railroad enterprises, and wanted to insure the economic progress of the country by turning them all over to private companies, as these "experiments" were one of the reasons discouraging American capital from entering the Islands.

Celebrate in Chicago Denouncing of Spanish Imperialism in Mexico

The Mexican colony in Chicago invites all well wishers to attend the celebration of the 116th anniversary of the announcement of the end of Spanish feudal imperialism in that country.

The final victory over the Spanish military despotism was not secured until eleven years after the proclamation of independence, more than a decade of hard fighting. The name people who carried thru this rebellion have an air successfully repelled all other attempts at imperialistic conquest from that day to this and will continue to resist them in the future.

The celebration will begin at 9 p. m., Sept. 15, and will be held at Ashland Boulevard Auditorium, in the main hall. There will be a program of speeches, recitations of poetry, songs, and dances in Mexican costume.

FAITH IN LABOR STIRRED BY THE PASSAIC STRIKE

Newspaper Man Urges Financial Support

PASSAIC, N. J., Sept. 2.—(FP)—Ramon Tofiuna, "Uncle Ray" of newspaper renown and author of the "Child's History of the World," has visited Passaic. He has taken time from his writing for the Publishers Syndicate of Chicago to tell what he saw in the town of the seven months' mill strike. He concludes:

Stir Faith in Workers.

"I have seen the Passaic workers in action, attended their meetings, observed their efficient and excellent relief system, talked with the young workers in whom I am especially interested, I can say without hesitation that nothing in years has stirred my faith in the workers' world as has my first-hand experience with this strike of exploited textile workers. The human brotherhood and solidarity displayed in the struggle for unionism will certainly have its effects on the unorganized workers everywhere in the other textile industries and in all American industry.

Deserve Every Support.

"Finally, I cannot see how any worker or labor sympathizer can fail to shed down deep into his pocket for strike relief for these heroic young strikers—fathers and mothers, grandmothers, grandfathers, young workers, all of them of heroic mould; all of them keenly determined in their fight for a decent living wage. The Passaic strikers are fighting the battles of every working man and woman in this country and should be backed to the limit of labor's purse.

Everyone Must Aid.

"More, in their struggle against police and court autocracy and the attempts of men like chief Zober to nullify the constitution, these striking textile workers are fighting the battles of every American who loves decent American citizenship should get behind them and back them with money and with articulate moral support in their battle against autocracy and arrogance in industry."

Local Listens in Glee as Queer Charges Fly in Right Wing Quarrel

The Wage Earners' League appeared before Local 181 of the Carpenters' union in Chicago at its last meeting, with a request that the meeting elect delegates to the League.

The Wage Earners' League is a political organization created by the right wing officials of various Chicago locals, with the leaders of the building trades in control, and its purpose is to sell at wholesale the labor vote.

Scandal Comes Out.

The progressives in Local 181 wished to send representatives, if for no other reason than to find out the details of the plan. In this ambition they were defeated, however, by the solid bloc of the right wing of the local, which to the surprise of everybody, loudly "hawled out" the right wingers in the Building Trades Council and the whole Wage Earners' League for all the sins ordinarily charged against them by progressives.

The members heard from sources not usually given to such language accusations of sectarianism, splitting the forces of the workers, backwardness, lack of interest in the cause of the workers, general treachery, trickery, and high finance on the part of conservative building trades union officials.

It was great while it lasted, say those who listened to it. Jurisdictional disputes between the carpenters and other unions were the cause.

NATIVES INVADE TANGIER TO AID GENERAL STRIKE

Officials Admit Union Sole Authority

TANGIER, Sept. 2.—The European Workers' Syndicate has declared an official general strike here, contingent on the failure of the administration and the Sultan's court to accept their demands for the eight-hour day and more freedom of speech, abolition of the laws against demonstrations, and interference with organization.

News from the country has been received that the great Fahs tribe is marching with arms into the city to see to it that their Moslem brothers, co-operating with the European workers in a strike, are not any further mistreated.

Neutral But Has Class War.

Tangier is a neutral territory, with an administration composed of the foreign consuls in the city, and individuals controlled by the Mendub, or representative of the Sultan of Morocco, who is a French feature. Native militia, on friendly terms with the European Workers' Syndicate, have frequently complained of discrimination against workers in this native court. The administration regularly supports the court in such cases.

Tangier is an important seaport, thru which much of the commerce of North Africa and the Sahara region passes. It is of military strategic importance, and the warships of England and France are assembling there in response to a deal between Spain and France by which it has the apparent purpose of turning it over to Spain. Strikes and revolts are therefore likely to attract international interest.

The only official statement to foreign news services says:

"There is undoubtably an element of Communism among the workmen, but so far the situation has not been disturbed. These repeated strikes, however, are injuring commerce and causing a growing feeling of unrest.

"The sole duty which seems able to exert any authority in Tangier is the Workers' Syndicate."

Reservations of U. S. Debated by the World Court Powers Meeting

GENEVA, Sept. 2. The battle against acceptances of the proposed reservations to the United States adhering into the world court opened today soon after the conference of jurists composing the powers signatory to the world court met here to consider the reservations.

The first two reservations proposed by the United States were accepted by the conference with little or no debate.

When the third reservation was brought up Sir George Foster, Canadian delegate, opened an attack on the reservation which was supported by several other delegates.

Sir George Foster declared that the third reservation would give the United States the right to pass upon the world court amendments which had been accepted by all other court members and this he said was "entirely unacceptable."

Doctor Van Eysynga of Holland was elected president of the conference. It was decided that all sessions would be held in public. Senator Swanson of Virginia and Representative Burton of Ohio followed the discussions from the gallery.

League Will Not Give Spain Permanent Seat; Germany Given Place

GENEVA, Sept. 2.—Spain's request for a permanent seat in the league of nations, will not be granted for the time being, at least. The reorganization committee of the league council today decided the time was "not propitious" to grant Spain's request.

Germany, which was granted a permanent seat earlier in the day, refrained from entering the discussions regarding Spain. Poland, which has been fighting for a seat in the council, also did not participate in the discussions.

CONSUL CALLS CHAMORRO PLEA 'QUITE ABSURD'

Catholic Boycott is Not Taken Seriously.

"The Chamorro complaint, to the league of nations that the Mexican army and navy are running guns into Nicaragua on auxiliary cruisers, or in any other way is absolutely ridiculous," said Luis G. Laplan, consul in Chicago for the Republic of Mexico.

Senor Laplan stated to a reporter for The DAILY WORKER that he had no direct advices from his government on the Nicaraguan situation and could only give his opinion, based on his general knowledge of affairs. He did not hesitate, however, to say matter as not only false but quite "absurd" the protests of the president of Nicaragua that Mexico was violating the neutrality of the smaller country. He does not believe that there is any warship in the Mexican service known as "Concon," the name given by Chamorro in his message to the league, as that of the naval vessel which he alleged set sail from Salina Cruz on a freebooting expedition against Nicaragua.

Ignore Chamorro.

The consul said that he saw no reason to think that the minister of foreign affairs in Mexico City, Genaro Estrada, as reported in press reports, that Mexico would ignore the Nicaraguan action.

When asked about the continued strained relations between the hierarchy of the catholic church in Mexico and the Mexican government, Senor Laplan stated that the situation was quiet, and called attention to the fact the fifth Sunday since the bishops ordered the withdrawal from the churches has now passed without any extraordinary incident. He agreed that this condition might be indefinite, but said that the longer it lasted, the worse it would be for the clergy.

Spain Renews Demand for Permanent Seat on League of Nations

GENEVA, Sept. 2.—The committee on reorganization of the league of nations council today deferred the question of Spain's demand for a permanent seat in the council.

The committee met twice and at both sessions the Spanish delegate, Senor Palacios, demanded that Spain's claim for a permanent seat be taken care of. The committee ignored these requests, however, and discussed temporary seats.

"Our demand is as old as the league itself," said Senor Palacios. He asked a detailed consideration of the Spanish demand and reasons for the rejection of the demand, if a permanent seat is not granted.

Ousting of Farrington Must Be Made Action of Rank and File of Labor

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

FRANK FARRINGTON has been suspended as president of the United Mine Workers of Illinois for signing a contract with the Peabody Coal company in become its "labor counsel" at $25,000 per year.

This action suspending Farrington was taken quickly by the miners' district executive board after the actual facts of the signing of the contract had become public property. Farrington's board members could not blink the fact that a crime had been committed against trade unionism, even as it exists today in the United States.

The question as to how far an American labor official may go in committing treason to the working class in this country has received an answer as it applies to the miners' union.

Farrington, like many other labor officials, no doubt felt that there was no limit, that the membership of the miners' union could be made to "stand for anything" on the supposition that it was "none of their business" whether he was dickering with the bosses for a soft job aside at the same time heading the miners' union.

Farrington joined with President John L. Lewis in breaking the district organizations in Kansas and Nova Scotia, helping former Governor Allen, of Kansas, of industrial court infamy, send Alex Howat to jail. Farrington shamelessly padded his expense accounts until the question became a matter of intense discussion on the floor of International miners' conventions. Farrington supported the employers' government in convicting members of the union in the frame-up at Zeigler, Illinois. He contested these and many other crimes, anyone of which should have been sufficient to drive both Lewis and Farrington out of the organization. But only part of the membership protested. The majority of the union's members remained inert, leaving its militant sections to ask,

"How long? How long?" The answer has come at last.

An effort was made, to be sure, in the executive board to save Farrington. But it was fruitless. He had to go.

But Farrington's exit was not entirely accomplished by the rank and file of the miners' organization, who will ultimately take part in the sordid details themselves, to bear out their long-standing suspicions. In fact the making public of Farrington's relations with the Peabody Coal Co. has followed a standardized play by President Lewis before the union's membership in an effort to gain some prestige for himself.

This is an old trick that has been somewhat successfully played, for a time, by reactionary officials in the miners' union in the past.

It was Tom Lewis, who succeeded John Mitchell as head of the United Mine Workers of America nearly a score of years ago, who posed as an enemy of the National Civic Federation, of which Mitchell, Sam Gompers and other reactionary "labor lieutenants" of capitalism were at that time active members. Lewis, the conservative, took up the fight against the Civic Federation, when he saw that this issue was popular in the miners' union. He secured the passage of the resolution demanding that members of the miners' union either get out of the union or out of the Civic Federation. Mitchell had to get out of the Civic Federation, quitting Gompers' company, in order to hold his card in the miners' union. Lewis, however, is now an agent of the most anti-union coal barons in the New River field in "open shop" West Virginia. Tom Lewis was merely playing politics with this issue.

Farrington is merely following in the footsteps of Tom Lewis in becoming an agent of the mine owners. This is the Farrington who made the socialist, Oscar Ameringer, editor of the miners' official organ, the Illinois Miner, under his regime. But it is just as certain that John Lewis is playing politics with Farrington's going. His fight is no more sincere than the fight of Tom Lewis before him.

The rank and file of the coal miners' union did not develop their struggle against the class collaboration schemes of the National Civic Federation, that won victories for them many years ago. They lost ground with the result that the fight must now be made all over again. William Green, the former secretary of the miners' international union, who is now head of the American Federation of Labor, in spite of his non-membership in the National Civic Federation, carries on friendly relations with the employing class interests on a much larger scale than Mitchell or Gompers ever did.

The Farrington episode, therefore, offers an opportunity to carry on this fight not only against Farrington, who Lewis would like to have it stop, but thruout the whole jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers' Union, and into all the affiliated organizations of the American Federation of Labor and the Independent labor unions.

Every worker in America must be made to feel that the fight against Farrington is a fight that Farrington stands for in the American labor movement, is his fight.

The ousting of Farrington can only be made the action of the rank and file of the miners' union if it is followed by a complete purging of the organization of all similar elements. This means President Lewis, Vice-President Phil Murray, the entire Lewis regime in all the districts and sub-districts, especially in Illinois. It means especially the complete repudiation of such tools of the Lewis regime as International Organizer Van Bittner, of the Pittsburgh district, who did the dirty work of President Lewis in attacking and expelling the militants of the organization.

CASE AND BAG MAKERS' UNION WINS MEMBERS

Get Into the Fight For Better Conditions

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Sept. 2—The organization campaign which the Suitcase, Bag and Portfolio Makers' Union has been conducting for the last few weeks has been very successful. As a result of this campaign a large number of open shops have been completely organized and several employers have already settled with the union, granting all union conditions and signing an agreement for a year's time.

Among those who settled without a strike are the prominent concerns, Lipner and Trachtenberg, 346 Canal Street, and The Reliable Suit Case Co., 1 Greene street.

"Radical" Bosses Fight Union.

Some employers, however, remain obstinate and the union was compelled to call strikes in their shops. These on strike now are Levy and Levy Suit Case and Bag shop, 138 Mercer street which employs about 50 workers, and The Olympic Suit Case Co., 120 Wooster street.

The employers of the last named concern have a reputation of being so-called "radicals," yet that doesn't prevent them from discharging union members without right or reason. The workers of those shops are determined to strike until they will win complete union shops and better working conditions.

The union is now negotiating with several other concerns where workers have lately been organized and hopes to arrive at peaceful settlements with these concerns.

Time to Organize.

The fall season in our trade is now getting into full swing and it is therefore of the utmost importance for the workers in the nonunion shops not to lose any time but immediately to set into line and be ready to fight if necessary for better conditions.

The union therefore strongly urges all the nonunion workers to attend this mass meeting and demonstrate their unity with the union members and their determination to obtain for themselves a better and decent livelihood in our trade.

SOCIALISTS, FARMER-LABORITES PRACTICALLY OUT OF ELECTION; WORKERS PARTY GOING STRONG

By CARL HAESSLER.

CHICAGO—(FP)—Opposition to the Republican-Democratic parties is almost at a minimum in labor ranks as the national congressional campaign begins to pick up momentum. Socialists and states that formerly boasted of persistent, often successful independent political activity, organized at some form of labor party, are this year falling down. Others are putting up half-hearted fights or even predicting defeat.

Milwaukee, the banner city of the Socialist party, looks like a losing handhold for Victor L. Berger, who is fighting for reelection to congress on the Socialist ticket. His public statement that Wisconsin workers prefer Sen. Lenroot, the Coolidge reaction spy, to his rival Gov. Blaine, who has LaFollette's indorsement, has alienated Milwaukee followers and the 100 votes by which he won in 1921 may be lost on November 2.

Chicago never expected to send a Socialist or independent Progressive to congress, but this year the Progressive party threw away a perfectly good chance to enter the Illinois legislature with a candidate when it neglected to check up on residence qualifications.

St. Louis, long a Socialist center of importance, is not putting up any candidates on that ticket this year. G. W. Hoehn, the party leader, states that under present apathy "it would be folly on the part of the Socialist party to make itself ridiculous by conducting a political work of propaganda and organization."

In Washington state, which was a coming Farmer-Labor power in 1920, the Progressive party chairman, Otto A. Case, says the party will not file any candidates because of the failure of the national party to call a national convention this year. Case urges progressive voters to "support earnestly the Progressive candidates, regardless of party designation."

The Workers (Communist) party announces from its national headquarters in Chicago that it is prepared to run candidates for congress in almost 50 districts. Where Farmer-Labor parties are organized with a ticket in the field the Workers party will support them, it declares.

DENY RESPITE FOR MADEROS— BLOW AT SACCO

Gov. Fuller Refuses Stay of Execution

By S. D. LEVINE
(Special to The Daily Worker)

BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 2.—Governor Fuller of Massachusetts yesterday denied a request for a respite of the execution of Celestino Maderos, condemned to die the week of Sept. 9th on a murder charge. The request was made by William G. Thompson, attorney for Sacco and Vanzetti, whose motion for a new trial for the latter defendants is based on a confession made by Maderos that he, with members of a notorious gang, committed the robbery and murder at South Braintree, Mass., for which Sacco and Vanzetti have been condemned to die.

Hearing Sept. 15.

The hearing on the Maderos confession is set for Sept. 15. Thompson insisted that his request be granted in order to have Maderos testify at the hearing in person on that date. The arguments between Thompson and the governor became quite heated at times as Fuller flatly refused to grant a respite unless the request comes from Judge Thayer, the presiding judge in the Sacco and Vanzetti case.

Attorney General Quibbles.

When the governor told Thompson to apply to Judge Thayer for this recommendation, Thompson replied that early in June Thayer had agreed with Attorney General Dolbeir to ask for a respite for Maderos. This the attorney general did not do. Now Devlin denies after making such a statement.

Impossible Request.

Fuller then called on Thompson to have his hearing Sept. 1, today. Thompson replied it was a human impossibility to prepare the data in that short time. Fuller repeated his refusal and said again that recommendation must come from Judge Thayer.

Thompson is emphatic in his declaration that a confession from Maderos, made at the hearing, would completely exonerate Sacco and Vanzetti.

War Specter Stalks in Balkans Again

Here is a map of the troubled areas in the Balkans and an inset of King Boris of Bulgaria. Bulgaria is the seat of the trouble this time. War neighbors, Jugo-Slavia, Roumania and Greece have been busily occupied sending notes back and forth with particular reference to border invasions made by Bulgarian irregulars. In all this Balkan mess that may cause a war to break out any minute the intriguing hand of the great western powers is always apparent.

Organization of Negroes Imperative

"If the Negro of the south remains unorganized, he will continue to suffer from the extra long hours and extra low pay he has at present. Some of the old generation may continue to live on a farm—workers with no pay to speak of. They may be satisfied with the conditions that allow the landlords to take over the whole cotton crop of tenant farmers by a single process of mathematical computation: 'A nought is a nought, and a figure is a figure; all for the white man and none for the nigger.'

Negro Youth Revolts.

"But the young men leaving the farms and going into industry will not forever endure wages and conditions built around this theory. They will migrate to the north and compete on a lower standard of living with the workers already here."

"The other thing that can happen is that the Negro workers of the south shall be organized. If they are, they will be satisfied where they are, for their union activity will bring conditions and wages there up to the standard in the north, instead of only about two-thirds of that standard as at present.

No Color Bar.

President Morton emphasizes the fact that the Firemen and Oilers' union has absolutely no bar on the grounds of race, creed or color.

A beginning is already being made to enthuse the mass of roundhouse laborers and oilers on the bigger railroads of the south with a consciousness of their need of the union. About 65 per cent, according to the estimate of President Morton, of the men who work in the crafts organized by his union are Negroes. The roads of the south on which the battle will be first fought out are the Seaboard Line, the L. and A., and the Mobile and Ohio

Prejudice Hinders.

The union's task in the southern states is not easy, because of the bitter prejudice existing. However, even this prejudice is not as bad as it used to be, says Morton. There was a time when any organizer seen soliciting a Negro worker to enter the union would have been ostracized if not worse. Even now most of the organizing is done under the federated councils in the towns, and they make up committees, which go about in a body, not man by man." It is slower work to organize always in force this way, but it is a lot safer in the south. If it is Negroes you wish to get into the union. Yet the Negro must be brought into the labor unions, or he will be a constant danger to standards of living and present wages. He has been neglected too long already.

General Reorganization.

The Firemen and Oilers' union takes part in the organization drive decided upon by the last meeting of the Railway Department of the American Federation of Labor. There are 29 organizers out, scattered about the country.

New contracts have been made since the drive started with important railroad companies, including the Northwestern, the Baltimore and Ohio, and the Chesapeake and Ohio. Negotiations are now going on with the New York Central, and the officers of the union expect to have an announcement to make to the members before long that they have been successfully concluded.

Union Reduces Hours.

According to President Morton the most important gain in the new series of contracts is the cutting down of the working day. Under the old conditions the men worked any number of hours from eight to eleven-nine and ten hour days being frequent. The nature of the work is such that emergencies do arise in which overtime is justified, but the union won the basic eight hour day and the right to time and a half pay for overtime, it has been observed that the companies put on more men and overtime does not occur nearly as often as before.

End Jurisdiction Dispute.

The Firemen and Oilers have now been granted jurisdiction over the roundhouse laborers, who had been for some time a bone of contention between this union and the Maintenance of Way employes' union. Now all workers in and immediately about roundhouses who carry away debris and move cinders are to join the Firemen and Oilers, and many of them have recently done so.

During the 1922 strike the Firemen and Oilers had about 35,000 men out. The present campaign is a reassembling of forces after the great conflict.

Birmingham Street Car Company in Open Shop Drive on Timid Union

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 2.—The contract between the Birmingham Electric company and the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Empoyes of America expires today and the company is refusing to meet any of the terms demanded by the union.

The union has retreated time and again in the discussions, surrendering demend after demand, and is now agreeing to the company's demand for a three-year contract instead of a one-year contract, if the company will only arbitrate, not grant, the wage demands, which are exceptionally low.

The union proposes that the so-called "Memphis award" be the basis of the arbitration it proposes. This "award" fixes the scale of first-year men at 47½ cents an hour, second-year men at 52½ cents and third-year men at 57½ cents.

But the company is refusing even to arbitrate this ridiculously low scale demand, and as usual declares that it is too "poor" to pay any increase "without increasing the fare." It earned over $1,000,000 profit last year, it is evident that the company is planning an open shop attack to destroy the union, and the union's timid policy of continuous retreat has only served to encourage the company to attack.

Rubber Companies Not Exactly Impoverished

CLEVELAND, O., Sept. 2.—Three rubber concerns domineer the rubber situation: Goodyear, Goodrich and U. S. Rubber. The first half of the year has been one of high sales for those three companies, even if their profits were somewhat lowered. In the first six months of this year Goodyear sold $116,000,000 worth of goods, U. S. Rubber $100,000,000, Goodrich $67,000,000 worth. Their profits were $4,014,873; $4,915,668 and $1,358,616, respectively. This is less than last year, for the companies earned $6,011,407, $5,878,204 and $7,106,616, respectively.

Robbers Empty House.

Virtually an empty house greeted Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Schaak when they returned from their vacation at Green Lake, Wis. During their absence burglars had carted away furniture, rugs, clothing, silverware and jewelry, valued, Mr. Schaak said, at $10,000. Schaak is a wealthy grain broker.

CALLES SAYS CHURCH LAWS WILL STAY PUT

Nods Diplomatists to Oil Magnates

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 2. — President Calles in his message to congress yesterday, reiterated his previous stand on the church question. The government, he said would not recede from its determination to combat the clergy to obey the laws of the land.

He charged the catholic church with having always been in rebellion against the institutions of the republic and with having seized upon the present moment as being most propitious for carrying out their schemes.

Answered U. S. Protests.

Calles dealt with the protests made by the American government against the laws which affected the interests of American petroleum magnates.

"The Mexican government answered by sustaining the right to issue said laws and regulations" said the president "but only because the regulations were ordered by the constitution, but because their enactment and enforcement could not affect rights legitimately acquired."

Ready To Change.

Calles hinted however that he would be ready to introduce motions for the modification of those laws in accordance with the constitution. This was taken as a suggestion that a continuation of the policy of "diplomatic pressure" by the Washington administration might be conducive to better results for the petroleum magnates than armed intervention.

A Place of Diplomacy.

Mexican government officials see in Calles' suggestions along this line a piece of strategy designed to disarm ambassador Sheffield who is scheduled to present his views on the Mexican situation one of these days. It is believed that Sheffield favors more forceful methods than have been hitherto used, but Coolidge is said to prefer more subtle tactics. Both have the same aims; the subjugation of Mexico in the interests of American imperialism.

Hyman Speaks Out Against Arbitration

lessness in the future, as they were in the past.

"In reply to Finder's challenge that union leaders are expressing their own opinion and not the opinion of the members in refusing to accept arbitration, we inform him that our members have discussed this question both in shop chairmen's meeting and at meetings in halls. They have unanimously rejected the suggestion to refer our dispute to arbitration.

"While we have not been at all times and under all circumstances opposed in principle to arbitration, in this case, however, after a commission has studied the various needs of the industry for which we are striking and has been unable to reach a satisfactory solution, what sense is there in accepting new arbitrators who shall again consider our demands. Our problems are so varied and the evils from which cloakmakers suffer characteristic of the industry, it is difficult and almost impossible for an arbitrator to analyze and resolve these different problems.

"After our workers have been on strike two months we are fighting for just demands in order to enable them to earn a livelihood, we would betray our workers if we sent them to work and shop their future to an arbitrator, no matter who he may be.

"The strike must and can be settled between leaders of the unions and employers. If the leaders of the Industrial Council are in earnest and want to end the present strife, they must realize this, because, after all, our members are not impossible."

A meeting of striking shop chairmen originally scheduled for Thursday afternoon was held Wednesday morning so that the strike situation before union leaders went into conference with Mr. Ingersoll.

Rubber Workers of Akron Hold Picnic

(Special to The Daily Worker)

AKRON, Ohio, Sept. 2. — The Mellorate Club of Akron, which is the organization of the rubber workers, held its first picnic on Sunday, Aug. 26. This is the first attempt of the rubber workers to get together and to come out into the open. The picnic was a success. The arrangements committee succeeded in getting Albert F. Coyle, editor of the Locomotive Engineers' Journal of Cleveland, to speak.

ATHEISTS ORGANIZE TO WRENCH NATION'S YOUTH FROM GRIP OF CLERGY THRU JUNIOR ATHEIST BODY

The organized atheists of this country have launched a campaign to capture the youth of the nation, according to a statement issued yesterday by Charles Smith, president of the American Association for the Advancement of Atheism, 49 Vasey St., this city. Mr. Smith announced the formation of the Junior Atheist League, a subsidiary organization for children between the ages of seven and seventeen, with Christine Walker of Gap, Pa., as the national secretary.

Failed to Reach Young.

"The anti-religious movements of the past have had but meager success because they failed to convert the rising generation," he said. "There will possibly be bitter opposition to the Junior Atheist League, even among some liberals who favor proselyting adults; but we realize that unless steps are taken to prevent the church from instilling its superstition into the plastic mind of youth, atheists will always be in the minority. This children's crusade is intended to counteract the influence of Sunday schools and religious instruction in public schools, and defeat the persistent efforts of the clergy to gain control of our boys and girls."

League's Program.

A printed announcement of the association reads in part:

"In response to many requests for increased activity among young people, the Junior Atheist League is established. Godless children shall have an opportunity to emancipate their companions from unreasonable religion.

Clerical Influence.

"The league will remove boys and girls from the evil influence of the clergy. It will encourage them to protest against Bible reading and religious worship in public schools and agitate against religious instruction during school hours. Children shall be told the truth about the Bible and christianity. The magical, animistic, and phallic, or sexual, origins of religion will be explained in simple language.

A comprehensive program has been arranged. Picnics and outings, clean and healthful good times, will take the place of stultifying Sunday schools. Fellowship and solidarity will be promoted among members and friendships made for the future. A special course for those over twelve years of age will be given in public speaking by a man who has been called one of the few great orators of the century.

Supervise Instruction.

"Monthly lessons will be mailed. Educators in the A. A. A. A. will supervise the instruction. Morality based on the speculations of ancient Asiatic theology. These lessons will be printed in large quantities for distribution by locals in recruiting members. As soon as 5,000 members are enrolled the first monthly lesson will be mailed.

"Dues are 25 cents a year, barely sufficient to pay postage. Contributions are coming in from members of the American Association for the Advancement of Atheism for this important part of its work. All anti-clericals are urged to solicit memberships and form locals, especially in schools. Miss Christina Walker, national secretary, a sixteen-year-old Atheist of exceptional executive ability, is waiting to hear from young atheists and their parents. Correspondence should be addressed to Miss Walker, Let the social and cultural features begin at once.

"Send in list of students and pupils in your locality to be circularized. Any member of the 4A society desiring a supply of this leaflet for distribution may secure it by writing to Freeman Hopwood, general secretary, P. O. Box 483, City Hall Station, New York, N. Y."

More than one thousand workers benefited by the case. This happened in Shanghai. The strikers are living by that Wu Pei Fu told Uncle Tuc Lin are not in the vicinity else their heads would be decorating a lot of poles by now. Unless the famine workers and peasants get rid of their war lords and the foreign imperialists before those lads have a chance of staking a come-back, it won't be so interesting for them later on.

WE have wounded the feelings of some subscribers by our facetious but well intentioned comment on Rudolph Valentino's death. No doubt, as one of our readers repeats in agreement with our movie critic, Valentino was a relief and a way of escape but so is a well beer and hasheesh. One of our principal occupations is the debunking of things in general and if a reader detects a little of the same commodity in The DAILY WORKER he or she is at liberty to write us about it. Should Charlie Chaplin happen to die this column will throw a fit of real regret, not because Charlie is a social rebel, if he is, he is quite a hand at keeping it secret, but there is intelligence in his work, and personality which is more than can be said for ninety nine per cent of screen actors.

including trade unions. This means that if the proposal is endorsed by the electors that the government would have power to deal with the unions in drastic fashion. It could put the emissaries into the union offices, take possession of their books, interfere in their internal affairs, dissolve the elected officials of the unions and hold several ballots of members on questions which the government itself would frame.

Under such a regime of surveillance the introduction of spies into the unions would undoubtedly follow and the entire fabric of unionism would very soon be honeycombed with suspicion, distrust and carefully-fermented dissension.

The second proposal is that the government should be empowered to introduce legislation to protect the interests of the public in the event of an actual or probable interruption of any essential service. This is also aimed at the workers. Under this proposal the government is seeking to get legislation on the same lines as that introduced in the house of commons during the recent British general strike.

The government then could, in the event of a strike, organize strikebreaking units on an extensive scale, enter the homes of the workers without warrants, arrest union officials and throw them into jails, prevent free speech, call out the troops to shoot down the strikers and their sympathizers and even conscript the strikers and force them back to work at the point of the bayonet.

Racist Censorship.

WELLINGTON, New Zealand.—The United Mine Workers' Union of New Zealand has invited all unions in that country to organize a nation-wide protest against the government's action in banning from New Zealand all working-class literature. It is demanded that all working literature should be allowed free entry into the country, seeing that it is absolutely necessary for the education of the workers.

Stop Internal Dispute.

SYDNEY, Australia. — Something like finality has been reached in the domestic feud that for two years has been existing in the Seamen's Union. It has been decided to take a fresh ballot of members for the various positions in the union. All present officials who are contesting the ballot have to retire from their positions. It is hoped that the ballot will clear up all the trouble in the union.

Fighting Night Baking.

WELLINGTON, New Zealand.—Night baking of bread is still in operation thruout New Zealand and the bakers and pastrycooks and related trades employes' union in that country is now demanding that it be abolished. An appeal to the government met with the usual reply that the matter "would be considered," but the union, not being satisfied with that kind of reply, is now trying a little direct action on the job.

In short, the ratification of these two proposals would mean the crippling of the labor movement, politically and industrially, the inauguration of a system of industrial conscription and the ultimate destruction of unionism, and the subjection of the workers of Australia to the slavery of a judicial dictatorship. It is agreed such a monstrous possibility that the workers of Australia are today lined up in deadly opposition to the federal government's proposal.

Try Company Union.

SYDNEY, Australia.—An organization known as the Coastal Seamen's and Firemen's Association was refused registration as a union by the industrial registrar of New South Wales on the ground that the various ship owners had co-operated with the organization to bring it into operation, and that applicants were approved by them before they could be admitted as members. The evidence given before the registrar established a control over the union by the employers so that the organization was not genuinely representative of its employes.

More Solidarity.

WELLINGTON, New Zealand.—The United Mine Workers' Union of New Zealand has sent out a call to all other unions in that country for a conference to bring about closer unity in the trades union movement of New Zealand. It is suggested that there should be a general trade union council to deal with all matters for improving the status of the workers, including adequate housing facilities, a weekly minimum wage of $27.50, the arbitration of the workers' compensation act, and a 44-hour week. It is further suggested that the conference be held at Wellington on August 2.

Appropriating Mines.

WELLINGTON, New Zealand.—New Zealand Labor Leader H. E. Holland has introduced into the parliament a coal mines bill for the general control of the mining industry, to be vested in a council comprising four government members, and four elected by the union of mine workers. Such coal mines as the council decides to appropriate will be deemed state mines, a board of three members representing the government, owners and unions respectively will be appointed to assess and purchase the price of which the appointed will be payable in a bond issue with a currency of 25 years.

Prevent Wage Cut.

SYDNEY, Australia. — A move is on foot by trades unionists to force the employers to give 44 hours' pay for 44 hours' work. The cut from 44 to 44 per week has failed. The printers threatened a general strike and at the last minute the employers signed a new agreement. The workers must organize and prepare to fight against any wage cut.

Capitalism Claims Life of Comrade John Olson Killed While on Train

OMAHA, Nebr., Sept. 2.—Word has just been received that the greed of the profit system has taken one of our most active comrades. Comrade John Olson was killed by a railroad train at Elmhurst, Ill., last Wednesday while beating his way to Chicago from Omaha. This comrade was one of the most exploited victims of the capitalist system, the unskilled, itinerant worker who does the "dirty" work for the poorest pay.

He had been working as a dishwasher in Omaha restaurants during the past year at from $6 to $8 a week. There is practically no organization among restaurant employes, altho our comrade tried to interest those workers into joining a union. Ground down by the exploiters, he was compelled to steal the ride he was unable to pay for, and thus the juggernaut that had oppressed him finally crushed his life out.

Comrade Olson had been a member of the I. W. W. for years and had taken part in free speech fights on the coast. He joined the party about six months ago and soon after joined the Cooks' and Waiters' Union. He was devoted to the movement and never lost an opportunity to carry the message to the masses. He was born in Sweden, was 35 years of age and had no relatives in this country.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Sept. 2. — On Labor Day, Monday, Sept. 6th, the Workers Party of Pittsburgh will celebrate the seventh anniversary of the Workers Party with a grand picnic at Gajdn Farm, Cheswick, Pa., where the big July 4th picnic was held.

An extensive program has been arranged for including dancing, games, speaking and plenty of food. Admission, fifty cents for men, ladies free.

Workers Party in K. C. Observes Anniversary

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Sept 2.— The seventh anniversary of the party was celebrated at a picnic held at Bales' Lake and was a success in spite of the fact that it rained twice before the day was over. In the oak grove the young comrades played games while Stanley Clark organizer of the Young Pioneers of Kansas City, Kansas, group meeting held at Northwest Hall, Wednesday night.

Manuel Gomez, secretary of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League, addressed the meeting, pointing out how the executive council of the A. F. of L. has played false to obligations specifically contracted, not only with the Mexican labor movement but with the Calles government as well.

"President Green's hypocritical proclamation of 'neutrality' toward the Mexican workers in struggle," said the speaker, "is bound to have an important effect on the future of the so-called Pan-American Federation of Labor. The Pan-American Federation of Labor was a favorite child of Samuel Gompers. Now Green and Woll have taken it up as an instrument of their expressed 'Monroe Doctrine of Labor.' But the important labor unions of Latin-America have remained aloof for the most part. Mexico has been the only solid base of the Pan-American Federation of Labor in Latin-America. And at present situation is a profound lesson for the Mexican unions."

The meeting resolved to push the question of A. F. of L. support to the Mexican labor movement in all local unions. It was unanimously voted to send messages of support to the Mexican Regional Confederation of Labor and President Calles in the present conflict.

Shot Without Warning Upon Mixed Crowds

ties on crowds gathering on the public highway and in the public park.

The crowds, composed of men, women and children, and many others who were not strikers, were repeatedly fired upon by state constabulary troopers without warning, and a wave of anger at their brutality is sweeping over the whole population.

Mayor Adelard L. Souby of Woonsocket, whose nephew was among the bystanders wounded by the constabulary's murderous firing, denounces the troopers for firing without warning, seconding a previous declaration of the strikers for firing on a crowd containing women and children that had a perfect right to be in Velle square beyond the bridge as well as to cross the bridge, which is part of public property on the public highway.

State Federation Endorses Strike.

In the meantime, the strike in the Manville mill and in the two mills of the same company at Woonsocket, was endorsed by the State Federation of Labor assembled in convention. Horace A. Riviere of the United Textile Workers' union addressed the delegates and said that the strike might last two years and involve all the company's plants.

Strikers claim that the scabs brought into the mill included three Pawtucket men who had been run out of Manville the week before. The so-called "charge on the mill" is said to have been merely the effort of the striking loom fixers to get their own tools locked up in the tool-room in the mill, which it was reported the scabs were breaking open and using.

There are only 20 to 30 scabs inside the mill, while to run the mill requires the force of approximately 1,000 men and women, now solidly out on strike against the open shop drive of the company.

Several Thousand Are Homeless in Central Illinois Rain Storm

GALESBURG, Ill., Sept 2. With several thousand persons homeless and property damage estimated at more than $2,500,000, Central Illinois began today to repair the damage wrought by a series of the severest torrential storms to sweep this section in years.

CLEANERS' UNION OF LAKE COUNTY SIGNS AGREEMENT

Union too Weak to Force Closed Shop

GARY, Ind., Sept. 2.—Lake county Cleaners and Dyers' Local 17468 at its meeting on August 31, ratified after a long discussion, the agreement reached by Brother McKendrie, the business agent of the union and a committee assisting him in the negotiations with the plant owners of Hammond, Indiana Harbor, East Chicago, and Whiting.

Many of the union men are very apprehensive in regard to some of the clauses of the new agreement. One of these provides that there be no discrimination in the shops between union and nonunion men now at work in the union, however, being given preference in filling the vacancies which may occur.

Open Shop Clause.

This is an open shop provision, content many of the union men. Another provision postpones the signing of a final agreement, providing for a closed shop until January, 1927, the latter part of the season. Still another provision sets forth that straight wages shall be paid for overtime work on Saturday afternoons. "Where is our 44hour week?" ask some of the union men. This provision deprives some of the men of the time and a half pay they were getting for overtime.

McKendrie's contention was that the union could not at present enforce a closed shop even if this demand was granted by the plant owners. He also contends that this agreement is a temporary one and that the permanent agreement to be worked out by an arbitration committee, consisting of three representatives of the plant owners and an impartial chairman chosen by them will be more satisfactory.

T. U. E. L. STARTS AGITATION FOR MEXICAN LABOR

Demands A. F. L. Help Oppose Clericalism

Solidarity with the Mexican labor movement in supporting the Calles government against reactionary, pseudo-religious clerical rebellion, was the keynote of the Trade Union Educational League's Chicago general group meeting held at Northwest Hall, Wednesday night.

Manuel Gomez, secretary of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League, addressed the meeting, pointing out how the executive council of the A. F. of L. has played false to obligations specifically contracted, not only with the Mexican labor movement but with the Calles government as well.

"President Green's hypocritical proclamation of 'neutrality' toward the Mexican workers in struggle," said the speaker, "is bound to have an important effect on the future of the so-called Pan-American Federation of Labor. The Pan-American Federation of Labor was a favorite child of Samuel Gompers. Now Green and Woll have taken it up as an instrument of their expressed 'Monroe Doctrine of Labor.' But the important labor unions of Latin-America have remained aloof for the most part. Mexico has been the only solid base of the Pan-American Federation of Labor in Latin-America. And at present situation is a profound lesson for the Mexican unions."

The meeting resolved to push the question of A. F. of L. support to the Mexican labor movement in all local unions. It was unanimously voted to send messages of support to the Mexican Regional Confederation of Labor and President Calles in the present conflict.

Workmen's Circles in Omaha Aid Miners

OMAHA, Nebr. Sept. 2.—Workmen's Circle Branches of Omaha, together with the Ladies' Independent Club, gave a joint entertainment for the benefit of the striking British miners. Over $150 was raised for the miners, a very good showing for Omaha.

Workmen's Circle Branch 626 and the Ladies' Club have been especially active in raising money for relief work. The Passaic strikers have been assisted from time to time by these two organizations, also the Freiheit and The DAILY WORKER. Last winter contributions from affairs given by these two organizations, neither of which have a large membership, averaged $100 a month.

REBECCA GRECHT SPEAKS AT LABOR DAY PICNIC

Rebecca Grecht, organizer for the Passaic Strikers General Relief Committee, will be the principal speaker at the Trade Union Educational League picnic at Stickney Grove Park, Berwyn, Ill., Sunday, Sept. 5.

This will be the sixth annual Labor Day picnic of the T. U. E. L., and special arrangements have been made for a large crowd and a good time. There is a fine dance floor, and good music will be furnished by a union orchestra all afternoon and evening. The place is shady, there are plenty of tables, and rain will not spoil the day as protection against a wetting is provided.

To get to this point take the 22nd St. car to the end of the line, than the Berwyn-Lyons car to Ogden and Harlem Ave., and walk five blocks south.

SENATOR BORAH BACKS PASSAIC MILL STRIKERS

Approves Actions of Lauck Committee

PASSAIC, N. J., Sept 2.—Senator William E. Borah of Idaho fully agrees with the program being followed by the Lauck committee in proceeding with the enrollment of the 16,000 textile workers of Passaic and vicinity into a local of the United Textile Workers, the A. F. of L. union in the industry. The following telegram was received from the senator in reply to an inquiry by one of the local papers as to whether the Lauck plan represents his attitude.

Borah's Telegram.

"If I am correctly informed, I fully agree with the Lauck committee I want to see the employes do everything that reason and justice could require.

I cannot believe that the mill owners will then refuse to recognize them or deal with them on a fair and just basis."

Garfield Councilman Disagree.

The question of whether citizens are allowed to walk near the mills in the strike area agitated the Garfield council when City Attorney John D. Vasilyk submitted a statement in which he said that walking was permitted under the law.

This statement was given in answer to the demand made some months ago by Councilman Jack Moro for an opinion from the city attorney as to whether or not citizens were entitled to walk in the streets in the strike area. Councilman Moro declared that he himself had been forced from the streets by the police and wanted to know whether or not this was legal.

Plan Comic Opera to Usher in Grand Opera in Chicago

The coming of the Century Theater Comic Opera company of New York to Chicago's Auditorium Theater for a two weeks' engagement, beginning Sept 13, is announced by Messrs. Shubert as the beginning of a regular system of comic opera revivals.

The first two weeks, "The Mikado" and "H. M. S. Pinafore," will doubtless be followed by the bringing down of the present public of other classic light operas in other seasons. The plans include not only the Gilbert and Sullivan masterpieces but also the compositions of other great composers of comic opera and its Continental counterpart, opera comique.

The Century Theater Comic Opera company comes to Chicago for a short engagement this Fall to determine whether this form of amusement is to become Chicago's regular annual season of serious opera in the Auditorium each year in the future. Similar plans contemplate the inclusion of the Chicago Opera House and Chicago Auditorium and other large opera houses in a circuit with the Century Theater in New York as the producing center. Milton Aborn, who managed the many presentations of "The Mikado" and "Pinafore," is delegated by the Messrs. Shubert to take charge of their elaborate comic opera program for the future.

The cast for the former opera includes what they term an ideal cast of Gilbert and Sullivan comedians and singers including Frank Moulan as Ko-Ko, William Danforth as the Mikado, Charles E. Galaghaf as Pook-Bah, the new Japanese soprano, Ilisa Kolke, as Yum-Yum. Stella De Mette as Pitti-Sing, William Clark as Nanki-Poo, Celia Branz as Pitti-Sing and Jean Beverly as Peep-Bo, with Max Hirschfeld as musical director.

WITH THE YOUNG WORKERS

Does Religious Dope Increase Youth Crime?

The Sept. 1st issue of the Young Worker promises many interesting features for its readers. Of late there has been much talk in the press about prohibition and the lack of religious training being responsible for the increased crime were among the youth of the land. Samuel Arnitz, the author of Haunch, Paunch and Jowl has written a very interesting article on the question of religious training and crimes among the youth. Most criminals investigated by Arnitz had religious training in their youth. This article is reviewed in the Young Worker.

In this issue Jay Lovestone, author of the government strikebreaker, the LaFollette Illusion, etc., discusses the question of the youth issues in the 1926 elections. How to read a book, is an interesting article appearing in this issue by M. Krupskaya, the widow of Lenin. Harry Gannes starts a series of articles on the story of child labor: From Cradle to Factory.

Besides that the other regular interesting feamures of the paper: A Joke column, While the Boss Ain't Lookin' short stories, International Youth Nawsettes, Round the World News, and news and stories of doings of the youth movement in America will be featured. The issue is heavily illustrated and all are urged to send their advance orders to: Young Worker, 1113 W. Washington Blvd. Chicago.

Beals Issues Order to Increase R. O. T. C.

Maj. Frank Lee Beals director of the Reserve Officers Training Corps of the Chicago high schools has issued a series of orders which aims to greatly extend the "goose step" militarization of Chicago's schools. The Chicago high schools have been authorized an increase of 1,500 in the R. O. T. C. enrollment. This is an approximate 21% increase and brings the limit up to 6,346. Not only that but the "war mongers" are now going to perfect the R. O. T. C. into a real military machine within the school by reorganizing it as a brigade with a cadet colonel and cadet staff in charge. This again gives the lie to the allibi of the jingoists that the military preparations within the schools are entirely "peace full" and of an athletic character. The healthy sign in the situation is the growing resentment of the students towards the continuance of their militarization in Morgan's behalf.

MILSTEIN AGAIN INVITES POLICE TO RUN MEETING

But Furriers Nominate Progressive Slate

Under the watchful eyes of five uniformed Chicago policemen and two special detectives the postponed nominations meeting of the Furriers' union took place Tuesday night.

The nominations were made and a full progressive slate is in the field, in spite of the fact that the police acted on the orders of Milstein, the present reactionary business representative and financial secretary, and barred from the hall about twenty-five of his prominent opponents.

The officers of the law were summoned by Milstein as part of his general policy of keeping control of the union by fair means or foul; this is the second time within the week that he has appealed to the strikebreaking police of Chicago to maintain his rule.

Always Brings Police

The nominations meeting of the Furriers was broken up last Friday by police Milstein brought in when it began to get out of his control, and the later meeting was thus made necessary.

The proceedings started Tuesday night with a discussion of the executive board's recommendation that Milstein be given all his back pay, which he had made a gesture of surrendering while the strike was going on to make the members believe that he was vitally interested in winning their demands.

Milstein Wants Money

Now, besides wanting his back pay, Milstein asked for a chance to further deplete the treasury with a two weeks' vacation on full pay. And he had his gang there to get all this for him. They stamped, whistled and made a continuous uproar, interfering with the speakers against Milstein and applauding those for him, but the meeting finally voted to grant the back pay and not the paid vacation.

A motion to admit to the session Chas. Grosman, Negdia, Shemberg, M. Mendelson, Silverman and the rest of the progressives cashed on various technical charges would probably have been carried, but after hot debate it was declared out of order on a constitutional quibble. The also who worked in the strike and then got their cards back afterwards were all allowed into the meeting and permitted to vote.

Progressives Nominated

Nominated for president are E. Finkelstein, progressive, and among others, Jack Mouchin, machine candidate.

Several are running for the office of vice-president but the outstanding machine candidate is Mike Michalson. The progressives nominated Robert Goldstein. The Milstein machine protested on the grounds that he had not been in the union long enough. This protest is based on a misinterpreation of the union constitution, and Goldstein will continue in the race.

J. Sonnenschein is the progressive nominee for Recording Secretary. The reactionary machine is also trying to exclude him on technical objections similar to those against Goldstein, but he will continue to run. His opponent from the right wing is Mrs. Hunt.

Milstein Accused

Milstein is nominated to succeed himself in the office of Business Representative and Financial Secretary, and the progressives have put up against him I. Israelson.

Robert Goldstein was also nominated for this office but he declined in a sharp letter to the officers, in which he accused Milstein of misusing funds, betraying the strike, breaking his promise not to run for the office again, and slandering his opponents.

The Shady Record of Frank Farrington

THE following sketch of Frank Farrington's career in the United Mine Workers of America is a summary of a series of articles that appeared in The DAILY WORKER in October 1924, under the title, "On a Labor Faker's Trail." Farrington's latest exploit in accepting a $25,000 a year salary from the Peabody Coal company, while still president of the Illinois Miners' Union, makes it impossible for even his closest friends to condone his action. He now stands suspended from office by action of the district executive board.

Farrington's next move in selling the miners' vote for cash was made in the year 1916, when he backed Col. Frank L. Smith, republican banker, against Frank L. Lowden, in the republican state primaries for the gubernatorial nomination. Lowden won but Farrington was not out any, adjusting before a trial committee of the miners' union that he received $1,000 in cash for endorsing the Colonel. The endorsement was made in the form of a circular which praised Smith for acquiring wealth, and also denounced his opponents, chief among them being the Thompson-Lundin-Dennan-West crowd that Farrington and his political pal, John H. Walker, were lined up with in that election.

Having violated the laws of the union in endorsing Col. Smith, republican politician, Farrington was placed on trial at a special district convention called for that purpose. At the trial the circular letter endorsing Smith was made part of the record and also the following telegram which compelled Farrington to confess that he got the money:

"July 10, 1916"

"Colonel Frank L. Smith,
"LaSalle Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

"Name has not yet returned report of committee on industrial relations. Need it for letter I am writing you. Nor have you fulfilled your promise made me while in Chicago week before last. It is necessary that I have remainder of amount agreed to at once se that I may ge on with the work of organization.

"Frank Farrington"

Under pressure, Farrington admitted having received the money but with the aid of John H. Walker who then eojoyed the confidence of the miners of Illinois, and Lewis, the secret manipulation of the coal operators who spent money to see that Farrington was acquitted, the master faker got away with his graft.

Proof that money was used to secure the exoneration of Farrington at the special convention is in the testimony of one Peter Smith of Pana, Illinois. The following is part of that testimony:

"They told me that Farrington's honestly had been questioned and that Farrington was to be given a special convention. They told me that there was money to be distributed to clear Farrington. They asked me if I was willing to make friends with Farrington. I said if a man wanted to shake hands with me I was willing to meet him half way. Then they presented a ten dollar bill to me and told me that was Farrington's money. I told them I didn't want to accept no such stuff as that but they said unless I would take it that I could not prove where I would be a friend of Farrington.

"The conversation had dropped for half an hour or more. Then they said that if I did not take the money, I would certainly have to fight both of them and the officers of the organization, so I accepted the ten dollars. I have the bill printed and in my record book, the number of the bill and just what the bill looked like.

"Q. It was a ten dollar bill and not a check?

"A. It was a bill."

During the trial the information was brought out that Farrington owned much property in Alabama. The land was suitable for the growing of pecans and orangee and was located in Mobile, county. It was contracted for in 1915 but the deed was not recorded until 1916. The purchase price of the land was $2,600, but the president of District 12, U. M. W. of A. spent $11,500 more on it during the years 1916-17-18. Where did he get all the money? The miners could not understand how he could spend so much out of his salary on orange groves, besides his other expenses for automobiles and his handsome home in Springfield.

Among those who purchased orange groves from Farrington's Alabama real estate agents were several big coal operators.

How lacking in moral courage Farrington is was proved in 1910 when T. L. Lewis, than international President, forced him to retract certain charges made against Lewis. Farrington afterwards declared that his allegations against Lewis were true but that he retracted them at the ragnest of John H. Walker.

That the coal operators and Farrington are on friendly terms can be seen from the action of the Peabody Coal company on the occasion of Farrington's marriage in 1918 when the above company presented tha newly married couple with a big mahogany chest of solid silver, in the hands of the coal company, thru Francis S. Peabody, president. Tha latter was also a member of the war industries board at Washington.

Farrington is believed to be a member of the Peabody Coal company.* The above shows that he is on very friendly terms with that mammoth coal-producing and selling corporation There are other reasons which should prove to anybody's satisfaction that Farrington is not an actual member of the concern is at least a very useful agent of the company.

During the nation-wide strike in 1922, Frank Farrington tried to make a separate agreement between District 12 and the coal operators This action, had it been successful would have destroyed the solidarity of the strike and enabled the operators to hold out until the coal miners of Illinois had driven the miners thruout the rest of the country back to work. Not only would this contemplated action of Farrington's break the strike but it would practically destroy the United Mine Workers of America.

This piece of treachery on the part of Farrington was frustrated by the progressive elements in District 12 led by the Trade Union Educational League which issued a sharp warning to the miners to fight with all their might against a separate agreement. The progressive elements made it quite clear to Farrington that they would not stand for a separate agreement and he backed down.

CIGAR MAKERS' PROGRESSIVES MAKE SHOWING

Win Some Posts; Lose Closely in Others

BOSTON, Sept. 2.—According to the votes cast in the International Cigar Makers' Union, as now announced, the following results appear:

Feinhorn was elected president, receiving 6,326 votes against the strong progressive vote of 5,208 for Lemke, winning only by 1,030. For first, second, third and fourth vice-presidencies, the administration won by even smaller majorities, the progressive candidate for fourth vice-president losing by only 218 votes. Van Poppel won the fifth vice-presidency by a majority of 751.

Naw Election for Sixth Vice-President.

There were three candidates for sixth vice-president and no choice resulted among the three, Van Hurm, S. Globerman and Regers. A second election will be held for this office and one delegate to the American Federation of Labor. This second election will take place on September 17.

Rogers is off the list and the contest will be between Van Hurm, the administration candidate, and S. Globerman, progressive. Both are Californians, Van Hurm being a member of San Pedro Local 228. Globerman is also a delegate to the Central Labor Council of Los Angeles.

Progressives Go to Two Conventions.

It is learned here that the Los Angeles local has elected Globerman and Feinstein as delegates to the California State Federation of Labor convention, which meets at Oakland on September 20.

For delegates to the A F of L, Perkins and Collins were elected. Perkins held the presidency of the international union for 35 years, but won the post as A. F of L. delegate by only 566 votes, while Collins, a progressive, was elected by a majority of 755 votes.

Passaic Relief Street Meetings for Chicago

The Chicago office of the Passaic Strikers' General Relief Committee is conducting a series of street meetings designed to reach workers who have failed to attend the advertised mass meetings in the halls.

Tuesday night Comrade Adamson, Zokaitis and Smith told the story of Passaic at the corner of St. Louis and Roosevelt road. Copies of "Hell In New Jersey," the illustrated booklet showing police brutality, strike parades and had living conditions in this mill town were sold, the proceeds to go to the strikers.

Further meetings will take place. All comrades interested should get in touch with the local office of the Passaic Relief, at 328 West Van Buren street, and assist in their work.

BUFFALO CENTRAL LABOR COUNCIL CONFERENCE FOR PARTY APPROVED

BUFFALO, N. Y., Sept. 2.—Local 84 of the International Moulders' Union of North America which has been campaigning for independent political action by labor takes cognizance of the conference now being called by the Central Labor Council for that purpose and in order to avoid confusion stops its program by calling such a conference in another way. On August 13 the local passed the following resolution:

RESOLUTION

WHEREAS: The Central Labor Council has finally agreed to call a conference for the purpose of inaugurating a more cohesive political movement of labor; and,

WHEREAS: Confusion may now arise should we proceed with the plans to call a similar conference as we decided to do some weeks previously after the council refused to act on our insistent demand that such a conference be called; and

WHEREAS: Our insistence and finally our decision to call such a conference was prompted by a realization of the need for united action by Labor to take steps to wrest control of the agencies of government from the hands of the employers who today maintain undisputed control of these agencies and uso them for the purpose of defeating the workers who are compelled to engage in struggles for higher wages, shorter hours and better working conditions; and

WHEREAS: The conference now called by the Central Labor Council, can and should result in placing a united Labor Ticket in the field in the coming elections, thus unifying the forces of labor behind labor candidates; now therefore be it,

RESOLVED: By Local 84, International Moulders' Union of N. A., that we heartily endorse the conference called by the Central Labor Council for Thursday, Sept. 9; and he it further,

RESOLVED: That we send copies of this resolution to every local union and to the press so that all concerned may know that we have rescindod our call for a conference and do support the ronference of the Central Labor Council; and be it further,

RESOLVED: That we respectfully urge every local union to send delegates to the conference called by the Central Labor Council and that these be instructed to support the proposition of placing a United Labor Ticket in the field in the coming elections.

It was decided to circulate petitions and to stimulate the sending of individual letters to the governor of the state of Massachusetts demanding justice for Sacco and Vanzetti.

The conference elected a general executive committee, consisting of representatives of the nationalities represented at the conference. Local committees are to be set up in the various cities of Lake county.

A NEW NOVEL

By Upton Sinclair

VIII

There was really only one place where Bunny could be happy, and that was up at the bungalow. He spent his Saturday afternoon there, helping Ruth and Meelle—the only kind of aid he was permitted to give to the strike! Part of the time they talked about the suffering of which they knew; and part of the time they were jolly, making jokes like other young people; but all the time they worked like beavers, turning flour belonging to the union into various kinds of eatables. At supper-time Mr. Watkins came with the wagon, his second trip, and they loaded him up, and Meelle drove off with him to headquarters, while Bunny stayed with Ruth, and helped clean up the place and tried to explain the predicament of his father, and why he, Bunny, could not really help his friends.

On Sunday he went in to the meetings, and heard Paul make another speech. Paul, always sombre looking, was now gaunt from several weeks of little food and less sleep, and there was a fury of passion in his voice; he told about his trip to the other fields, and how there was no justice anywhere—the authorities of town and county and state were simply pawns of the operators, doing everything possible to hold the men down and break their organization. In this white flame of suffering Paul's spirit had been tempered to steel, and the crowd of workers shared this process, and took new vows of solidarity; Bunny felt the thrill of a great mass experience, and yearned to be part of it, and then shrunk back, like the young man in the Bible story who had too many possessions.

Paul had seen him in the crowd, and after the meeting sought him out. "I want to talk to you," he said, and they strolled away from the others, and Paul, who had no time to waste, came directly to the point:

"See here I want you to let my sister alone."

"Let her alone!" cried the other, and stopped short in his track and stared at Paul. "Why, what do you mean?"

"Meelle tells me you've been up there at the place a lot—you were there last evening with her."

"But Paul! Somebody had to stay with her!"

"We'll take care of ourselves; she could have come to father's place. And I want you to understand, I won't have any rich young fellows hanging round my sister."

"But Paul!" Bunny's tone was one of shocked grief. "Truly Paul, you're utterly mistaken."

"I don't want you to be mistaken about this one thing—if any fellow was to do any wrong to my sister, I'd kill him, just as sure as anything on earth."

"But Paul, I never dreamed of such a thing! Why, listen—I'll tell you—I'm in love with a girl—a girl in school. Oh, honest, Paul, I'm terribly in love, and I—I couldn't think of anybody else that way."

A quick blush had spread over Bunny's face as he made this confession and it was impossible not to realize that he was sincere. Paul's voice became kinder. "Listen, son; you're not a child any more, and neither is Ruth. I don't doubt what you say—naturally, you'll pick out some girl of your own class. But it mightn't be that way with Ruth, she might get to be interested in you, and you ought to keep away."

Bunny didn't know what to say to that—the idea was too new to him. "I wanted to know about the strike," he explained; "and I've had no chance to talk with you at all. You can't imagine how bad I feel, but I don't know what to do." He rushed on, crowding all his grief into a few sentences; he was torn in half, between his loyalty to his father and his sympathy for the men; it was a trap he was in, and what could he do?

When Paul answered, his voice was hard again. "Your father is helping to keep these blackguards in the field, I understand."

"He's paying assessments, if that's what you mean. He's under contract with the Federation—when he joined—"

"No contract is valid that requires breaking the law! And don't you know these fellows are breaking a hundred laws a day?"

"I know, Paul; but Dad is tied up with the other operators; you don't understand—he's really having trouble financially, because his wells are shut down; and he's doing that entirely for the men."

"I know it, and we appreciate it. But now he says he's got to give up, and bring in scabs like the rest. They're driving us beyond endurance; they're making a dirty fight, and your father's with it—and yet he goes along with them!"

There was a pause, and Paul went on grimly. "I know, of course; his money is at stake, and he won't risk it; and you'll do what he tells you."

"But Paul! I couldn't oppose Dad! Would you expect that?"

"When my father set up his will, and tried to keep me from thinking and learning the truth, I opposed him, didn't I? And you encouraged me to do it—you thought that was all right."

"But Paul! If I were to oppose Dad in such a thing—why I'd break his heart."

"Well, maybe I broke my father's heart—I don't know, and neither do you. The point is, your father's doing wrong, and you know it; he's helping to turn these ruffians loose on us, and deprive us of our rights as citizens, and even as human beings. You can't deny that, and you have a duty that you owe to the truth."

There was a silence, while Bunny tried to face the appalling idea of breaking with Dad as Paul had broken with old Mr. Watkins. It had seemed so right in the one case, and seemed so impossible in the other!

At least Paul went on. "I know how it is son. You won't do it, you haven't the nerve for it—your're soft." He waited, while those cruel words sank in. "Yes, that's the word, soft. You've always had everything you wanted—you've had it handed to you on a silver tray and it's made you a weakling. You have a good heart, and you know what's right, but you couldn't bear to act, you'd be afraid of hurting somebody."

And that was the end of their talk. Paul had nothing more to say, and Bunny had no answer. Tears had come into his eyes—and that was weak, wasn't it? He turned his head away so that Paul might not see them.

"Well," said the latter, "I've got a pile of work to do, so I'll be off. This fight will be over some day, and your father will go on making money and I hope it will bring you happiness, but I doubt it, really. Good-bye, son."

"Good-bye," said Bunny, feebly; and Paul turned on his heel and hurried away.

No Arbitration of the Garment Strike

We are glad to learn that Louis Hyman, manager of the New York Joint Board of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union and chairman of the strike committee, has come forward with a warning to the manufacturers, that the attempt of Governor Smith to force compulsory arbitration and the bosses' intention to sabotage direct dealings in conference with the governor's backing, will not be tolerated.

As we pointed out yesterday, the manufacturers took advantage of the letter of the union to Governor Smith, and showed that they were under conferences with the union only to break them up by rejecting the union terms and appealing to the governor to force arbitration on the workers. Hyman certifies that our view of this was correct when he says:

"These manufacturers take this position because they infer from Governor Smith's letter that, when they disagree with us on every point and the conferences break up, the governor will compel us to refer the entire dispute to arbitration.

"The union will not refer our demands to arbitration," Hyman continues. "We would like the leaders of the Industrial Council to know this before the conference begins."

This is the proper attitude, and we are certain that Hyman will be supported by the membership in this correction of a mistake which opened the way to injury of the union and a defeat of its demands.

As Hyman points out, arbitration has been rejected time and again by the membership, and the right wing attempt to compromise the strike will be repudiated by the workers, as they repudiated the right wing proposal in the last convention that the union accept arbitration in principle.

It remains for the left wing to rally the workers in defense of the present stand of Hyman—against arbitration and for direct dealing between the union and the manufacturers and jobbers, to remain vigilant against the right wing compromises and make that vigilance effective by taking the leadership which their support by the rank and file fully justifies.

The Zeigler Cases

One of the darkest chapters in the history of Frank Farrington, suspended president of the Illinois Miners' Union, was written when he aided and abetted the Franklin county prosecutor's office in bringing about the conviction of several progressive leaders of the Zeigler miners on framed-up charges.

One of those victims of Farrington's treachery was the president of the Zeigler local and was long a thorn in the side of the Leiter coal interests and their tools in the sub-district office of the Illinois Miners' Union. In order to oust the progressive leadership, many schemes were tried and finally the courts were resorted to with success. Even tho it cost the life of Mike Sarovich, who died from a bullet fired by a ku klux klan gunman, the bloody conspiracy went thru, for the coal interests must be served.

Farrington's men went bail for the killer. Later on he was white-washed and an innocent man charged with the crime. This was only a bluff, to detract attention from the real culprit. The authorities were not anxious to punish anybody for the killing of Sarovich. The dead man was a progressive.

When the International Labor Defense stepped in to assist the coal company's victims, Farrington issued a decree denouncing the I. L. D. as a "dual organization" and threatened to lift the charter of any local identifying itself with the I. L. D. Now the miners of Illinois know who the dual unionists are and they will have little difficulty in understanding why Farrington, the Peabody servant, made a united front with Leiter, the K. K. K. and the prosecution to get rid of Henry Corbishley, former president of Local 982, U. M. W. of A., and his associates.

Those workers are now free on bail and unless the miners wake up and take appropriate action, they are liable to go to jail. Now, more than ever, the miners of Illinois need the assistance of every progressive to clean up after Farrington.

Mussolini, Servant Not Master

The real bosses in the black shirt dictatorship of Italy are big bankers, one of them being Count Volpi, the gentleman who negotiated the debt settlement with the United States. Mussolini is merely a figurehead and a prisoner of finance-capital tho a voluntary and willing one.

The tinsel is stripped from the personality of Mussolini in an article that will appear next Wednesday in The Daily Worker, written by a man who knows his Italy and his Mussolini.

That the decrees robbing the masses of every vestige of effective power, issued by Mussolini with startling rapidity are caused by a progressive weakening of the fascist power is the inference to be drawn from the article. The followers of Perinacci, the deposed general secretary of the fascist party, are resorting to violence against Mussolini's cut-throats and exposing each other as bands of embezzling experts. This is good.

The fascist dictatorship is based on the small group of bankers and heavy industrialists and is exercised for their benefit. Contrast this with the dictatorship of the workers and peasants in the Soviet Union, based on the suffrage of the great masses of producers and you have the difference between a revolutionary form of government with its face to the future and a reactionary tyranny with its face to the past.

Fascism represents autocracy. The Soviet form of government represents the democracy of the future.

How the mighty sometimes fall! Harry Daugherty, once the big mogul of the Harding administration, injunction specialist and red baiter, is now about to stand trial without a confederate on a charge of defrauding the government of $7,000,000 thru collusion with the head of the alien property custodian. The noisiest patriots are usually the biggest crooks.

Do We Believe in the Theory of Misery?

By C. E. RUTHENBERG.

THE high prosperity which American industry has been enjoying during the past year has developed a tendency toward pessimism in some sections of the party. The argument is being made, that because there is general employment in most industries, the workers will not engage in struggle against the capitalist bosses and that under these conditions the party cannot make headway in the fight against capitalism and in building its forces.

Such an analysis of the present situation in the United States and the possibilities for building the party in this situation is based upon the theory that the workers will fight only in periods of increasing misery, that is, when their wages are reduced, their hours lengthened and their working conditions and standards of life generally become worse.

This theory of increasing misery and its relation to the workers' struggle does not make its appearance for the first time. Decades ago, in the socialist party, there was to be found in such periods agitators, whose slogan was "Wait till hard times come and you will see the party grow." The socialist-labor party was strongly infested with this theory of increasing misery and postponed the struggles of the workers until the pinch of capitalism became sharper.

Is this theory that the workers will only fight under increasing misery correct and do we as Communists, accept it? This is the question which those comrades should ask themselves who have become infected with the idea that because of the high rate at which American industry is operating, we are unable to build our party because the workers will not engage in fights.

It is of course true that the workers will fight in a period of increasing misery, but is this the only time in which they engage in struggle?

Conditions Which Compel Struggle.

THE fundamental answer to this question has been given by Marx in "Capital" in analyzing the factors which determine the value of the labor-power of the workers. He did not come to the conclusion that the value of the labor-power of the workers was determined by the cost of reproducing that labor-power under the historically developed standards of life of the workers at various epochs.

In the qualification "historically developed standards of life" we have the answer to the question posed at the beginning of this article.

The workers do not only fight when the capitalists seek to force down their standard of life below a mere subsistance, that is, below their ability to secure the barest, poorest kind of food, clothing and shelter thru which they can maintain themselves. They will fight when their historically developed standard of life is threatened and when this includes the ownership of an automobile (as it does for many American workers today), a victrola and piano and the opportunity to go to the movies regularly, they will fight in order to maintain the standard of life which includes these things.

Furthermore, the standard of life of those who exploit them and generally of the country in which they live, has a determining effect upon the struggles of the workers. Regarding about the great wealth of the United States, immense productive power and its high prosperity, which is carried in the capitalist press, does not leave the worker untouched. Higher wealth production and improvement of the position of the country as a whole, stimulates the workers to struggle to share in this "prosperity." The worker says to himself: If the capitalists are making such great profits, if the country is so wealthy, why should I not improve my standard of life and share in this "prosperity."

Workers Struggle in Period of Prosperity.

EVERY period of so-called prosperity in the cycles thru which industry in this country has gone, has been accompanied by movements of workers for higher wages and better working conditions. It is in these periods that the worker has courage for struggles. Jobs are plentiful. There is no great army of unemployed. The conditions for success are better.

The year 1912, for instance, was not a period of industrial depression, still it was a period of struggle in which we had the great strikes at Lawrence, Paterson, McKees Rocks, Akron, Mc Kees Rocks, Akron, Mc Sabs Range, etc.

The years of from 1915 to 1919 were the periods of war prosperity. Employment was more general than it was before. The workers were seeking relief in that period that the American Federation of Labor had its greatest growth in membership and in which the greatest industrial struggles in the history of this country took place.

In 1919, the war time needs of the capitalists were over, but there was still great industrial prosperity. We find, during that year, that the great steel strike took place. The half million members of the United Mine Workers went on strike for an increase in wages and at the same time the railroad workers threatened a strike, which was only averted thru concessions, giving them higher wages. These great struggles took place in a period when industry was working at a high rate and prosperity for the capitalists had reached a height previously unknown.

The year 1922 was again a period of great industrial struggles. In that year capitalist production had to a degree pulled itself out of the deep crisis of 1920-21. The tendency of industry was again upward altho so-called prosperity did not yet exist. The struggle of the United Mine Workers in that year was a defensive struggle. But that of the railroad shopmen was based on a demand for increased wages and therefore an offensive struggle.

The Present Prosperity.

SINCE the development of the present period of prosperity, we see accompanying it struggles of the workers for higher wages and better working conditions. The anthracite strike, altho a defeat, was also a fight for increased wages and improved working conditions. The Furriers' strike was also based on new demands of the workers. So is the present strike of the New York Garment workers. In Massachusetts the shoe workers are answering capitalist attacks by demands for higher wages. The workers on the railroads, altho tied up by the new Watson-Parker bill insofar as strikes are concerned, are making demands for higher wages.

Thus we see that at the present time, in place of prosperity resulting in contentment and indifference to struggle on the part of the workers, there is a growing urge of struggle for increased wages and better working conditions. This is true in those industries other than those in which special crises exist, such as textile and bituminous coal, where the workers are resisting the further struggles efforts to lower their standards of life.

The conclusion to be drawn from these facts, briefly presented, is that those facts prove the theory that the workers will not struggle in times of prosperity. On the contrary, it is exactly in such times of prosperity that demands for higher wages and better working conditions are made and that movements for organization of the unorganized workers to attain these better wages and improved conditions are developed.

The Party and the Present Situation.

THOSE party members who are making excuses for lack of progress on the grounds of the existing economic conditions and refusal of the workers to carry on fights, have not a leg to stand on. They are trying to excuse their own pessimism and lack of energy in the struggle by a theory which has no basis in fact.

It is true that the party must fit its policies, thru which it seeks to move the workers into action, to the economic conditions existing in a particular period. In a period of prosperity and general employment, the organization of the unorganized workers, demand for higher wages and better working conditions must be the slogan of the party for the workers' struggle. On the basis of such slogans and such demands, the Party can move masses of workers into struggle. It has shown this in those sections of the country where it has put itself at the head of movements for organization and demands for higher wages and better conditions.

At the present time, altho the future is somewhat in doubt, general employment and prosperity is still true of American industry. We must base our slogans upon this situation. If we take up earnestly and energetically the struggle for organization of the unorganized, the fight for increased wages and better working conditions, we will find that the workers will respond and are ready to fight. Thru such struggles we will build our party in times of prosperity even as we build it in times of industrial crisis.

WHY DOES GREEN INVESTIGATE?

Left Wing Leadership Wins a Strike—Smashes Employers' Attack on Fur Workers—Green, Frayne and Company Fail to Save the Bosses—Green Orders Hostile Probe—Union Membership Supports Left Leaders

IN yesterday's issue The DAILY WORKER published the answer of the New York Joint Board of the Furriers' Union to the letter of William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, who insists on a hostile and star chamber "investigation" of the conduct of the recent successful strike of the New York union, apparently because Green is angry that a strike was won.

This unprecedented action in being forced upon the union against the will not only of the Joint Board, but of the membership, and in the following letter, also addressed to Green, the shop chairmen voice the protest of the membership against this extraordinary attack upon their union and set forth why the membership supports the left wing leadership of the Joint Board. Their letter says:

Mr. William Green, President,
American Federation of Labor,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir and Brother: At a meeting held Wednesday, August 13, 1926, the shop chairmen representing the shops employing union labor in the fur industry of New York City, have decided to bring to your notice and verify the action of the Joint Board representatives concerning the decision of the American Federation of Labor Council to conduct an investigation of our recent strike, elected a special committee of shop chairmen representing the New York fur workers.

Hit at Kaufman Gang.

In order that you may understand our feelings regarding your investigation, we beg you to consider the following brief sketch of the recent history of the New York Joint Board. For a number of years prior to May, 1925, our union, contrary to the will of our membership, had been in the hands of an unprincipled, unscrupulous and corrupt group of office holders. During these years union conditions in our industry had sunk to the very lowest level. Our trade evils had grown and multiplied.

Organization work was at a standstill and the fur workers had been completely at the mercy of their employers who had taken full advantage of the criminal indifference and negligence of the Joint Board officials. The agreement in the fur industry of 1924 by the manufacturers and the rights of the fur workers had been trampled upon by both employers and union officials.

By the use of organized strong-arm methods and of people of notorious and questionable characters, the officials in control of our Joint Board had succeeded in terrorizing our membership and converting our union into an agency serving their own selfish interests. Every attempt made by us to put an end to these grievous conditions was met with the full force at the disposal of the clique in power.

Leadership Change Good.

In order to wipe out the evils prevailing in our organization, it required an unselfish leadership prepared to run the risk of personal physical injury to inspire and guide the discontented membership. Such a leadership was provided by the fur workers when we have chosen to entrust the responsible positions of our present Joint Board and who served us on the strike committee.

It is well remembered and appreciated by all fur workers that, in addition to their own work, it was the untiring efforts of our present leadership—efforts which on a number of occasions they paid for with their very blood—that enabled them to free themselves and the organization from the limiter control of the unprincipled elements.

Successful Organizing.

During the brief period in which the present leadership have been in control of the Joint Board they have succeeded in arousing the real support of the fur workers, a spirit laid dormant and discouraged. They instilled into our organization new life and fresh vigor. They conducted several successful organizational drives which brought into our organized ranks large numbers of exploited workers thereby adding strength to our union and to the organized labor movement as a whole.

Their inspiration and education enabled us to recognize our rights and to realize that we possess the ability and the power to safeguard these rights. Utilizing our awakened spirit to the fullest extent, they compelled the manufacturers to respect the terms of our agreement and thereby enormously improved our living and working conditions.

Victorious Strike.

And, finally, their leadership successfully conducted us thru our recent 10-day strike which enabled us to wrest from the manufacturers a 40-hour week and a number of other substantial concessions improving our conditions and those of our families. Every one of us feels proud of our union, of our fight, of our devoted leadership and of our victorious strike.

Is Winning Strike An Evil?

Your instituted investigation, following our recent successful strike, which will undeniably encourage and inspire the entire labor movement to greater efforts, such as investigation strikes us as though a victorious strike is being investigated as an evil to be avoided in the future.

Why institute an investigation without informing those to be investigated of the charges preferred against them if such exists? Is not this the only and usual procedure before an investigation. What emergency called for the disregard of this recognized elementary right of the accused?

We have always been loyal to the American Federation of Labor and desire to remain loyal. Furthermore we declare unreservedly that we have found our present leadership of the Joint Board, wanting in loyalty to the American Federation of Labor. On the contrary such loyalty has been manifested by them in the fur workers on numerous occasions.

However such loyalty does not and must not deprive us of the sense of right and fairness of our duty to express our views. We state unhesitatingly that our numerous doubts cause us to question the wisdom of your action.

Methods Won Because Militant.

You vaguely intimate that the investigation will extend to the methods employed in the strike and to the existing friction in our organization. Our methods are widely known? Mass picketing, widest rank and file control of every branch of activity and participation therein and widest consultation of shop chairmen and of workers in general on all important policies—these were the methods employed.

Are those were the methods that led to victory. If these methods are not in accordance with the American Federation of Labor practices then indeed such practices are obsolete and it is no crime to supplant them with new and better ones.

Full Confidence.

We have the fullest confidence in our present leadership of the Joint Board and in the strike committee, and we know that they neither fear nor desire to place any obstacles in the way of an investigation. Moreover, we fully agree with their policy of submitting under protest to your investigation. But we ask whether the internal differences existing within our international should be within the province of an investigation to be conducted by the American Federation of Labor.

Are we not competent and intelligent enough to adjust our internal differences ourselves? Are we less entitled to the exercise of this right than any other organization in similar circumstances? These questions compel us to feel that the investigation is uncalled for, unprecedented and unjustifiable.

Demand to Be Present.

In view of the role played by the shop chairmen as individuals and as a body, the chairmen instructed me to request that a delegation of shop chairmen be present at all hearings of the investigation committee. The chairmen further request that all hearings be made public and open to the press.

We earnestly hope that the opinion and requests of the shop chairmen will be given due consideration.

Fraternally yours,
Shop Chairmen Committee.
By the Secretary.

Membership Voices Protest.

The following is a resolution adopted unanimously at a meeting of fur workers, members of the New York Joint Board of the Furriers' Union. The mass meeting was held on Wednesday, August 18, 1926, at Cooper Union Hall, New York City. Over 3,500 workers filled the hall to capacity and emphatically voiced their protest against the investigation instituted by the American Federation of Labor:

Whereas, the American Federation of Labor has instituted an investigation into the conduct of our recent strike and into the internal controversies of our international, and

Without Parallel.

Whereas, such an investigation is not only without parallel in the history of the A. F. of L., but also constitutes an invasion of the autonomy of our union and a violation of the constitution of our international, and

Whereas, the general strike committee and the shop chairmen leadership of the New York Joint Board successfully conducted us thru our recent 17-week strike which resulted in great gains for all fur workers and in victory for the entire labor movement; be it therefore

Officials' Intrigue.

Resolved, that we, the fur workers assembled at Cooper Union on August 18, 1926, hereby emphatically protest against this absolutely unjustifiable investigation and against this latest intrigue of our international officers, and be it further

Demand Public Hearings.

Resolved, that we demand the hearings of the investigation committee to be public and above board, and that they be open to the press representatives and to the workers.

CHAPTER II.

THE STRUGGLE OVER OUR GEOLOGICAL TREE.

These paleontological facts are among the most important proofs of the descent of man from a long series of higher and lower vertebrates. There is no other explanation possible except connection for the chronological succession of these classes, which is in perfect harmony with the morphological and systematic distribution. The anti-evolutionists have not even attempted to give any other explanation. The fishes dipnoans, amphibians, reptiles, monotremes, marsupials, placentals, lemurs, apes, anthropoid apes, and ape-men (pithecanthropi), are inseparable links of a long ancestral chain, of which the last and most perfect link is man. Cf. the tables pp. 166-168.)

One of the paleontological facts I have quoted, namely, the late appearance of the mammal class in geology—is particularly important. This most advanced group of the vertebrates comes on the stage of the Triassic period, in the second and shorter half of the organic history of the earth. It is represented only by low and small forms in the whole of the mesozoic age, during the domination of the reptiles. Thruout this long period, which is estimated by some geologists at 8-11, by others at 30 or more, million years, the dominant reptile class developed its many remarkable and curious forms, there were swimming marine reptiles (ichthyosaria), flying reptiles (pterosauria), and colossal land reptiles (dinosauria). It was much later, in the Tertiary period, that the mammal class attained the wealth of large and advanced placental forms that secured its predominance over this more recent period.

The many and deep investigations made during the last few decades into the ancestral history of the mammals have convinced zoologists who were engaged in them that they may be traced to a common root, of the mammals, from the lowest monotremes and marsupials to the ape and man, have a large number of striking characteristics in common, and those distinguish them from all other vertebrates: the hair and glands of the skin, the feeding of the young with the mother's milk, the peculiar formation of the lower jaw and the earbones connected therewith, and other features in the structure of the skull; also, the possession of a kneecap (patella); and the loss of the nucleus in the red blood-cells. Further, the complete diaphragm, which entirely separates the pectoral cavity from the abdominal, is only found in the mammals; in all the other vertebrates there is still an open communication between the two cavities. The monophyletic (or single) origin of the whole mammalian class is therefore now regarded by all competent experts as an established fact.

In the face of this important fact, what is called the "ape-question" loses a good deal of the importance that was formerly ascribed to it. All the momentous consequences that follow it in regard to our human nature, our past and future, and our bodily and psychic life, remain undisturbed whether we derive man directly from one of the primates, an ape or lemur, or from some other branch, some unknown lower form, of the mammalian stem. It is important to point this out, because certain dangerous attempts have been made lately by Jesuitical zoologists and zoological Jesuits to cause fresh confusion on the matter.

In a richly illustrated and widely read work that Hans Kraemer published a year ago, under the title "The Universe and Man," this able and learned anthropologist, Professor Klaatsch of Heidelberg, deals with "the origin and development of the human race," and admirably describes the primitive history of man and his civilization. However, he denounces the idea of man's descent from the ape as "irrational, narrow minded, and false;" he grounds this severe censure on the fact that none of the living apes can be the ancestor of humanity. But we competently and had never said anything so foolish. If we took closer into this fight with windmills, we find that Klaatsch holds substantially the same view of the pithecoid theory as I have done since 1866. He says expressly: "The three anthropoid apes, the gorilla, chimpanse, and orang, seem to diverge from a common root, which was near to that of the gibbon and man." I had long ago given the name archiprimas to this single hypothetical ancestor of the primates, which he calls the "primaioid." It lived in the earliest part of the Tertiary period, and had probably been developed in the Cretaceous from older mammals. The very forced and unnatural hypothesis by means of which Klaatsch goes on to make the primates depart very widely from the other mammals seems to me to be quite untenable, like the similar hypothesis that Alsberg, Wilser and other anthropologists, who deny our pithecoid descent, have lately advanced.

Cline Arrives for the I. L. D. Conference

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

THAT followers of the "meek and lowly Nazarene" are no longer meek and lowly was again brought to public attention when the newspapers carried the report of an attempted retail of jewelry and bonds valued at $50,000 from the home of Cardinal Dougherty of Philadelphia. Dougherty was one of the fat spiritual boys prominent at the eucharistic congress. His ministry in life is to encourage his sheep to allow themselves to be shorn without a murmur so that they may wear golden wings in eternity. The cardinal is one of the shearers and as the thief learned he has a sharp pair of shears.

THE Irish Times, organ of the protestant ascendency in that country, is quite excited over the religious struggle in Mexico. The Irish catholics look on the Irish Times as an organ of the devil. Of course the wealthy catholics care very little whether one's god is Father or the holy faker in Rome, provided material accounts can be squared. The Irish Times has not much love for the catholic church but it hates the working class movement more. Therefore on this occasion it klasses the papal toe as obsequiously as a K. of C. bootlegger and hops onto Calles with both feet.

"YOU won't get heaven when, Communism comes in" pipes a reader who thinks we are a little bit too "narrow-minded" and bitter against everybody who does not wear the Communist badge. Well, who the dev'll wants a heaven anyhow? If the time should ever come that all the trouble makers passed away life would be a rather dreary purgatory. There is little danger of that. Communism will not come like a thief in the night and confront us with a ready-made world the following morning. Things don't change as rapidly as that.

OUR theory is that the reconstruction of society on a socialist basis will be a gradual process, after the working-class first take hold of the governmental power, after they become the ruling class, preparatory to abolishing all classes. This period will not sprout many wings, and beds of roses for the workingclass will be conspicuous by the number of thorns in them. It will be a period of strife and struggle. We cannot conceive of the capitalist class surrendering their luxuries without a struggle. Look at the society columns in the papers if you want to know the reason why. No! Heaven is a long way off but if the road to it is beset with dangers the scenery is splendid.

REGULARS HIT AT PREFERENCE GIVEN C. M. T. C.

"Citizen Soldiers" Get Double Allowance

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Sept. 3.— A soldier interviewed here today by a DAILY WORKER correspondent stated that enlisted men find a partial explanation for their scanty mess allowance in the fact that the "citizen soldiers" are allowed about 75 cents a day for food while the regulars get along on less than half of that.

Condensed Milk.

The soldiers said: "Today's papers played up the fact that the C. M. T. C. rations include a bottle of milk each morning. We get along on the canned condensed variety. That special feed they put on when the president and the labor leaders were here was good publicity. We are fed like that only on New Years, Christmas and Thanksgiving Day."

Small Allowance.

The subsistence allowance for the regular army totals about $126.57 per year per man. The pay of a private is $252 annually, less laundry, repair and tailoring expenses which make a big cut.

WEISBORD GIVEN FAREWELL FETE BY MILL HANDS

Charter of U. T. W. is Delivered at Passaic

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PASSAIC, N. J., Sept. 3. — Albert Weisbord, organizer and leader for the past seven months of the splendidly conducted strike of the 16,000 textile workers of Passaic and vicinity, officially relinquished his leadership of the big strike Thursday night when he delivered his farewell address to a mass meeting of strikers and sympathizers held at Belmont Park.

Altho stepping out of the strike situation, Weisbord will remain in Passaic to fight the mill baron's attempt to railroad him to jail for his services to the workers. Since April 12 he has been out on $30,000 bail in cases arising out of the attempts of the mill bosses and their judicial tools to punish him for his fight on behalf of the striking textile workers.

Deliver Charter.

The charter of the United Textile Workers granted to the strikers was delivered by the Lauck Committee at the mass meeting. Gustav Deak, a striker from the Botany Mills and a committee of nine other strikers formally accepted the charter, which was signed on Monday.

Thomas McMahon, president of the U. T. W., will meet a delegation of members of New Jersey labor organizations to arrange a parade and speech-making program celebrating the entry of the A. F. of L. into the situation. The parade will probably take place Sept. 11. The speakers will include McMahon and possibly President William Green of the American Federation of Labor.

Alfred Wagenknecht, strike relief chairman, in a statement issued today, warned organized labor that the Passaic strike was not yet over, as the mill-barons had so far refused to deal with the United Textile Workers. He declared the strike was a fight against all bosses, as Rockefeller, Gary, Goodyear, and all the other bosses, have their eyes on Passaic and are lending encouragement and aid to the textile barons in their savage fight against the workers' right to organize into real unions which would be able to protect them from the starvation wages and cruel wage cuts meted out by the mills. He urged organized labor the necessity of meeting the united front of the bosses with a united front of the workers.

Need More Relief.

The relief chairman stressed particularly the pitiful plight of the strikers' children, all of whom are absolutely dependent for greatly needed milk and other nutritions food upon the solidarity of the working class whose support has hitherto saved these tiny tots from the starvation offensives of the mill bosses.

Strike relief should be rushed at once to the General Relief Committee, Textile Strikers, 743 Main Avenue, Passaic, N. J.

Britain Opposes Any Tangier Mandate For Spanish Government

LONDON, Sept. 3. — The Spanish proposal to establish a league of nations mandate on Tangier will be vigorously opposed at Geneva by Great Britain, it was stated authoritatively in governmental circles here today.

American Trade Unionism Shown Road to Progress

The Trade Union Educational League, organ of the left wing trade unionists of America, around which rally the progressive workers in the struggle with the employers, has analyzed the conditions and needs of the American labor movement and, in view of the approaching convention of the American Federation of Labor, drawn up a program for building the trade unions and for building the trade unions and for their victorious advance against the present attacks by the employing class. This program has been issued as a leaflet and will be distributed thruout the trade unions of the country. The Special Labor Day Edition of The DAILY WORKER includes it as one of the most significant declarations of the labor movement.

Program For Building the Trade Unions

Proposals to the A. F. of L. Convention, Detroit, 1926

THE American labor movement is in a crisis. Everywhere the employers are attacking the workers' conditions of labor and standards of living and trying to destroy the trade unions. In nearly every industry wages have been cut, either directly by a straight-out reduction, or by speeding up the workers to a vastly increased production, only in relatively few cases have wages been increased or hours been shortened. In most cases old scales have been swept away and the long hour day of unorganized industry is threatening the standards of the organized, while every scheme possible is enforced on organized labor to multiply the output of the work day, regardless of health or safety.

The employers are combining their forces in constantly more powerful corporations, and super-trusts. By intensification of exploitation they are wringing enormous and ever-growing profits from labor. Knitting together the great industrial enterprises, the financial trust rules throughout industry, dictating the lives of millions, piling up such gross wealth that billions are invested in imperialist ventures overseas to get super-profits.

THE employers' combines are ruthless. They control the government, buying legislators and courts to do their will. Labor is outlawed in every effective action. Injunctions, police and troops are used to beat down any resistance to capitalist attacks. The open shop is enforced by the government, the right to strike is savagely attacked and trade unionism seriously menaced by company unions, a fraudulent substitute for real unions.

Against capital, labor is waging a losing battle when it does fight, the if united in struggle it would win. While capital is thoroly organized, there are only 3,500,000 organized out of 20,000,000 organizable workers. The unions have lost more than a million members in the open shop war. Company unionism is gaining, with over a million workers bound up in these fake organizations.

THE trade unions weakened by craft divisions and top-heavy with an official bureaucracy which refuses to fight the employers, have retreated almost everywhere under the employers' attacks. The bureaucrats have adopted a policy of surrender to and collaboration with the employers. For mere "recognition" the bureaucracy undertakes through such schemes as the B. & O. plan, to help employers get more profits out of the workers than they can get thru company unions.

In politics the bureaucracy trails behind the coat-tails of every capitalist politician of both capitalist parties, seeking "friends" by "non-partisan" politics, and thus reducing labor's political power to zero, instead of building up a powerful party of labor alone.

To remedy these conditions and to build the trade unions into powerful organizations the following measures are necessary:

1. Organize the Unorganized

Much of the weakness of the labor movement lies in the fact that only about 10 per cent of the workers are organized, and that these ten per cent are mostly skilled workers and in the light industries. It is therefore im-

Daily Worker Greets I.L.D. Conference

THE DAILY WORKER extends fraternal greetings to the second annual conference of the International Labor Defense which opens its sessions tomorrow in Ashland Auditorium.

Within the short period of one year, this non-partisan, all-inclusive working class defense organization has accomplished much despite the handicaps it encountered, the most serious of which was the mutual jealousy existing between various sections of the labor movement and the several defense organizations that existed to defend their own particular victims of class injustice.

If the International Labor Defense had accomplished nothing else besides overcoming this competitive hostility between different defense groups it would have justified its existence. But it has more constructive accomplishments to its credit. It has proven by action that it is the defender of all working class victims of the class struggle regardless of what section of the labor movement they owe their first allegiance to. This is the necessary precondition to the accomplishment of the I. L. D. mission.

Among the high lights in the history of the I. L. D. was the national campaign against the Horthy government of Hungary to save Rakosi and Weinberger from the gallows. Horthy was compelled to call off his hangman, tho he succeeded in sending Rakosi to jail for over eight years and his comrades to long terms of imprisonment.

Then came the re-arrest of Richard (Blackie) Ford and his trial. The I. L. D. jumped in, rendered assistance and organized a nation-wide campaign of publicity in behalf of the worker whose life was threatened. Ford was a member of the I. W. W. A jury acquitted Ford.

For months the I. L. D. has moved every ounce of influence to save Sacco and Vanzetti from the electric chair in Massachusetts. This fight is still on. As these lines are written word comes over the wire that Governor Fuller grants a reprieve to a condemned murderer who confessed that he committed the crime for which the two Italian workers were convicted. The reprieved murderer will testify under oath that he committed the crime. Sacco and Vanzetti are philosophical anarchists.

No worker in whose soul the divine flame of rebellion has been lighted can fail to give his support to the International Labor Defense which is a shield of labor in the United States and stretches out its hand to aid the persecuted workers in all lands.

FAMOUS CLASS WAR PRISONER I. L. D. GUEST

Conference Opens Here Sunday Morning

Charles Cline, one of the famous class war prisoners known as the Texas Martyrs, who was recently pardoned with Captain Jess Rangel and four other Mexicans by Governor Miriam Ferguson of Texas, arrived here yesterday to attend the Second Annual Conference of International Labor Defense.

It is the first time he has been in Chicago since 1910 and he remarked at the office of International Labor Defense that it felt good to be out after 13 years of Texas prison. It was in 1913 that Cline, Rangel and the others were sentenced to life sentences for the murder of a deputy sheriff who Cline, for one, never saw, and concerning whose death no proofs of any kind were given by the prosecution.

But Rangel and Cline and their little band had been on the way to Mexico to aid the revolution of Madero against the reactionary government of Diaz. What is more Cline was a member of the Industrial Workers of the World. Reactionery forces whipped up public sentiment to fever heat against the defendants and after four trials, they were railroaded to prison.

The pardon of Governor Ferguson follows years of agitation for the release of the prisoners. From all parts of the world, but principally from the labor movement in this country and in Mexico came demands for the release of the Texas Martyrs.

Cline will be a guest of honor at the I. L. D convention and will be one of the speakers at a mass meeting to be held Labor Day evening at Ashland Auditorium.

Delegates Arrive.

Other delegates are arriving for the conference at which record attendance is predicted. Manya Ainsaa from California, Carl Hacker from Cleveland and John Stovel from Seattle were among the early arrivals.

The conference will open at 10 o'clock Sunday morning at Ashland Auditorium. The first order of business will be a report on the past year's work and future tasks by James P. Cannon, national secretary of I. L. D.

Organize is Slogan.

Sunday night the national executive committee will give a party for the delegates at Folkets Hus, 2733 Hirsch Boulevard.

Monday will be devoted to an organization conference in which all delegates will participate. "The main slogan of the conference this year will be organization," said Cannon. "The sentiment created during the year must be organized on a broad scale."

LARGE DELEGATIONS COMING TO I. L. D. CONFERENCE FROM OHIO; DETROIT IS WELL REPRESENTED

From the city of Detroit, Michigan, will come fifteen or more delegates to the second annual conference of International Labor Defense which will be held here on September 5 and 6 at the Ashland Auditorium. This is the information received by the national office from Cyril Lambkin, secretary of the Detroit local of I. L. D., who will himself represent that section at the conference. Trade unions and fraternal organizations will be represented in the Detroit delegation in addition to those from Detroit, Grand Rapids will also have its own delegate to the conference.

The nearby state of Ohio will also be well represented at the conference. From mining towns, steel cities, rubber centers and metropolitan districts delegates will come to lay plans for the next year of activity for united labor defense.

Yorkville, one of the mining towns in eastern Ohio, will be represented by a young miner. Akron the home of the rubber tire industry, will have a peratives that the A. F. of L. shall call upon the entire labor movement to embark on a general campaign to organize the many millions of unorganized, giving special attention to the basic and key industries, including steel, railroads, marine transport, mining, electrical manufacturing, chemicals, rubber, automobile, lumber, textile, etc. Emphasis must be laid on the organization of the unskilled workers.

The A. F. of L. convention shall create a general organizing committee to supervise the work of organization. Campaigns shall be initiated nationally in the various crafts and industries and locally on a general scale. A special organizing fund shall be created. The system of shop committees to mobilize the unorganized shall be established to induct them into the unions. The general organizing committee shall conduct a special campaign against the company unions, designed to convert them into real trade unions or to destroy them and to build up trade unions in their place.

TO facilitate organization work the A. F. of L. should henceforth hold its conventions in big industrial centers, discontinuing the present practice of holding them in summer resorts, such as Atlantic City.

To facilitate the organization of the unorganized, a general reduction of initiation fees shall be recommended to affiliated internationals with high fees.

In those industries where no organizations exist, the unions to be established shall be based on the industrial form. In industries where a whole group of conflicting, weak unions claim jurisdiction over the mass of unorganized workers, the jurisdiction shall be awarded forthwith to the basic union of the industry, such as to the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers in the steel industry, to the International Association of Machinists in the automobile and electrical manufacturing industries, to the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen in the packing industry, etc.

The campaign to organize the unorganized must be accompanied by a general demand for improved living standards of the workers.

2. Demands for Improved Living Standards

Thru advancing machine production and the speeding up of the workers by all manner of "efficiency" schemes to increase output, the employers are reaping profits almost beyond imagination. The unexampled profits in the General Motors corporation, the United States Steel corporation and the record profits of the railroads, loaded with over-capitalization tho they are, show that the capitalist class is enjoying fabulous profits wrung from labor.

BUT Labor? Labor has been "deflated" since the war. The cost of living has gone up faster and farther than wages have been increased. And the costs stay up while wages have been out in many industries. The average wage is well below $30 a week, a glaringly insufficient wage. The workers' health is undermined by the terrific speed-up.

To check this attack on the living standards of labor, the A. F. of L. must call upon the workers in the various industries to take advantage of the present active state in their industries to present demands for increased wages, decreased hours, and increased control over industry. All wage conflicts must be militantly conducted jointly by related trades. Attempts to cut wages anywhere must be resisted by a militant strike policy.

3. A Policy of Militant Action

The most dangerous tendency in the labor movement is that hidden behind the pretty phrase of "co-operation with the employers," now current with trade union leaders. The attack of the employers upon the trade unions and the standards of labor, cannot be stopped by having the unions adopt plans for increasing production. This only surrenders them to the employers. It demoralizes the very foundation of trade unionism and poisons the workers with the false teaching that labor has a common interest with those who exploit it.

Labor must call a halt to the trade union bureaucracy's policy which leads the workers into such "co-operation" traps set by the bosses. The A. F. of L. must declare for an aggressive policy of action against the employers. It must condemn the "B. & O." co-operation" or class collaboration policy as expressed in the Baltimore and Ohio Plan and similar schemes. It must reject the Watson-Parker Law, which encourages company unionism; outlaws strikes on the railroads, practically establishes compulsory arbitration, permits civil courts to pass upon the merits of labor disputes and establishes a partnership between labor officials and railroad magnates, to be used by the latter to raise railroad rates.

THE A. F. of L. must reject the "New Wage Policy" adopted by the last convention of the A. F. of L. and repudiate also the so-called "Monroe Doctrine of Labor." It must decisively condemn trade union capitalism, as expressed by labor banks, labor investment corporations, trade union life insurance companies, etc., and demand transformation of these institutions into genuine co-operatives. The investment of the workers' savings should be in the socialized industries of the Soviet Union.

4. A Labor Party

The present A. F. of L. policy of supporting candidates on the tickets of the republican and democratic parties is absolutely fatal to the best interests of the working class. It checks the growth of class consciousness. It makes a unified, successful fighting front of labor against capital impossible and it renders impossible the formation of labor in government. The evil effects of this policy are illustrated afresh by the exposure of political corruption in Pennsylvania and Illinois.

In place of this ruinous policy, the A. F. of L. shall declare for the formation of a labor party, which shall make a bloc with the organized farmers. To put this policy into effect, it shall immediately call conferences in the various cities and states for the purpose of establishing labor parties, and later hold a national labor party convention.

Labor should enter the November elections under its own banner. As the basis for organization the labor party there should be prepared a political program covering the pressing needs of the working class, which should contain the following main planks:

(a) Revision of the tax and tariff laws so as to take the burden of taxation and higher prices thru the tariff off the workers and farmers. Higher surtaxes on the incomes of the great corporations and multi-millionaires.

(b) Legislation outlawing the use of the injunction, police and soldiers in labor disputes.

(c) The general eight-hour day in industry.

(d) Fight against all proposal to register, photograph and finger-print foreign-born workers.

(e) Industry to bear the cost of unemployment thru legislation making compulsory the payment of trade union wages to all unemployed workers, funds to be raised thru higher taxation of profits.

(f) The prohibition of the labor of children under 16 years of age, with provision to maintain the children of workers and provide for their education up to the age of 16.

(g) Relief for the farmers thru adoption of the principle of the McNary-Haugen bill and the addition appropriation of a half billion dollars to provide for the establishment of co-operative marketing associations controlled by the farm organizations and for the improvement of agricultural production.

(h) The nationalization of all large scale industry, including mines, railroads and the great manufacturing industries, food distributing organizations, etc. The establishment of workers' control and the participation of the workers in the management of these nationalized industries.

(i) Reduction of the army and navy and a fight against militarism and imperialism. The withdrawal of American soldiers from all foreign territory. Immediate independence for the Philippines and Porto Rico and the right of self-determination for all other American colonies and possessions.

5. Save the Miners' Union

The A. F. of L., in view of the deepening crisis in the mining industry, and the reactionary leadership of the Lewis machine, which has already resulted in the collapse of the Illinois Union in many of the most important districts under the open shop attacks of the coal operators and thus is threatening the very life of the whole organization, should call upon the whole labor movement to lend its active support by furnishing men and money to help carry on the widespread organizations campaign necessary to rebuild the Miners' Union in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Kentucky, Alabama, Colorado and many other demoralized and disorganized districts. The fight must be to save the Miners' Union, whose threatened destruction menaces the progress of the whole labor movement.

6. Nationalization of Industry

The A. F. of L. must declare against the private ownership of industries vital to the life of society. It must demand the nationalization of coal mines, railroads, superpower plants, grain elevators, packing houses, etc., with workers' control in the management of these industries. Any further development of unrealized labor depends upon taking this stand.

7. Against American Imperialism

One of the most outstanding features of world development is the rise of American imperialism, which is not only enhjugating colonial peoples and the working classes of foreign nations to Wall Street bankers, but rehounding in its competitive effects against the American workers. It creates an ever-growing danger of war.

The A. F. of L. shall condemn the imperialist policy of the American capitalist class. It shall reject participation in the league of nations and demand withdrawal from the world court. It shall condemn the Dawes plan and the proposed war debt settlement plans. It must demand immediate and unconditional freedom for the Philippines and Porto Rico, and condemn the policy of American imperialism in China and other Far Eastern countries above all it must demand that the United States government a policy of hands off Mexico and other Latin American countries.

The A. F. of L. shall act immediately to transform the Pan-American Federation of Labor into an instrument of struggle against American imperialism, now beginning in the Latin-American countries under the leadership of the Anglo-American Anti-Imperialist League. It must condemn the plan of the Pan-American Union to develop into an American League of Nations, and specifically condemn in detail, the growing militarism of the United States.

8. Company Unions

Company unions constitute a real menace to organized labor. They have spread into many industries, especially those of a basic and trustified character. The employers have established these organizations in order to increase production and to block the formation of trade unions. The A. F. of L. shall devote more attention to this important problem and it shall wage an active warfare against the company unions, with the aim in view of breaking them up and establishing trade unions. To this end it will often be necessary to work within the company unions and capture them.

The A. F. of L. must also be used against company unions are an active defense of the workers' interests in open struggle against the employers and a complete repudiation of the ideas and practices of collaboration with the employers in speeding up production and eliminating strikes, as expressed by the B. & O. plan and the Watson-Parker railroad law; a militant campaign to organize the unorganized; the amalgamation of the craft unions into industrial unions, and the systematic building-up generally of the trade unions into real fighting organizations to defend the class interests of the workers.

9. Fight Against Injunctions

The use of anti-labor injunctions in labor disputes is a stab at the heart of the labor movement and the A. F. of L. shall call for a more militant fight against the issuance of injunctions. Such tyrannical action by the courts must be countered by a mass violation of the injunction by the strikers involved and by the labor movement generally.

10. Political Prisoners

The A. F. of L. shall initiate a vigorous campaign for the release of Sacco and Vanzetti, Mooney, Billings and the many other labor prisoners. A special day shall be designated therefor upon the various state federal and local central bodies shall hold meetings of protest, adopt resolutions demanding the release of political prisoners and send delegations in co-operation with the A. F. of L. delegation, to the governors of California, Massachusetts and other states holding political prisoners, demanding the release of these prisoners.

11. Against Racial Discrimination

The trade unions must include wage workers regardless of race, creed, sex, age or color. The A. F. of L. must declare for the removal of all bars against Negroes, Japanese, Mexicans and other races and national groups which are being discriminated against in entering the trade unions. It must demand the abolition of all Jim-Crow laws, practices and discriminations, and the elimination of lynching.

The A. F. of L. shall initiate an active campaign to organize Negro workers, and demand that they be given equal pay for equal work, and extend them the utmost

MADEROS' STAY OF EXECUTION NOW SECURED

Governor Changes His Decision

By S. D. LEVINE.
(Special to The Daily Worker)

BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 3.—The defense attorneys for Sacco and Vanzetti will have an opportunity to present the confession of Costello Maderos, confessed participant in the South Braintree murder and robbery for which Sacco and Vanzetti have been sentenced, at a hearing for a new trial on Sept. 16.

Following the refusal of Governor Fuller of Massachusetts to grant a respite for Maderos, who was sentenced to be executed on Sept. 5, the governor was prevailed upon to change his decision after the presiding judge in the case, Thayer, recommended a delay of execution. Attorney General Devlin concurred in Judge Thayer's recommendation to the governor.

At First Denied.

The stay of execution to Maderos is for seven weeks and will permit him to attend the hearing on the 5th of the month in person to make an adequate record of his testimony.

The governor had refused the stay to Defense Attorney Thompson on the occasion of his first request because he did not have Judge Thayer's recommendation. This was later secured and the stay granted.

Thompson claims that the confession of Maderos made in the penitentiary some time ago to Sacco and Vanzetti attorneys completely exonerates the two Italian workers and proves beyond question that they were railroaded to within the shadow of the electric chair.

Labor Day Good Time to Start Cleansing Unions of All the Farringtons

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

MONDAY, Sept. 6th, is "Labor Day." Not the International Labor Day, May 1st, of the militant world toil. It is the sterile "Labor Day" of the "class peace" between the reactionary labor officialdom and the capitalist exploiters who, together, seek to straight-jacket the whole working class into conformity with the profit-taking social system. Two developments are worth careful study on this year's Labor Day of the "class peace." They are:

First. In the trade union movement, the ousting of Frank Farrington as president of the Illinois Miners' Union.

Second. In the parliamentary arena, the exposure of wholesale corruption and the expenditure of huge sums of money in the primary elections, especially in Pennsylvania and Illinois.

These two developments cannot be taken separately. In fact, they must be studied together, if labor is to understand the crying necessity for the acceptance of the struggle principles in carrying on its war against its enemies.

It was Farrington, now an outcast from the labor movement, who energetically supported Frank L. Smith, the candidate of Sam Insull, the multi-millionaire light, heat, power and traction magnate, for the United States senate.

It is a reflection, of course, upon the class consciousness of the Illinois coal miners, that they did not oust Farrington immediately he revealed his alliance, in politics, with labor's worst enemies, which has continued for a long period of years.

The DAILY WORKER ceaselessly pointed out the treason to the working class committed by Farrington in supporting Smith, Governor Len Small and their whole tribe of political agents of the great capitalists. It pointed out the necessity for a complete break with the capitalist parties and the development by the workers of their own independent political action thru a labor party. But the coal miners would not listen. Farrington was allowed to continue in this open treason.

Neither was the miners' district executive board stirred as the startling revelations were made showing that Insull "donated" $200,000 to the Smith campaign fund, with Studebaker and Copley, two other traction magnates, donating $25,000 each. This is the Studebaker of the Studebaker Automobile corporation that hears his name. The union was blinded to this treacherous alliance of Farrington with the Smith-Insull-Studebaker-Copley interests.

Evidently Farrington felt the next step was perfectly safe. He thought that he could sign a contract for $25,000 per year as "labor counsel" for the Peabody Coal Co. while he was still president of the Illinois Mine Workers' Union. That is exactly what he did. He brazenly confesses in the affidavit to the coal miner, "You can't dictate to me where I will take my employment." He claimed that the $5,000 per year that he received from the coal miners was not sufficient to provide for his old age and for the bringing up of his family. What, then, becomes of the families, the women and children of the coal miners, who must get along on one-fifth or one-tenth of that sum per year?

Yet this treason the coal miners could understand. Farrington has therefore been booted out of the organization. Even "Labor," the official organ of the railroad official dom, refers to the charges as "sensational."

Efforts will be made in some quarters to show that the case of Farrington is an isolated one. The pious supporters of things as they are will "thank god that there are so few Farringtons."

But the coal miners must know better. They have too often been betrayed by their officials going over to the employ of the coal barons.

Farrington joins a procession that includes such former officials as Phil Penna, of Indiana; Tom Lewis, of Ohio; Thomas Haggerty, of Pennsylvania, to mention only a few, all of whom now hold lucrative positions in the pay of the mine owners, using the experience they have gained in the miners' union to betray the mine workers.

These traitor elements can only be fought on the broadest possible basis. This is on the basis of the class struggle.

Farrington became a marked man when his contract with the Peabody Coal Co. was made public. It should have been marked for expulsion from the miners' union when he first proclaimed his support of the capitalist political parties. Instead, the great rank and file of the miners' union permitted Farrington, Lewis, Ven Bittner, Murray and their kind to expel the left wing militants, the greatest builders of an effective miners' union. But the tide turns. It must turn all the way.

Years ago the miners' union declared that no member of the organization could belong at the same time to the employers' National Civic Federation.

In the case of Farrington, the miners have declared that no member of the union can agree, while holding that membership, to enter the pay of the mine owners.

The next logical step is for the membership of the miners' union to put the stamp of traitor on those officials who use their position openly to give aid and comfort to the political parties of the mine owners.

The union official who uses his position today to advance the candidacies of republican and democratic party candidates is the likely traitor of tomorrow in the industrial struggle.

It may be said that the miners' union in Great Britain has advanced that far. No liberal or tory supporter uncovered in labor's ranks in Great Britain could win any standing in the British coal miners' union.

Study the political affiliations of the labor officials in the different American trade unions and it will be seen to contain a varied nest of prospective traitors, whole swarms of Farringtons.

John H. Walker, Victor Olander, John Fitzpatrick, Edward N. Nockels and hosts of other officials of labor, right in Chicago and Illinois, who are so enthusiastic in support of Insull's Mr. Smith, might profitably examine the case of Frank Farrington when they talk at great length of the advantages of supporting the parties of the greatest exploiters of labor.

The workers cannot dictate what employment an official will accept. But they can say that an official that accepts employment from an enemy of the working class, or supports an enemy political party of the working class, must get out of the organized trade union movement. This year's Labor Day, altho it is the Labor Day of the "class peace," is a good time to consider the cleansing of the unions of all the Farringtons.

Why not a small bundle of The DAILY WORKER sent to you regularly to take to your trade union meeting!

TUMULTY FACES TWO ASPIRANTS FOR PRESIDENCY

Fiskwick, Farrington Man, Enters the Race

EDITOR'S NOTE: Today's installment of "The Shady Record of Frank Farrington" appears on page four. In view of the attempt of John L. Lewis to make political capital out of Farrington's $25,000 contract with the Peabody Coal Company our readers should not miss these articles and read of Lewis' complicity with Farrington in helping to betray the interests of the coal miners to the operators.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Sept. 3.—With the entrance of Harry Fiswick into the race for the presidency of the Illinois Miners Union in the elections which will be held next December, a lively three-cornered contest is promised.

The two other candidates are Joseph Tumulty, of Springfield, progressive, and William Sneed, of Herrin, reactionary, and friend of John L. Lewis, international president.

Fiskwick is a close supporter of Farrington's and has filled the office of president since Farrington was ousted by order of the executive board after it was learned that he had accepted a position with a $25,000 a year salary from the Peabody Coal company.

Members of the executive board say that the office of vice-president left vacant by Fiskwick's elevation to the presidency may be filled soon but by whom is a question. It is reported that Sneed was offered the position but in view of his ambition for the presidency it is not believed he will accept.

Walter Nesbit of Belleville, secretary-treasurer will be a candidate to succeed himself.

The officers elected in December will take office on April 1, 1927, the same day on which the present wage scale with the operators expires.

Lewis Fearing A Angel.

John L. Lewis is taking advantage of the exposure of Farrington's exit out in poso as the personification of purity in the United Mine Workers of America. The progressives however, have a list of crimes against Lewis just as lengthy as the list of Farrington's misdemeanors.

They point out that Farrington and Lewis made an alliance against the forward-looking elements in the Illinois Miners Union, when Farrington's machine was unable to stand up against the opposition alone. Farrington, who had supported Howat against Lewis, deserted his friend and lined up with Lewis against the Kansas mine leader at the Indianapolis convention.

Now Come On Frank!

"When thieves fall out, honest men get an earful" said a well-known progressive in the Springfield district to The DAILY WORKER reporter. "We are all anxiously waiting for Farrington's next blast against Lewis. Those boys know more about each other than they have yet revealed. But what they won't tell we will and before the ballots are counted next December every coal digger in Illinois will know that Lewis is just as crooked as Farrington; that in fact his contract has been more inimical to the welfare of the union than even Farrington's because while Farrington was chiefly interested in wrecking District 12 in the interests of the Peabody Coal company, Lewis wrecked the international in the interests of his own personal career and the operators in general."

HOW FARES FASCISM?

The truth about the present status of Fascism and "who's who" in the present black shirt government will appear in Wednesday's DAILY WORKER from the pen of G. Rossi, a specialist on the Italian political situation. Unlike journalists who visit Italy with a commission from the international bankers to boost Mussolini, the writer of the forthcoming article is a member of a workingclass organization that is under the iron heel of Mussolini's regime. Mussolini is only a figurehead—a prisoner, the a voluntary one, of the big financiers, says our correspondent. Don't miss Wednesday's DAILY WORKER!

PASSAIC MILL STRIKERS GET U. T. W. CHARTER

8,000 Strikers Signed Up in A. F. of L.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PASSAIC, N. J., Sept. 2.—With the chartering yesterday of Passaic Local, No. 1603, United Textile Workers of America, the striking textile workers of Passaic and vicinity, who have waged a heroic battle for the past 35 weeks against the robber textile barons, became affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, thus fulfilling one of the major aims announced from the beginning of the strike by the former leadership.

With the continued backing of the American Federation of Labor, which, now that the strikers have been admitted into the U. T. W., will be intensified a thousand-fold, the strikers expect to bring their 224-day strike to a speedy and victorious close.

To Ask Congressional Probe.

Henry T. Hunt, vice-chairman of the Lauck committee, thru which the A. F. of L. affiliation was negotiated, said yesterday that the work of the committee was not yet ended, as it had been asked by the U. T. W. to collaborate in further negotiations with the mill owners.

Mr. Hunt also said that the work of organizing a general committee of 100 to promote a congressional investigation of the textile industry with special attention to tariffs and wage scales, will be proceeded with. "I would advise the textile barons to put their house in order before this investigation," Mr. Hunt added, "as they are in no position to go before the public now." He pointed out as an absurdity the 74 per cent protective tariff imposed on the American consumer thru the tax on imported textile goods, which, he said, combined with the miserably low wages paid their workers, enables the American textile manufacturers to make 100 per cent profits.

Charter Dated August 30.

The new charter is dated August 30 and 4,500 of the 8,000 union cards are ready for distribution in Passaic as soon as the executive committee of the strikers goes thru the formality of accepting the charter from the Lauck committee, to whom the charter has been officially turned over by the U. T. W. Eight thousand strikers have enrolled so far, but the lists are still long at 743 Main avenue, and it is confidently predicted that over 12,000 will enter the new A. F. of L. union.

At 3:30 tomorrow Thomas McMahon, president of the U. T. W., will meet the strikers' executive committee to discuss the details of the organization of the new union and plan for future mediation proceedings.

Albert Weisbord, the organizer of the strike and leader thru the past seven months of bitter struggle, will step aside as soon as the strikers accept the charter of the U. T. W. in accordance with his promise during the early negotiations when the U. T. W. demanded his withdrawal from the strike as the basis of their acceptance of the strikers into a U. T. W. local. Weisbord, for the past several weeks, has been rallying the strikers to the U. T. W. and doing everything in his power to keep their ranks intact and turn over a 100 per cent strike to the U. T. W. In this he has fully succeeded, and the strike today is still a 100 per cent strike.

Leader of Passaic Textile Strikers

Albert Weisbord, the leader of the striking textile workers of Passaic, N. L. D., which will meet on the fifth.

protection of the trade unions. Special campaigns should be launched to organize the Mexican and Japanese workers in this country.

12. Women and Youth

The A. F. of L. shall emphasize the special importance of organizing women and youth workers, calling upon its affiliated unions to remove all constitutional barriers existing against these workers and to intensify the work of organizing them. It must demand equal pay for equal work, prohibition of night work, shorter labor and excessive hours, and propose that their demands be brought forward in all wage movements by trade unions in industries in which they are employed.

13. Corrupt Labor Papers

The A. F. of L., in order to lay a basis for a campaign to eliminate the numerous fake labor papers which infest many cities with or without the endorsement of local labor, shall appoint a special committee to investigate this prolific form of corruption in the labor movement and to report back to the next A. F. of L. convention.

14. British Coal Miners' Strike

The strike of the British coal miners is of profound importance to every trade unionist of the world. Their victory will be our victory and their defeat would encourage attacks on labor in America. The A. F. of L. shall pledge its complete and active support to the strike of the British miners. It shall call upon the marine transport and railroad unions to refuse to haul coal destined for Great Britain, and it shall call upon all affiliated members each to donate immediately to the strike relief fund a sum of not less than two hours' pay. In addition it shall proceed to organize a loan of not less than $3,000,000 from the labor banks to the Miners' Federation of Great Britain.

15. International Affiliation

The A. F. of L. shall endorse the Anglo-Russian Trade Union Unity Committee, and support its program of a world congress for trade union unity, to include the Red International of Labor Unions, the American Federation of Labor, the Confederation of Labor of South America, China, India, etc. It should recommend to its affiliated internationals that they affiliate to the respective industrial federations of the Amsterdam International on the basis of the admission of the Russian trade unions and the holding of a world trade union unity congress.

16. Recognition of the Soviet Union

The progress in the Soviet Union of the socialized industries can no longer be questioned and the Soviet government of workers and peasants now stands before all the world as a historic triumph of labor. Its strength has been shown in the recognition by scores of nations, among them the most important countries of the world. Only the United States withholds such recognition, and the A. F. of L. should demand of the United States government that it recognize the Soviet Union and establish full diplomatic and commercial relations with that country.

17. Trade Union Delegation to The Soviet Union

The trade unions of Europe have practically all sent delegations to investigate the conditions of labor under the Soviet government, no longer trusting the prejudiced news of the capitalist press, which time after time has proven wholly false. The American trade unionists have a right to know at first hand why it is that the whole world capitalist class is so bitterly opposed to the Soviet government and what are the conditions that 8,000,000 Russian trade unionists share under that government. Therefore, the A. F. of L. shall accept the invitation of the Russian unions and send an official delegation to visit the Soviet Union and submit a report to the American labor movement.

18. Centralization of the Trade Union Movement

One of the main weaknesses of the A. F. of L. is its decentralized form of organization, which cripples the effectiveness of the workers' struggles against the employers. The A. F. of L. shall, therefore, initiate an active campaign for the centralization of the forces of the trade union movement, including the affiliation of the Railroad Brotherhoods, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and other independent unions.

The executive council shall be enlarged to 45 members, representing principally mining, railroad, metal, textile and other key and basic industries. The executive council shall meet quarterly, with a smaller board to transact executive business in between meetings.

We must look forward to the time when, with a decentralized A. F. of L. and an educated membership, all affiliated unions, before presenting demands to their employers, shall first have them passed upon the executive council, whereupon the executive council shall mobilize the support of the labor movement behind these demands to the extent and in the manner required by the situation.

The executive council shall have the right to levy strike assessments. There shall be a universal transfer system prevailing between the various unions, and efforts shall be initiated to establish a standardized dues system. Progressively, the Central Labor Councils shall be extended more jurisdiction over the organization and activities of their affiliated unions.

19. Amalgamation

As a part of the general movement to centralize the forces of the trade unions, the A. F. of L. shall endorse the principle of industrial unionism and call a series of conferences in the various industries for the purpose of amalgamating its many craft unions into industrial organizations. In carrying thru this amalgamation, the principle of organization on the basis of the shop, instead of the miscellaneous local union, shall be introduced. Amalgamation is a powerful weapon against company unionism.

20. Democratization of the A. F. L.

The task of democratising the A. F. of L. is basic, and a necessary complement to the centralisation of the trade union movement. The present system of complete control of the A. F. of L. and its component unions, the A. F. of L. convention, etc., within the hands of a small, autocratic bureaucracy to the exclusion of rank and file participation and control is highly injurious to the growth, function and progress of the organization. For the democratization of the A. F. of L. the following measures are necessary:

At least 25 per cent of the members of the executive council shall be actual workers. The representation of the various international and local bodies in the A. F. of L. convention shall consist of at least 60 per cent of rank and file workers employed at their trades. All convention delegates must be selected by general referendum vote of their respective organisation. No person should be a delegate to the convention who is himself an employer of labor or an owner of stock in any capitalist business institution.

THE convention representation of the State Federations and Central Labor Bodies shall be increased from the present system of one delegate each to from two to ten, and two to five, respectively, according to the size of these organizations. Upon the demand of 25 per cent of the members of the executive council, or of 25 per cent of the convention at the A. F. of L. convention, or of 1,000 local unions, any question, including the election of officers, shall be submitted to a general referendum vote.

In order to make a start at correcting the glaring evil of an overpaid officialdom, the salaries and expense accounts of the general officers of the A. F. of L. shall be reduced 50 per cent, and the general organizers accordingly.

THE agenda system shall be introduced by a provision providing that two months before the holding of the annual convention, an agenda shall be made up touching upon the most vital issues confronting the labor movement, and such agenda shall be submitted to the various organizations for their consideration.

Full freedom of expression shall be guaranteed to minorities in the unions.

The foregoing general proposals for democratisation shall also be introduced into all the affiliated unions of the American Federation of Labor.

CONVENTION OF ANTI-FASCISTI IN NEW YORK

First National Meet Opens Tomorrow

NEW YORK, Sept. 2. — The first national convention of the Anti-Fascist Alliance will be held here Sept. 5th. Delegates from all parts of the United States, representing thousands of Italian organized workers will be present at the convention.

Industrial, political and fraternal working class organisations will be represented and also Italian refugees driven from their homeland by the fascist regime. Masonic organizations will be represented. Mussolini has outlawed the Masonic organizations in Italy.

The present status of fascism in Italy will be discussed and consideration will be given to the problem of fighting fascism in Italy and preventing the spread of its influence in the United States.

Tried To Make Split.

A trivial incident in the Anti-Fascist Alliance due to the resignation of a socialist branch from the anti-black shirt organization was magnified by the socialist party organs into a serious crisis. Due to some criticisms made by the Communists of certain socialist members in the alliance the latter have managed that the alliance take measures that would mean the elimination of Communists.

This demand was turned down by the membership and the west side branch of the socialist party resigned. The only sufferers from this attempt at creating a split were the socialists.

The Anti-Fascist alliance was organized in April 1923 and has done splendid work since its organization. It has conducted several campaigns against fascism and has rallied the great majority of the Italian workers in America to its side.

Organized Big Protest.

When Matteotti was murdered on the order of Mussolini the alliance organized great demonstrations in every large city in the United States against the murderers. Mussolini sent emissaries to this country to counteract this propaganda but his speakers were never able to hold one successful mass meeting. Italian workers met his agents on the pier and the police had to protect them from the wrath of their anti-fascist fellow countrymen.

When Valentino's body was on exhibition in New York City, the fascisti tried to make political capital out of the situation. Black shirts were sent to stand guard over his body but the anti-fascist alliance protested and the guards were compelled to withdraw to prevent a riot.

Judge Lenient With Gary Boss Who Beat up Dyer on Strike

GARY, Ind., Sept. 2.—A case of a striking member of the Cleaners and Dyers Local 17563 against a plant owner who slugged him, was tried here before Justice of Peace C. I. Clemence.

The defendant, C. T. Warner, the owner of a shop, pleaded guilty on a charge of assault and battery brought about by the union man, brother Wilfung. The boss accused himself stating the first offense I will let it go at that. It was unfair to beat up a man taking advantage of the physical incapacity (Wilfung is not in good health.)

The boss had to pay $17.50 $32.50, the balance of the bond, was retained by the court as security for C. Warner's appearance in court on two more charges.

Bleakening of Work in the Steel Mills of Gary

GARY, Ind., Sept. 2. — In the morning one can see large crowds of workers standing at the gates of the Illinois Steel Co. But only a few are taken in. The Axel Mill is at a standstill. The Wheel mill is working only four days a week. The plate mill is working likewise four days a week.

By Upton Sinclair

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.

J. Arnold Ross is a wealthy independent California oil operator who at first Jim Ross, a teamster and then a merchant before he went into the business. Bunny, his son, is a sensitive boy, learning the oil business and also going to high school. Dad has a field in the San Elido Valley on the Watkins ranch. The Watkins family are holy rollers. Eli Watkins has become a religious fakir with a church of his own. Bunny had met Paul Watkins when they were both much younger. He liked Paul who had run away from home because he didn't like the religious discipline imposed by his father. Paul is now a carpenter in the new Watkins field and his sister Ruth is keeping house for him. The Watkins field is really Bunny's and he has been made very wealthy thru the bringing in of a great well which has grown to fourteen derricks. In the meantime war with Germany looms and the man in the oil field under the leadership of an organizer for the Oil Workers' Union, Tom Aston, prepare to strike for an eight-hour day and a raise in wages. Paul becomes a leader of the strikers and a battle on between the oil workers and the Oil Operators' Association which supplies thugs and gunmen to the various operators, including Dad, during the strike. Bunny is back at school and receives the reports only thru the press. He is somewhat sympathetic to the strikers and doesn't believe the calumnies printed in the press about the strikers. Paul becomes a member of the strike committee and editor of the strike paper. Bunny takes a trip up to the field and finally gets a chance to talk to Paul who tells him he is too soft to take the stand he would like to take—with the strikers.

IX.

Bunny walked on and there was a fever in his soul. He was enraged because of Paul's lack of understanding, his cruel harshness; but all the time another voice inside him kept insisting, "He's right! You're soft, you're soft—that's the word for it!" This, you see, was the thing in Bunny which made his sister Bertie so absolutely furious; that Bunny subjected himself to Paul, that he was willing to let Paul kick him, and to take it meekly. He was so utterly without sense of the dignity which his father's millions conferred upon him!

Bunny went back to school, and the oil-workers took a hitch in their belt, hanging on by their eye teeth, as the saying is. Meantime America was in the war, and Congress was passing a series of measures—one providing for a vast "liberty loan," to pay the war costs, and another for the registering of all men of fighting age, and the drafting of a huge army.

And then began to come wild rumors of a truce with labor. It came first in connection with the railwaymen, many of whom were on strike for a living wage and better conditions. The railways were absolutely vital to the winning of the war, and so Congress must authorize the Government to intervene in disputes, and make terms with the unions, and see that everybody got a square deal. If such steps were taken for the railway men, they would surely have to be taken for others; the oil workers might get those rights of which the Employers' Federation was endeavoring to deprive them! The labor press was full of talk about the new deal that was coming, and telegrams came from labor headquarters in Washington, bidding the men at Paradise stand firm.

It was like the "big scene" in the old "ten-twenty-thirty" melodrama that we used to see on the Bowery in our boyhood in which the heroine is lashed to a log in the saw-mill, and being swiftly drawn to the place where she will be sliced down the middle, or the hero comes galloping madly on horseback, and leaps from his steed, and smashes in the door with an axe, and springs to the lever and stops the machinery at exactly the critical instant. Or, if you want to be more high-brow and dignified, it was like the ancient Greek tragedies, in which, after the fates of all the characters have been tied into a hopeless knot, a god descends from the sky in a machine, and steps out, and resolves the perplexities, and virtue is triumphant and vice is cast down. You believe this, because it is in a Greek classic; but your will find it less easy to believe that the "open crowd" in Southern California, the whole power of the industrial system, with all the millions of their banks, their political machine and their strike-breaking agencies, their spies and gunmen, and their state militiamen with machine-guns and armored cars in the background—that all this terrific power felt its hand suddenly grasped by a stronger hand, and drawn back from the throat of its victim! Another god descended from a machine—a lean old Yankee divinity, with a white goatee and a suit made of red and white stripes with blue stars spangled over it; Uncle Sam himself stretched out his mighty hand and declared that oil workers were human beings as well as citizens, and would be protected in their rights as both!

The announcement came from labor headquarters in Washington, saying that the oil workers would get a living wage and the eight-hour day; a government "conciliator" would be sent out to see to it, and meantime, they were to go back to work, so that the benevolent old gentleman with the white goatee and the red, white and blue suit might have all the oil he needed. The President of the United States was making speeches—oh, such wonderful, convincing speeches, about the wars that was to end the war, and bring justice to all mankind, and establish the rule of the people and for the people over all the earth. Such thrills as shook all hearts with a fervor of consecration! And such rejoicing on the playground of the school-house at Paradise, when the news came that the gunmen would slink back into the slums from which they had come, and that work was to start up at once!

Dad got the news early in the morning, and Bunny danced all over the house, and made as much noise as if it were a football game; and Dad said he felt pretty good himself, he wouldn't have been able to hold on another week without them. And Bunny said he'd cut school in the afternoon and they'd drive out and see the celebration, and make friends with everybody again, and get things started. The first thing they would do was to tear down that barbed wire fence that separated capital from labor! In the new world there would be no barbed wire and no more bad feeling—the roses would bloom on the hedges in front of the workers' homes, and there would be a book of the President's speeches in the reading-room, and all the oil workers would have time to read it!

Labor Day

We greet Labor Day even tho the official holiday of labor in the United States has been robbed of its revolutionary significance by the reactionary bureaucrats who use the occasion, not for the development of the spirit of class consciousness among the workers, but to instill into their minds the pernicious idea that the interests of labor and capital are identical and that the best interests of the working class can be served by co-operating with the employers instead of by fighting against them in order to win more of the products of their toil.

It is a rather ironical fact that the initiative for making the first of May an international labor holiday should come from the United States. Today the labor movement of every other country in the world excepting the United States recognizes May Day as its day of celebration and reckoning.

But the best-laid plans don't always work out as expected. The organised workers can take advantage of the opportunity to demonstrate on Labor Day. They can nullify the propaganda of the labor lieutenants of capitalism by bringing the burning issues of the class struggle in concrete form to the fore.

In the textile regions of New Jersey and New England the slaves of the mill barons are waging a long drawn out battle for better conditions and the right to organize. In New York City the I. L. G. W. U. is on the firing line. The bituminous coal diggers are battling—in a disorganised way—against the contract-breaking operators. The same is true of the anthracite miners. A leader of the Illinois Miners' Union has been exposed in the act of selling out to the enemy. The entire bureaucracy of th A. F. of L. has gone over to the master class, ideologically at least.

Internationally the biggest event of the year and the most magnificent gesture on the part of the proletariat since the successful Russian revolution was the British general strike in aid of the miners whose gallant struggle still continues.

Labor Day speakers must stress the importance of the British miners' strike, expose the treachery of the leaders of the Trade Union Congress who deserted the coal diggers and more important still urge the American workers to continue their assistance to their striking brothers and their needy families.

And last but not least class-conscious labor will hail the coming ninth anniversary of the Russian Revolution which today stands stronger than ever as a challenge to world capitalism and a tower of strength to the exploited workers of the world.

Labor has suffered defeats during the past year, but in the struggle it has gained experience. The ultimate triumph of labor is inevitable and every labor defeat is only a rehearsal for final victory.

Whose Governor Is Al Smith?

Jovial Alfred Smith, governor of New York state, who is willing to take a foaming glass of not-so-near beer with the humbleat ward heeler in Tammany Hall, back-slapping Al, the beloved of the drooling sentimentalists, friend of labor fakers and Wall Street bankers, praised by right wing leaders and vacillating centrists of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, has finally shown his hand. Governor Smith threw his influence on the side of the manufacturers at a crucial moment of the strike by throwing the blame for the continuation of the struggle on the shoulders of the strike leaders.

Under pressure of the left wing workers in the I. L. G. W. the leaders were forced to reject the governor's suggestion that the dispute be arbitrated. Arbitration always plays into the hands of the employers. The impartial arbitrator is yet to be born.

While the Sigman leadership of the I. L. G. W. U. docilely followed the genial Al's suggestions, the genial Al continued to shower praise on the union but nothing more substantial. Now that the left wing has asserted itself and refused to play the poodle to Al, the governor substitutes a frown for a smile and the uniformed thugs of his puppet, Mayor Jimmy Walker, get busy with their clubs. Needless to say there is no police hickory broken on the heads of the manufacturers.

The representatives of the master class can afford to be pleasant and agreeable as long as the workers are submissive. But when the latter assert themselves the sharp claws of the capitalist tiger emerges from the velvety sheath.

Which proves that there can be no lasting solution of the workers' problem until all capitalists, the smooth-tongued as well as the acid-tongued, the "good" as well as the "bad," are consigned to the dump heap of history.

Wipe Out the Landis Crowd

The citizens' committee for the enforcement of the Landis award has sent a full crew of scabs into Chicago to finish the De Wolf building. It did not do this without warning. All thru the strike it has been threatening to supply strikebreakers. It did furnish guards on the first day of the strike. Now it is proceeding logically to break the strike.

It stands to reason that work cannot be stopped for any length of time on two or three buildings when the great aggregation of capital represented by the citizens' committee stands ready to support its open shop contractors. Ability to continue the strike on the De Wolf job depends on the readiness of the Chicago Building Trades Council to strike the rest of the thirty million dollars worth of building construction nominally classed as "Landis Award." Even the citizens' committee cannot find strikebreakers for that much work. There is a chance now to put the infamous Landis award crowd out of commission, if the council has the courage and the energy to carry on a fight on a big scale. If they are not willing to do this, the members of the unions concerned must find a way to compel action.

Now that Frank Farrington is exposed as a high-salaried company employe, even liberal labor journalists are ready to spank him. But Farrington is no more venal today than he has been ever since he became prominent in the affairs of the United Mine Workers.

CHAMORRO SLAPS AT MEXICO THRU NATIONS' LEAGUE

Nicaraguan Revolution Approaches Bluefields

GENEVA, Sept. 3.—The Nicaragusn government headed by President Chamorra who operates in close touch with the American bankers, has protested to the league of nations against alleged aid by the Mexican navy to revolutionists in Nicaragua.

Mexico is not a member of the league but has been sent a copy of the protest. It states that the auxiliary cruiser Concon of the Mexican navy set sail from Salina Cruz with the full knowledge of the government officials and "engaged in a freebooting expedition against the peace of Nicaragua." More particularly, it is claimed, the ship conveyed arms and ammunition to the rebel army.

Lsegus Little Use.

Almost any positive action the league of nations may take will be an infringement on the Monroe Doctrine. If the council of the league investigates and finds Mexico guilty, Nicaragua, which is a member nation, will be permitted by the league to wage war against her powerful neighbor with the full consent of the league, which may also help the attack by a commercial imbargot, the so-called "economic blockade."

Revolution Gaining.

BLUEFIELDS, Nicaragua, Sept. 3. The town is under the domination of the United States cruiser Galveston. Bands of revolutionists are operating almost up to the city limits. Continued reports arrive from the center of the country showing that recruits are flocking to the armies marching against the Chamorra dictatorship, but that these armies are not yet sufficiently solidified to do more than make sporadic raids. They may take the field in force at any time.

Gun-runners approach the Pacific coast ports and fight with the Chamorra coast guards and American aviators in the government service.

MUSSOLINI'S happy Italians must now eat black bread and forego many necessities in an attempt to keep the lira from hitting the bottom. The Fascist regime has been able to do everything except produce prosperity by decree and mandate. Despite the efforts of American newspapers favorable to the Mussolini dictatorship, tourist traffic in Italy fell off thirty per cent this year and hotel keepers are cursing the black shirts way down their midriffs. To mildly criticise the Fascist government is to solicit a speedy demise. Nevertheless, in spite of persecution and terror the black shirts have not succeeded in completely smashing the labor organizations. There is reason to believe that Italy is nearing an economic crisis which the Fascist magicians cannot survive.

THE British government has denied M. Tomsky, chairman of the executive council of Russian trade unions, permission to land in England. Tomski had planned to attend the T. U. C. convention in Bournemouth, which opens next Monday. The presence of Tomski, leader of a trade union movement that has its heel on the neck of capitalism would encourage the British miners in their fight. It is most likely that the British government was no more anxious to exclude Tomski than the T. U. C. leaders who betrayed the miners by calling off the general strike.

The Shady Record of Frank Farrington

THE following sketch of Frank Farrington's career in the United Mine Workers of America is a summary of a series of articles that appeared in The DAILY WORKER in October 1924, under the title, "On a Labor Faker's Trail." Farrington's latest exploit in accepting a $25,000 a year salary from the Peabody Coal company, while still president of the Illinois Miners' Union, makes it impossible for even his closest friends to condone his actions. He now stands suspended from office by action of the district executive board.

Farrington's main function in the Miners' Union seemed to be dragooning the members into agreements that gave the boss the best side of the bargains. In 1917 when ballots were sent out from the secretary-treasurer's office calling a special convention to consider the Kansas-Illinois machine agreement, Farrington was very angry.

One day he walked into the board room of the district offices in Springfield and inquired if it was true that ballots calling for a special convention were sent out. He was answered in the affirmative. He then made the following remark: "If every God damn son of a b——— in the organization votes for a special convention there is not going to be any called. If these God damn bastards are trying to break up the organization, I'll break it up for them myself."

There were present when this statement was made: John L. Lewis, Springfield; James Pitman, Carrier Mills, Jones Box, Virden; G. J. Frick, Marion and C. S. Stohlberg, Springfield.

When the miners who were tricked into this machine agreement went on strike Farrington again played the role of strikebreaker and brutally informed them that he would resort to any method to force them back into the mines.

In a letter dates Feb. 14, 1917 written to Peter Grubich, secretary of Local Union, 620, LaSalle, Illinois, Farrington threatened to revoke the charters of those locals who were on strike and that in the event of any members of the local dying inside of thirty days after the local charters were restored, their heirs would not be entitled to the $250 death indemnity provided for in the district constitution.

Uses The Blacklist.

The labor lieutenants of capitalism, always willing to see the boss' side of an argument, when the latter violates wage and working agreements. But with the union members the case is different. Any technical infraction of the rules is severely punished, unless the rules are violated by the henchmen of the labor fakers. The blacklist, which is the most deadly weapon at the disposal of the employing class for use against workers who have spunk and the rebel spirit, was used by Farrington on many occasions to get rid of progressives in the ranks of the union. But never did this arch faker prove himself a greater Judas, than in 1919 during the period of the so-called outlaw strike.

When the late world war broke out in Europe in 1914, the coal industry was in a very low ebb. The war created a market for coal and production went up quickly. In 1916 the miners secured a slight wage increase. Another increase, very small, was granted in 1917. In the meantime the bosses were making millions on war contracts. The cost of everything that the miners had to buy went up. But the only commodity, they had to sell, their labor power, remained practically stationery.

When Woodrow Wilson placed his friend Dr. Henry A. Garfield in charge of the coal industry, this agent of the coal barons tied up the miners in a new contract, which introduced the "penalty clause" providing for the fining of miners who stopped work. The fines to be collected by the coal operators under threat of discipline.

The agreement stipulated that if any miner entered suit against any operator in a civil court for the recovery of any fine collected by the operator the miners' union shall be obliged to reimburse the operator for the expenses of the litigation.

The operators were protected in every way from the coal diggers. The January, 1918, convention of the United Mine Workers meeting in Indianapolis, accepted the Washington agreement. Dr. Garfield in the meantime scanned an advance of 45 cents per ton in the price of coal.

The living costs of the year 1917 increase and the living costs were made the basis for the 1918 wage demand rapidly and further increases were made until 1920.

The miners were told that it was unpatriotic to ask for higher wages while soldiers were killing Germans at the ratio of thirty dollars a month. Many capitalists were working in Washington for one dollar a year! It was after the armistice that they were really "working Washington." Charley Schwab, the millionaire steel manufacturer who worked for one dollar a year, was spending $250,000 a month. The fat war contracts paid well.

The year 1919 witnessed a slump in the coal industry. The war was over. The coal barons had made their millions and were out for a good time. The coal diggers were left sucking their thumbs. The labor leaders looked quite prosperous. Only those who went down in the mines and dug the black diamonds had the dirty end of the deal.

President Farrington, instead of helping the miners to secure better working conditions actually took steps to prevent them drawing bonuses above the stipulated wage scale. The war was ended the coal diggers found themselves tied up in a decision which said that tho the war in Europe was officially over, as far as the miners were concerned it would not be over until two years after April 1918.

The miners were unable to put up with this state of affairs any longer and the action of the coal operators and the union officials over the Mooney strike brought the rebellion of 1919 to a head.

The Mooney Strike.

The miners who went on strike in an effort to save Mooney from the gallows were fined by the operators and this action was sanctioned by Farrington. When the miners struck against this wrong, Farrington got his thugs busy and miners were stugged, arrested and blacklisted for the crime of sticking up for their rights as workers and for a member of their class whose life was threatened by the gallows.

Farrington declared the Mooney fines were penalties for "their defiance to their accredited leaders." He sanctioned his official henchmen to hire scabs to break the strike.

A miners committee went to Springfield to interview Farrington. The members of the committee were slugged on Farrington's orders by the notorious Jack Brown, a boss in the employ of the Peabody Coal company, aided by Edward (Red) Maher and William Wall, also known as "One-Eared Wall."

After the brutal slugging of the Collinsville delegation the movement for calling a special convention to kill the automatic fine clauses grew rapidly. The state policy committee issued a call for a special district convention to be held in Springfield, Illinois, Tuesday, August 19, 1919.

While the miners thruout the state had many grievances, they wanted redressed, the action of Farrington's sluggers fired their anger.

Deputy sheriffs were appointed from the ranks of the miners who remained loyal to Farrington. Gunmen and criminals of all descriptions were organized to terrorise the strikers, charters were revoked and the coal operators on Farrington's suggestion issued orders to the strikers that unless they returned to work their jobs would be forfeited. Here were the bosses and the government working hand in hand with strikebreaker Farrington.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS TO SUFFER NEW BLOW WITH WITHDRAWAL OF SPAIN

GENEVA, Sept. 3. — Spain is expected to make an announcement shortly of her withdrewal from the league of nations, it was stated semi-officially here.

The announcement of withdrewal will probably be made in Madrid and it is now doubtful whether Spain will send any note to the league, announcing her disinterest in the league.

The Spanish note had been expected as the result of the refusal of the commitee of reorganization of the council of the league of nations to grant Spain's demand for a permanent seat.

The reorganization committee today completed its work, confident that it has "solved the problems" of council seats which created the crisis of March. The report of the committee was finally approved and will be forwarded to the council.

ARBITRATION REJECTED BY THE STRIKERS

Leaders Get Orders in Entering Conference

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK CITY, Sept. 3.—The leaders of the garment strike have entered into conferences and the "inside manufacturerers," meeting with Raymond V. Ingersoll, so-called "impartial chairman" of the industry. The outcome is not yet known.

However, strike leaders were entering the conference with the specific instructions of the union, given thru a meeting of the shop chairmen a few hours before the conference opened, to oppose arbitration in any form in the present strike. In addition, the strike committee has decided that the crafty trick of Governor Smith to force arbitration upon the union will be answered with a letter flatly rejecting such a proposal.

Henry H. Finder, head of the "Industrial Council" of manufacturers, seeing the little game of sabotaging the directing dealing by conference in the hope of getting the machinery of the state government to force arbitration on the workers disappearing, is issuing wild accusations against the union, alleging its demands are "confiscatory" and again asking for outsidde arbitration. Direct dealing between employers and the union Finder terms "trial by combat."

MUSICIANS MAY STRIKE CHICAGO MOVIE PALACES

A strike will start in all Chicago motion pictures and vaudeville theaters Sunday night after the performance unless a satisfactory wage scale is signed before then. James C. Petrillo, president of the Chicago Federation of Musicians, will issue the orders.

Joseph Weber, international president of the union, has already called a action-wide strike in all theaters of the Orpheum circuit in all cities according to reports from Seattle, Wash. This action was taken in support of a strike in the Orpheum theater in San Francisco.

More Pay, More Rest.

The union demands in Chicago an increase in pay from $37.50 a week to $86 for performances, with an increase in rehearsal rates from $3 to $4. It demands also a rest period of twenty minutes instead of fifteen, and a change of the Sunday seven-hour day to six hours.

WHAT AND HOW TO READ

By ARTHUR W. CALHOUN.

NOW we come to a book that some of the comrades have stigmatized as the gospel of class collaboration. You won't know what to say about that till you have read the book, but suppose that as you go you keep in mind three questions: (1) Did the authors intend class collaboration? (2) Would the book tend toward class collaboration if its teachings were generally accepted? (3) Can we make any sound use of the material in it? It may sometimes happen that the same book can be used as a text-book in class collaboration or as a text-book in class struggle, according to the disposition of the students and teachers.

The book in question is Hamilton & May's "Control of Wages," one of the numbers on the "Workers' Bookshelf" of the Workers' Education Bureau. As you read the first two or three chapters see whether you can find anything to explain the new interest in economics, both on the part of business interests and on the part of labor. How much hinges on the question whether labor is a commodity or not? How does the traditional business view about wages differ from the labor and "liberal" views? What motives do you detect in the orthodox explanations of why wages are what they are? What difference does it make whether there are any natural wage levels? In so far as there are such laws, where need we look for them? Perhaps it will appear as a result of this study that labor's choice is between trying to make itself a more valuable commodity and trying to get rid of the wage system.

As you proceed with chapters IV and V, try to get a clear picture of the possible sources from which the workers might possibly gain wage increments. Supposing it were possible to pare away unnecessary income of property and privilege to the limit, how nobly would the needs of labor be met? You may not like the author's emphasis on the smallness of the total amount available for annexation; but remember what we said in an earlier number: that even in the United States, the richest country in the world, the total annual product is at best barely sufficient to give the whole population a decent living even if all injustice in apportionment were done away with.

Now why has labor been more interested in attempts to change the distribution of wealth than in efforts to increase production? Under what conditions might labor safely face the problem of efficiency of production? To what extent have labor and the bookishness common interests as against management and the property holders? Assuming that labor could in various ways promote increase of industrial efficiency, do you find in the fact any guarantee that the benefits will accrue to labor? These questions are of practical significance. A year ago the B. & O. plan was a flowery gospel. Today it is beginning to sound like a battleground. It may turn out that experiments with union-management co-operation will put a new edge on the class struggle in the form of a battle over the fruits.

When you come to chapters VI and VII of Hamilton and May you face the problem of a general strategy of the economic system. Is it necessary for labor to have a general economic philosophy? How would you characterize the reorganization contemplated by the authors? Is it reasonable to expect a rational, orderly solution along logical lines? Would labor domination mean an automatic end of economic injustice?

In chapters VIII, IX and X we arrive at a theory of wages. We see that it is necessary to figure in not merely the amount of money in the pay envelope, but also what the money will buy, and besides this we need to count the things the worker gets without paying the bill out of his own pocket. Are free schools, libraries, etc., under capitalism a benefit to the worker? How much would a Communist society increase the number of services furnished free to the community? How would it change their nature?

After you have taken everything about the workers' income into account, sum up in one sentence the wage theory that emerges. What use can you make of such a theory by way of propaganda? Could you apply it effectively to the workers' struggle in a particular industry?

Then come chapters XI and XII, which offer an approach to a policy for labor. What sort of internal and external adjustments would organized labor have to undertake in order to get itself into a position to act advantageously on the analysis provided in this book? How far can inventive and constructive functions be performed by a militant labor organization? How would you decide in a given case how much emphasis to put on getting something away from the employer as compared with promoting an increase of efficiency? How much weight would you give to arguments about "fairness," "right," "justice"? What would you say to the authors' argument for reform as contrasted with revolution? Is their viewpoint a labor viewpoint?

On the home stretch, through chapters XIII-XV, ask yourself finally whether this book is a treatise on class collaboration. How much of a clue would it give to the sort of analysis of economic function necessary under a workers' commonwealth? What are the chances of the workers going in for production? If they do, will their co-operation with management allay the class conflict or will it open up new things to quarrel about?

Some would say that the questions raised in the reading of this book would give a sufficient outline for a complete analysis of the economic system. Has the book modified your notions in any respect? Has it given you any new weapons for your fight? To whom would you recommend the book?

The Real Labor Day

By K. A. Suranto

THE march of progress in the American trade unions cannot be stopped. This is clearly evidenced by the newer and fresher winds that are beginning to blow in the movement. The reappearance of a powerful progressive opposition to the Lewis machine in the miners' union; the Passaic strike with its reverberations thru the textile mills and other industries in the east; the great struggle and growth of the left wing in the garment trades. And the general spirit of vigor and militancy that is beginning to make its way in various sections of the labor movement—all this points to the fact that despite all obstruction by the reactionaries the American trade unions are making progress.

In celebrating Labor Day this year note should be taken of the fact that the slogans and policies of the left wing are gaining a foothold among ever larger sections of American labor. The demands for the organization of the unorganized, for militant struggles against the employers, for driving corrupt labor fakers out of the movement, for amalgamation, for democratizing the trade unions, for a labor party, etc.—all these demands of the rank and file can no longer be crushed or even suppressed by the reactionaries.

Our trade unions are making progress despite Green, Lewis and Farrington. What is needed is more class consciousness, more militancy, and more action by the left and progressive elements.

What's Become of the Slush Fund Investigation

THE sensational rocket of senatorial slush fund flared up for a minute on the columns of the capitalist press and died away. Why is it?

It is still news, altho not new in the practices of capitalist politics. But the capitalist press does not enjoy the idea of dwelling upon this unsavory subject too long. The labor press, however, cannot afford the luxury of forgetting about it. The fact that our legislators and executives are being bought and paid for by the rich and wealthy; the fact that reactionary labor officials are participating in this game and are committing the labor movement to the support of paid agents of capitalist corporations must not only be brought to the attention of the workers again and again, but a determined effort must be made to break once and for all the alliance between labor officials and capitalist politics.

History of the Catholic Church in Mexico

By MANUEL GOMEZ.

CHAPTER III.

The Church and Political Progress.

LAST week I made it clear that the Catholic church in Mexico has always been a political institution. In the present chapter we shall see what the political role of the church has been in the historic forward movements of the Mexican people.

Revolutionary Factors" Excommunicated.

The struggle for national independence from Spain may be said to date from the year 1810. On midnight of September 16, 1810, Miguel Hidalgo, generally known as the father of Mexican independence, issued the famous "grito de Dolores" from the little church where he was parish priest. Hidalgo gathered a fervent band of revolutionists about him and led a prolonged struggle for independence. The revolt was finally put down. Hidalgo was executed. The catholic church, which was tied hand and glove to the forces of Spanish privilege in Mexico, co-operated with Spain by excommunicating this great leader, who is today revered by the entire Mexican people.

Hidalgo was not the only revolutionary leader excommunicated by the church. Another of the fathers of Mexican liberty who met the same fate was the warrior priest, Jose Maria Morelos.

These we see in the very beginning of Mexico's struggles what afterwards became a characteristic feature of them: the lower clergy—poor priests, supported by the upper strata of the catholic hierarchy—aligned with the people against the church, revealing deep divisions within catholicism which must assist the process of revolutionary decentralization and destruction of the entire hierarchical organization.

Mexico finally achieved its independence in 1821. An important factor in the success of the revolution was the defection of Iturbide, commander of the Spanish forces, who had his own ulterior motives for going over to the Mexican side. One must understand this to appreciate the role of the church at that period and in the period that followed.

A tremendous upheaval had taken place in Spain. King Ferdinand had been presided aside by the triumphant liberal congress, which immediately put thru a series of reforms in Spanish law.

Immediately the reactionary forces in Mexico, and in other Spanish colonies, began to look with considerable favor on the idea of secession from Spain. The new movement in Mexico gathered great momentum, now associated with particular zeal by religious orders whose suppression had been decreed thruout the Spanish empire by the liberal congress of Spain. In Mexico City the very backbone of the revolutionary conspiracy was the Order of Jesus, while in Vera Cruz Father Fra Jose de San Ignacio exhibited extraordinary activity in organizing all the influential people in his district under the banner of the revolution, in obtaining supplies of money, and in inciting Iturbide as the "savior of religion and liberator of the fatherland."

"Red, Green and White."

The church joined the revolution belatedly in order to form a new stronghold. No thought of republicanism entered its mind. It proceeded with a definite conscious program aimed to strangle the new republic at its very birth.

On February 24, 1821, Iturbide, with the sanction of his clerical sycophants, issued a manifesto, known in Mexican history as the "Plan de Iguala," which proclaimed the following principles:

1. Establishment of the Roman catholic apostolic religion as the national religion, without toleration for any other.

2. Absolute independence for Mexico.

3. Establishment of a monarchical form of government, "tempered by a constitution suitable to the country."

4. Summoning of Ferdinand VII, or some member of his family, or of some other royal family, to the throne of Mexico, to reign as emperor and establish a dynasty.

5. Establishment of a Junta to carry on the government until the meeting of the Cortez.

6. Said Junta to rule in virtue of an oath of allegiance to the king until the duties of the government should be assumed by the monarch in person.

* * * * *

8. That in the event of Ferdinand VII being unwilling to accept the throne of Mexico, the Junta to continue the functions of government until such time as a suitable ruler be chosen.

9. The government to support and maintain the "three warrantees": Independence, unity, religion, symbolized in the national flag, by the colors, red, green and white.

* * * * *

13. Maintenance of the present institution of property.

14. Endorsement and protection of all ecclesiastical "fueros," privileges and possessions.

In addition to the articles quoted, there were a number dealing with the constitution of the empire and judiciary, but I have sufficiently indicated the drift of the document. The semi-feudal despotism of church and big land owners is affirmed as the dominant force of the nation.

The First Mexican Empire.

The church did not succeed in finding a European monarch for Mexico. Whereupon it gave its support to the overweening aspirations of Iturbide. On the night of August 18, 1822, the new-born republic received a mortal stab in the back. By a well-planned coup d'etat, Iturbide was suddenly proclaimed emperor, and a sergeant of the army was sent with his company parading thru the streets of Mexico City shouting: "Long Live Augustin I, Emperor of Mexico!" Iturbide, the arch-traitor—who betrayed first his own Spanish employer, and then the Mexican republic, which he had helped to establish—was solemnly crowned by the representative of the pope in Mexico. Shortly thereafter congress was dissolved.

Thruout the succeeding years the struggle raged between the liberals and conservatives—the latter, the party of the big land owners, being consistently supported by the church. Iturbide's ephemeral reign had fallen before the end of 1822, but the struggle against reaction was rooted deep in the economics of Mexico's social system, and could not be ended so simply.

After the establishment of Mexican independence, the next great upheaval that marked the forward march of Mexico was the so-called Ayutla revolution, sometimes known as the war of the Reform. Here again we see the church standing squarely in the roadway of progress, pushing the other way.

Just as Hidalgo is the great hero of Mexico's independence struggle, so Benito Juarez is the hero of the "la Reforma," the first modern revolution to sweep aside the semi-feudal privileges standing in the way of capitalism. No other figure in Mexican history, not even Hidalgo, is revered in the republic south of the Rio Grande as universally as Juarez. His statue is in every city. A full-blooded Zapotec Indian by birth, he personified the essentially native character of the revolutionary movement.

During all the years of his prominence Juarez was anathematised by the catholic church. The church helped to raise armies against him and stopped at nothing, not even foreign intervention, to strike at the cause of which he was leader.

The liberal pro-capitalist revolution swept the country. The clerical dictator-president, Santa Ana—that archfiend of Mexican history—undertook "to scatter the sacreligious enemies of the Lord," but he was forced to flee the country, nevermore to return.

The three years of bitter war led to the presidency of Juarez. The reform laws and the constitution of 1857 were the signposts of the new era.

A PEEK EACH WEEK AT MOTION PICTURES

MARE NOSTRUM

HERE is "another of those things." A picture splendidly acted, beautifully photographed, most capably directed—all for a story that is so damnably punk it is an insult to even the intelligence of a jack-rabbit. And more, it comes a whole eight years too late for its purpose. We advise every worker to see it (showing at the Rivoli Theatre in Chicago) for its many good features and to see what hysterical war propaganda really looks like in normal times.

"Mare Nostrum" is a rank propaganda story written by that rank propagandist Blasco Ibanez, for the Allies during the world war. And a vicious bit of propaganda it is. The "sacred sense" of the Great Powers is glorified, and the Germans vilified and pictured as head-shaven brutes. The story deals with a sea captain in the Mediterranean and his love for a beautiful spy, espionage, and submarines. The brutality of submarine warfare impresses one quite vividly and dramatically and of course is pictured at the expense of the Germans only. On this one theme are wasted all the splendid things we mentioned.

Antonio Moreno gives a most creditable performance very ably assisted by Alice Terry, who is not only a blond but very much an actress. Three hundred pound Huckie Mack officiates in prominent role and a lot of space. The balance of the cast is composed entirely of foreign actors (including Germans whom it vilifies) speaking volumes for the "foreign invasion" of American films, a subject deserving of special notice. Read these names of the cast: Fernand Mailly, Mlle. Kith non, Michael Brantford, Frederick Marlatt, Mme. Paquerette, Andre von Engelman, Rosita Ramirez, Uni Apollon, Alex Nova, and Kada-Abd-el Kader.

On seeing this picture one cannot avoid a comparison with "The Big Parade," another "war picture." The former is at least an approach to an honest portrayal of war, brilliantly and artistically satisfying; "Mare Nostrum" is a dishonest bit of fakfor gullibles the most ably done. Why such a medium was chosen for the lavish expenditure of both money and talent, at this time particularly, is indeed a mystery (After all the Germans may not be "our" next "enemy"). Rex Ingram to his many notable productions to his credit has also most capably wasted his ability as director on it.

To convince yourself how motion pictures are chosen to bred the worker into slaughter, or to see how it is done if you are already convinced—see this picture. The lesson and many good features it has of the picture are worth the price of admission.

CHICAGO'S PAUL ASH—A MUSICAL BARNUM

CAN you imagine a crowd that will wind around a theater for two blocks, patiently waiting for an hour and a half "to see the show!" For three days in succession this sight greeted us at the Oriental Theater as early in the evening as 6 p. m., and it took exactly four attempts on our part to see the performance without waiting. And we had to miss supper to do it!

It wasn't the movie. "Senor Daredevil," the picture showing last week would never pass the censorship of the most gullible galoot who goes to the theater. Paul Ash does it! Paul Ash of the waving, long hair and the flare of Barnum. There is something quite remarkable about this self-styled "Rajah of Jazz." He has contrived to weld a performance that gets down to his audience, that gets under its skin and that becomes a habit that brings them back week after week with clock-like regularity and in increasing numbers.

His performance is often vulgar. A downright, broad and "common" vulgarity that is reminiscent of the old burlesque show. He resorts to the rankest kind of soh stuff and slapstick. He monopolizes the stage. Even when another performer is doing his or her "specialty" Paul has his own little spot-light. He dominates and is part of every move that is made at all times and everything that "goes over" only adds to Paul's particular glory.

Paul Ash is all these things and more—and I know it! And I'm hanged if I don't make an effort each week to crash the gate to get in before the half-mile line that gathers every evening to pay tribute to his low-down genius. With the intelligence of the born showman, Paul Ash has combined the music of his excellent jazz orchestra with scenery, variety and entertainment. And the usually mediocre performers who fill his bill really look to good advantage. Not that Paul does not include occasional really good "hits." In the program, which is changed every week, a dancer, a singer, or perhaps a member of his own orchestra will surprise you with something that is truly clever. That's part of a Paul Ash show. But that's not all.

The secret of this musical Barnum is not pure charlatanry, nor even ability. Paul Ash has discovered the secret of making the audience take part in his show. He's personal. When he talks to his audience—it's to an old acquaintance. When he tells them something new—it's something "special" for his audience. They sing with him and for him. They meet every Sunday morning in a Paul Ash Club to get acquainted. He lets them laugh at his hair. He lets his performers poke fun at him on the stage within limits that don't endanger his prestige. He laughs, he sings, he dances and he plays—and they pay to see Paul Ash—the one and only Paul Ash—and his performers who are styled the "Little Hot Ashes." They sure are. And so's their old man!

A Daily Paper of South Slav Workers

THE STORY OF RADNIK

By S. ZENICH.

IT was in 1905 and 1906 that the social-democratic movement in the South Slavic parts of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy began to develop with rapidity. Up to then there had been a very small number of the workers around the social-democratic party, while the party was young, inexperienced, and its official leaders already leaning to the bourgeoisie, altho that movement itself had been persecuted by the government.

Their leaders came mostly from the ranks of the bourgeoisie and from the liberal intellectuals. The most prominent of these were: Dural Demetrovich (now one of the leaders of the Croatian fascisti); William Bugahek, supporter of the government during and after the world war; Antonio Kocrach, later a member of the Belgrade fascist government (now, as a former minister of social affairs, on the government payroll); Edhin and Anton Kristan, now both in the service of the Belgrade government, and some others. All of them have become traitors to the workers and peasants, but they were the leaders of the social-democratic party.

Nevertheless, the movement slowly but definitely became a mass movement which created its own leaders.

The masses were driven by exploitation to consciousness and struggle. Their wages were small—$1, $1.25 and $1.50 for fourteen hours work—these were the wages of the workers. They had no labor unions, they did not understand the English language at all; they were exploited in all aspects of their life.

These conditions forced to the fore new leaders. One of these new leaders that developed from the ranks was a printer, Milan Glumac-Jurishich.

From the very beginning of his affiliation with the movement he was very active and showed initiative. He never was satisfactory to the official leaders of the party because he did not agree with their reformistic attitude. He was more revolutionary and was considered by party leaders a hotheaded, uncontrolled enthusiast. The government called him a dangerous socialist and sometimes an anarchist.

From the beginning he was isolated in the party, but he was a real fighter in the eyes of the broad masses. By born showman, Paul Ash has combined the music of his excellent jazz orchestra with scenery, variety and entertainment. And the usually mediocre performers who fill his bill really look to good advantage. Not that Paul does not include occasional really good "hits." In the program, which is changed every week, a dancer, a singer, or perhaps a member of his own orchestra will surprise you with something that is truly clever. That's part of a Paul Ash show. But that's not all.

The secret of this musical Barnum is not pure charlatanry, nor even ability. Paul Ash has discovered the secret of making the audience take part in his show. He's personal. When he talks to his audience—it's to an old acquaintance. When he tells them something new—it's something "special" for his audience. They sing with him and for him. They meet every Sunday morning in a Paul Ash Club to get acquainted. He lets them laugh at his hair. He lets his performers poke fun at him on the stage within limits that don't endanger his prestige. He laughs, he sings, he dances and he plays—and they pay to see Paul Ash—the one and only Paul Ash—and his performers who are styled the "Little Hot Ashes." They sure are. And so's their old man!

Real Estate

By HERSHELL BEK.

Men who go by the name of brokers,
on the corners of Main Street,
in offices with "Real Estate" written in gold on the plate glass windows,
Bargain and barter in slices of earth,
And the slices pass from hand to hand,
And each soft hand takes an easy rake-off of so many dollars of easy gain.

And a grimy miner,
And a steel worker,
After a hard day's work,
Go home along Main Street,
To their flats in a tenement house,
And they ask themselves questions,
"Why is the rent so high?"
"And where is the rent to come from?"

And the wind whistles answers in the night,
Answers they cannot understand,
And men who go by the name of brokers,
Keep on buying and selling slices of earth,
And each soft hand . . .

Milan Glumac-Jurishich had been convinced of his success since he came to America. In 1907 he was in Pittsburgh. The same year the W. E. C. was organized in Chicago and the Croatian Educational Federation was organized in Pittsburgh. Glumac-Jurishich, At once he became a leader of the Jugo-Slav workers in this country.

In its first year Radnicka Straza was issued twice a month in half newspaper size. The next year—1909—the South Slavic Socialist Federation was definitely organized and affiliated to the socialist party of America. In the meantime, Radnicka Straza became a large weekly paper (like the Radnik or The DAILY WORKER now, in four pages). The socialist movement among the workers became a fact.

Radnicka Straza was born in a hard time. In 1907-10 there was great unemployment in this country. Workers were hungry and desperate; the ignorance of the workers was still strong; religion, patriotism and general backwardness ruled supreme among the workers. But the activity of the comrades under the leadership of Comrade Glumac never ceased. They were very active. Glumac himself was editor and printer of the paper. He worked for four or five dollars a week, with which he had to support his family and pay expenses for medicine and doctor (he had tuberculosis). Many times he gave money to hungry comrades. Radnicka Straza, under his editorship, was a strong whip in the hands of the socialists against the Jugo-Slav priests, business men, speculators and bourgeois in general. The paper gained daily in influence among the masses. Short, sharp, clear and enthusiastic articles in the paper were swallowed by the workers like hot cakes. Organizations were built in all larger cities of this country.

One thing was characteristic of Radnicka Straza during the editorship of Milan Glumac—the writings of the paper were not fully in the spirit of the socialist party. Glumac said many times: "The socialist party is too soft for the capitalist class and its agents." He was a left socialist in spirit and conceptions of struggle against the capitalists.

Until 1912 the South Slav Socialist Federation grew numerically and the subscriptions increased to 3,000.

Nevertheless the sickness of Comrade Glumac forced him first to a farm, then to California, where he could not remain because he was isolated from the movement. He came back to Chicago and finally died in January, 1924.

His successor as editor of Radnicka Straza was Theodore Cvetkov, at present a renegade to the Communist movement. Cvetkov was a pacifist by nature and conception. Opportunist by political conceptions. After the death of Glumac the fighting spirit of the movement declined to a great degree.

Cvetkov began his discussion and split in the South Slavic Socialist Federation. Two wings were created—a right-social-patriotic wing, with Kristan and Bugahek at the head, and a left-opportunist centrist wing with Cvetkov at the head.

In 1917 Radnicka Straza was suppressed by the authorities and Nova Misao (New Thought) was issued. After the first number Nova Misao was also suppressed and Zoanje (Knowledge) was issued. Zoanje was as large as Radnicka Straza in 1917.

From that time up to 1922 Zoanje was issued. The editors of it were T. Cvetkov and Geo. Kuncevich, who became a renegade to the movement in 1923. Parallel to the left wing in the socialist party the left wing movement among the South Slavic workers developed. The Cvetkovites were very weak as compared to the influnce of the left. The Jugo-Slav workers became class conscious to the degree that they knew that bolshevism is the solution for them. During the world war they passed thru hard experiences; they were attacking the pacifism of Cvetkov, the membership were with Cvetkov because of his anti-militarist attitude. But the membership felt that pacifism cannot save the working class from the heel of imperialism.

The workers passed thru great experiences. The American capitalist class persecuted them. Those who were for the allies were forced into the army and forced to contribute special war donations; those who were for the central powers (Austria-Hungary and Germany) were threatened with jail, persecution, and many of them deported to Georgia prisons, etc.; internationalist workers (followers of the left wing in the socialist party) were under the most terrible conditions, blockaded from all sides by the enemies not only on the part of American capitalist servants, but by Jugo-Slav dollar patriots and priests.

These conditions were the main reason for the large influence of socialpatriotism on one side and pacifism on the other. The left wing had no leadership, had no full and correct political line because it was just beginning to develop. Later on the left wing became stronger and stronger and finally became a real power among the Jugo-Slav workers in this country.

The South Slavic Socialist (International) Federation as a whole became a part of the left wing in the socialist party. Later on the federation was affiliated to the Communist Party of America and from that time remained an active section of the American Communist movement.

In 1921 the decision was made to change Znanje to Radnik and that instead of a weekly it should be a tri-weekly.

Cvetkov and his followers were opposed to both changes. In connection with other political and principal difference, the question of the press was one of the most important. For nearly one year the fight went on and finally Cvetkov left the party and the federation. Some of his followers went with him. All of them declared that the South Slavic Federation would collapse, that Radnick would not be able to continue publication three times a week. The demoralizing, pessimistic and opportunistic attitude did not destroy the movement. They did not even succeed in splitting it, because the membership stood strong for Communism and party policy and discipline was sufficiently applied. But they succeeded to a certain extent in isolating the Federation and in shaking its morale. Nevertheless, altho very slowly but positively the federation became stronger in all ways.

Radnik as a tri-weekly paper, with a better political line, better articles and greater spirit step by step breaking down the walls of isolation, became a more popular organ. The ranks of the membership became closer and politically stronger.

In 1926 the Bureau of the South Slavic Fraction (former Federation) came to the conclusion that Radnik should become a daily. The 1st of May was selected as the date. In reality, on the 1st of May, 1926, Radnik became a daily. The enthusiasm of the membership and subscribers, as a whole, was such that about $10,000 was collected for the daily, altho the Jugo-Slav workers gave for the International Labor Defense at least $10,000 and for The DAILY WORKER at least $5,000 and for strikes and other campaigns a great sum of money. We must have in mind unemployment, also the offensive of the entire reaction and bourgeoisie (including opportunists in various forms).

Radnik is a daily. Its policy is the policy of the Workers (Communist) Party of America. It becomes more and more a mass organ of the Jugo-Slav workers in this country. More than that, Radnik is becoming a Communist (Bolshevik) paper. Its influence reaches the Jugo-Slav workers in South America, Australia, New Zealand, not to speak about Canada, Jugo-Slavia and even Soviet Russia. Radnik has connections with Jugo-Slav workers in all those countries.

The conditions of the workers are forcing them to come nearer to the vanguard of their class. Radnik is trying, with success, to reach all the Jugo-Slav workers in this country, to organize them for class struggle against the capitalists.

The fighting spirit of Milan Glumac-Jurishich, the first editor of Radnik (Radnicka Straza), combined with the Communist idea, principles and politics, is leading the Jugo-Slav workers into the ranks of the Workers (Communist) Party of America in the strug-

The Factory Incident

A Story

By MAX GELTMAN

CHITO BARRADO was up early that sunny July morning. And as he neared the Y—— Electric Co., where he worked, he could see some of his friends, already there, laughing, joking with one another, and in general enjoying the beauty of that July morning. As he came within speaking distance of his fellow-workers they greeted him with: "Buenos dias, Chito! Como esta." "Estoy bien"—I am well—he answered, and putting his strong arm around Benito's shoulders he gave him a hug which made Benito wince.

Chito took pride in his great strength. Not a boastful pride, but rather the pride of one who knows his own strength and sees it as a means of producing material good, and protecting one's self and one's friends. Chito, from pure joy of his physical well-being, stood on his toes and stretched his bronze-brown arms skyward, playing each muscle in the sun, which gave him the appearance of a bronze statue. Chito was proud of his two strong arms, arms which stamped out more manganese bobbins than any other man in the stamping room. Chito's pride was a just pride —it was a craftman's pride—a creator's pride.

More men had gathered. And, as was usual on Monday mornings when a number of them were early to work, they took to boxing and wrestling with one another. Chito spotted Tony, a comparatively well-built young Italian, and asked him if he would wrestle. Tony accepted and soon the whole gang of men were around them, forming a ring, in which the two men, Tony and Chito, wrestled.

Now one was on the floor, now the other. "Come on, Chito." "Hold him, Tony!" "Attaboy, Chito! You've got him." "That's it. Chito had shouldered Tony. Chito then helped Tony from the ground and they put their arms around each other's shoulders and just then the 7:55 bell rang—time to work—and then they entered the factory, the gang of men following.

Chito, having donned his working shirt, walked over to his stamping machine, his lips puckered up whistling a Spanish love song. He sat down at his machine, waiting for the power to be put on. And as he sat there he could remember how, three years ago in the town of Mayaguez, in Porto Rico, having taken Ampara to the seashore and embracing her now and then with those strong, passionate arms of his. B-r-r-r—the power was on and the picture faded slowly from his memory. Time and again during that morning it would bob up, and each time he would have to jerk his head down to that manganese-devouring monster, the machine. But it was hot, especially in that manganese-laden room. The black dust stuffed up his nostrils. No wonder, then, that Chito should find himself nodding, and trying to force back those grass-green thoughts which entered his head here in this manganese-black room.

It was eleven o'clock, busiest time of the day. The machines were whirring and stamping, cutting and grinding, a noisome din in an airless hole. Chito was not putting out as much bobbings as usual. Chito's head felt heavy. Maybe it was the heat, or the exertion in the morning. He shook his head severely and decided to make up his loss, for he was working piecework. He began pushing more manganese toward the mixing knife of the machine; more and yet more, and c-r-r-r-r-a-c-h! b-r-r-r-r!—a nausea came over him and like a flash the memory of his right arm entwining Ampara flitted thru his mind, and he fainted.

When Chito awoke he found himself lying on a white cot, his two friends, Benito and Tony standing tight-lipped over him. He felt a hot stinging sensation thru his body. And as if in the distance he saw a woman in white moving. He could not at first make out what was wrong. He felt as if he was being weighted down. His body felt so heavy. And then, noticing Benito, he wanted to beckon to him to come over, and it was just then that he became conscious that his right arm was gone. He let out a maddening shriek—a shriek of fear and hatred. It was an animal yell—a death yell—blood-curdling, maddening, full of hatred—civilized human hatred. And moaning a few times, "ay dios mio, ay dios mio," he fainted.

"You men go down and continue your work." This from the superintendent to Benito and Tony. A faint, "Yes, sir," and they left. "Well, what shall we do with him?" This from the nurse to the superintendent. "We've sent for some of his family, and an ambulance. They should be here any minute. I'll be too busy downstairs to be bothered, so you can just see that he (pointing to Chito) is taken to the hospital, and if the relatives start becoming fussy, call up an officer. Good-day." "Good-day, sir."

To A Nine-Inch Gun

Whether your shell hits the target or not,
Your cost is five hundred dollars a shot.
Your thing of noise and flame and power,
We feed you a hundred barrels of flour
Each time your roar. Your flame is fed
With twenty thousand loaves of bread.
Silence! A million hungry men
Seek bread to fill their mouths again.

—P. F. McCarthy.

You will be given rifles; take them and learn how to use them. Military science is indispensable to proletarians, but not for shooting on their own brothers, or on the workers of other countries, . . . . as you are advised to do by the social traitors. You must learn how to fight against the bourgeoisie of your own country, so as to put an end to exploitation. Poverty and wars, not by pious resolutions, but by overcoming and disarming the bourgeoisie.

A War Cry for Women

By ELEN HEACH

I HAVE read the story of "Peter, the Most Great, Sublime." Will you now publish the story of woman's part? Not alone one women, but tens, hundreds of women. I was in a general strike in Belgium some years ago. The gendarmerie rode the big Belgian horses into their midst, crushing, killing, oh, so many heroic women. And one brother, "Look what we do for you." Then man was a union man, he fought in those of his brothers, his strong men. "Look at the killer of women, come, brothers, each of us now take the horses by the legs, one on each leg." Then the men spread to the west. The soldiers knew what was coming to them and again tried to ride them down, the men. It would their peaceful lives of Belgian men overborne grabbed the horses by the legs and in a second of time over went the horse and the rider together.

Then came an army of women. "To the slaver," they cried. "To the butcher." Shrieking, the maddening six, their throats spitting fire as they rushed, the wives of the Belgian strikers pressing and prodding on the men pressing to the banks of the River Rhine. "Now, in with them," they screamed. "In with them," they all screamed, and as one woman a hundred women threw in more struggling brothers into the waters, leading arms ready to hang the enemy's hands under in their hot rage. Then came the song:

"Arise ye Workers of Starvation,
Arise ye workers of the World!
Justice thunders Condemnation
A better World's in Birth."

Womanhood gone astray with revenge? No, no, justice had spoken in their act. Let justice speak in all countries where strikebreakers are supported by authorized governments go get to kill men and women and little children workers.

HERE'S another instance of the working woman's courage. Courage in action. It was at a large, enthusiastic meeting of strikers in Antwerp. There was a dearth of men workers, union workers ready to serve on committees. In the audience they sat, these "brave men, yet afraid to speak before their wives were sitting with them. "Come up to the platform" cried the chairman of the meeting, "more men are needed here with their pencils to walk out and stay out till victory is theirs." And still none of the men hung back. They had families of little children and they feared not for themselves, but for their children. A woman sat in the midst of other women; her husband was at one side of her. He hung back and slowly shook his head at the woman. She sprang to her feet, she cried out aloud, "Have men for the strike, more for the committees, more pledges against the common enemy." Then, turning to her husband, she spoke, pointing her finger to the platform, "Your place is up there." "Your place up there." The husband sprang to his feet and went forward.

"Don't shilly-shally, Wendell," said Ann Fairfax in a message to her husband, caught in a riot of "Broadcloth Mob" in the famous Faneuil Hall of Boston. She spoke from a sick bed, but her voice rang thru the hall as her message was delivered: "Don't shilly-shally." A slogan for these United States working women.

THE BOY SCOUTS

The scouts are organized to help the bosses. When they go to the camp they try to get other children to join. There they get training. # In the Hell of Europe

By A. LANDY

An introduction to a series of articles on the White Terror in the Balkan States, beginning publication in the next issue of this magazine, written by Henri Barbusse.

THE white terror is the offspring of world capitalism. It is horror, murder, torture and tragedy organized on a mass scale. It has made out of the Balkans "the hell of Europe." And if we could substitute "white terror" for "industrial," we could say with Marx that "the country with a more developed white terror merely shows the one less developed the picture of its own future."

There are people, "slaves of the general inertia and mediocrity," who will not believe that such savage and hellish barbarism is possible in our day. But savage opression and wholesale mass murder are the methods of the international bourgeoisie fighting to maintain its supremacy. The white terror, or fascism, is the socio-political form of world capitalism since the war.

People who are still accustomed to think of the world in terms of independent nationalities and of its economy in terms of independent national development, fail to realize that the very powers that have blessed the world with "democracy" have also blessed it with the white terror; that "democracy" and fascist white terror are different sides of the same medal, different forms of the same capitalist domination, and that fascism, white terror, or open bourgeois dictatorship is becoming the dominant form of capitalist rule.

The white terror is more immediate, more violent, more bloodthirsty. And for that reason it is most dangerous to the international labor movement. Its activity in the Balkans has revealed the true character of international fascism and the constant need for organized revolutionary action on the part of the world proletariat. "Nothing that has been said concerning the terrorism exercised by the Balkan governments," writes Barbusse, "is exaggerated. To those who ask, 'is it true?' one can only reply: 'The truth is worse.'"

Barbusse, together with two other Frenchmen, went to the Balkans to make a first-hand investigation of the conditions which were giving rise to repeated tales of indescribable horror. And the facts and figures which he has gathered, the scenes of torture and torment which he describes, the tragic and futile cries of helpless peasants and workers are the most painsant indictment of fascist reaction and the most powerful plea to every Communist to work more intensely and more persistently to carry on more steadily his daily tasks and to defend the rising revolution against the bloody reaction of world capitalism.

The class-conscious workers and peasants of the Balkans are being ruthlessly oppressed. In Jugo-Slavia, in Hungary, in Bulgaria and Roumania the contrast between the modern palaces of the nouveaux riches and the miserable quarters of the city and country proletariat is enormous. Factories are closing, unemployment is increasing, and the police and military expenditures are absorbing most of the national budgets. All the Balkan countries are facing a serious economic crisis. In Bulgaria, where the peasant element is equal to four-fifths of the total population, industry has been endangered since the war. Imports have increased, exports decreased, and the budget has been confronted with a deficit. In Roumania money is lacking for agriculture; credits to the peasants have been cut down, and public instruction is almost non-existent. The former boyard feudalism has given place to a modern capitalist feudalism ferociously oppressing the working class. In Jugo-Slavia the war budget has increased 227 million dinars and the ministry of social economy has been completely suppressed.

All the Balkan countries are in the hands of parasitic governments, maintaining themselves by artificial means and utilizing the same instruments and organs of repression: legal and military terror, police and fascist activity. These reactionary governments, supported by the big bourgeoisie, are waging war against the Balkan masses. In Roumania a semblance of parliamentarism is maintained. In Bulgaria, Greece and Jugo-Slavia the ruling oligarchy has other means at its disposal. "The Balkan elections," writes Barbusse, "take place under the direct pressure of the gendarmes and the fascists and by the brutal intervention of the soldiery." The so-called opposition parties are in reality hypocritical and servile supporters of fascism, as is evidenced by the activity of the social-democrats in Hungary and in the Balkans. The Bulgarian church has called upon the people to help establish order (or fascism). The reforms that have been undertaken are nothing but shams and dupery. Whereas in all the Balkan countries, as well as in Hungary, the powers have established a law for "the safety of the state." This law, which is essentially the same in Roumania, Bulgaria, Jugo-Slavia and Hungary, is the legal expression of reactionary dictatorship. By virtue of these laws men and women have been condemned to death because they have harbored fugitives sought by the police without knowing that these fugitives were guilty or without this guilt ever having been established.

A number of gendarmes in the Balkans is out of proportion to the population: 45,000 in Roumania, and 60,000 down, and public instruction is almost non-existent. The former boyard feudalism has given place to a modern capitalist feudalism ferociously oppressing the working class. In Jugo-Slavia the war budget has increased 227 million dinars and the ministry of social economy has been completely suppressed.

American Imperialism in Uruguay

By HOMER PEYROT

(Translation by Harrison George

THE republic of Uruguay has finished negotiations with the North American firm of Italicarten and company for a loan of $45,000,000. This loan comes to increase the external debt of Uruguay which, previous to it, mounted to $182,711,776.06.

The conditions of the loan are found in the law with respect to it adopted at the Lower hall of the legislative power. Article 1 of the said law authorizes the executive power to contract the loan in two series, one of $30,000,000 and another of $15,000,000. The figure at which the loan is made is $1.53.

Article 2 establishes the half yearly form of payment, with an amortization fund of one per cent per annum accumulative.

Article 3 is interesting enough to transcribe fully. It is as follows: "Both the capital and the interest of the bonds will be paid of without deduction of any impost or other right that may exist at present or that the Uruguayan government or any other authority within the territory of Uruguay might create."

Articles 4, 6 and 7 establish the end given to the funds and from where are to drawn the means for the first amortization. Article 5 establishes that, in case contracting another loan guaranteed by the state income, this loan must be given preference against the state income or another equivalent.

The conditions noted, we will say that the loan was settled in a precipitated manner unaccustomed to the heavy ovarious time and with a haste wholly mental and bureaucratic apparatus of our country.

A few days sufficed for its projection, approbation and signing. The National Council of Administration, in order to liquidate the subject, even met on the morning of the 19th of April, a "national holiday" for the bourgeoisie. This haste was carried into the chamber of deputies, where a motion was made that it might be immediately considered while yet the chamber had not reached that point on its agenda, and where it was voted with the sole opposition of the two Communist deputies.

It is needless to point out the dependence toward the Yankees that the loan sanctions. But we re-emphasize that it is free from all impost, present and future. It is no longer for the "sovereign" government to decide imposts and taxations. The interests of the Yankee bankers are wholly safe from them.

Another interesting aspect of the loan is the complete imperialist nature of Article 6. The external debt of Uruguay is owed to different countries. The "consolidated debt", for example, that amounts to $60,828,276, was contracted in England. But now the Yankees, with this Article 8, assure themselves the monopoly.

For instance:: Suppose the government wishes to contract a new loan. It is certain that, indebted as the government is, new guarantees will be demanded. But then it must give securities to cover both the new loan and the present loan. On the other hand, if the new loan is contracted with the present loaners, this will not be necessary.

The loan is in dollars and must be paid in dollars. At the emission of the first series, the dollar was equal to 97 Uruguayan centesimos, that is to say, at par. The strong economic position of the United States makes it foreseen that as payments are made, the dollar will not decline, on the contrary it is very likely that it will rise. This will redound to the injury of the Uruguayan government.

Then we observe the figure at which the loan was contracted ($1.53); in accord with this the government will receive only $41,133,500, in place of the $45,000,000; while on the other hand the amount it must pay between interest and amortization, proceeds to a sum of from $91,000,000 to $92,000,000.

Of the amount obtained $7,000,000 will be dedicated to cancel previous loans not wholly covered, $1,500,000 for our ridiculous army, and the rest for public works. The character of these public works obligue their construction to be slow, which results in the country having sunk a great deal of money in them for a time, paying, however, interest at the rate of six per cent all this period.

As can be seen, the conditions could not have been more ridiculous. But apart from all these circumstances, the loan will have an effect to worsen the workers' standard of living. With this loan the annual payment of interest and amortization of all external debts will amount to around 20,000,000 pesos, almost a half of the present total budget of the republic. Twenty million pesos yearly of legal graft that the working class of a country of 1,500,000 population will have to pay.

The first series of the loan, $30,000,000, was bought, so we said, by Hallgarten and company at $1.53, and was resold wholly in North America on Wall Street market in a half an hour at more than 98. Which is to say that the bankers is that short lapse of time cleaned up a cool $1,500,000. The government press of Uruguay received this news jovially, declaring that the incident was proof of the solvency of the country. In reality it is no more than a proof of the strong imperialist development of the United States.

In conclusion, we reaffirm that the loan has worsened the economic situation of the workers for the 24 years that it will run. And that, therefore, the loan constitutes a battle won by Yankee capital against the proletariat of Uruguay.

In this respect, our Communist Party of Uruguay has carried out an agitation against the loan. For the First of May demonstration it raised the slogans — "Down with the loan!" "Down with Yankee imperialism!"

But the progress of our working class, yet politically weak, have not prevented the course of things. As in all conflicts of interest between capitalists and the proletariat, it was a question of force. The interests of the bourgeoisie, therefore, triumphed, as they are the stronger at present.

The Story of Labor Day

There is more than one way in which the capitalists have time and again attempted to thwart the ambitions of labor. Wherever it seemed impossible or undesirable to attack openly and directly, the master class would proceed in a roundabout way, but always pursuing the same objective; which is to prevent the crystallization of class consciousness and class organization among the workers.

Labor Day was conceived as labor's day. It promised to become, like May Day, a symbol of working class solidarity against the capitalist class. But it didn't. The capitalists together with their henchmen in the labor movement have accepted Labor Day as their own day, and in doing so have killed the soul of what should have become a day of real working class struggle.

Labor Day was made into a perfunctory, official holiday. It has become a legal holiday by act of congress and the legislatures of thirty-two states. The banks observe it. Everything is closed down. Factories stop. The mines are shut. None but the wheels of necessary transportation move.

But not because the workers will it. Not because of a show of main strength by the toilers in whose name this hollow tribute is observed. No! The factories close, the working class rests on that day because the masters themselves recognize the day and rest also. However, as the American labor movement becomes more militant and conscious, Labor Day also will become transformed into a day of struggle against capitalism.

How did Labor Day come about?

It was first suggested in the New York Central Labor Union in May, 1852. On the first Monday of the following September, a parade was arranged that terminated in a picnic at which speeches were made by labor orators. Two years later, in 1854, the American Federation of Labor, sitting in convention declared the first Monday of every September, Labor Day. In the resolution all wage earners, regardless of sex, race or nationality, were urged to observe the day until it should become as common as July 4th. Various states were persuaded to make the day a legal holiday.

So far so good. Labor Day celebrations were held in all the large cities. Some of them were impressive. The movement was young and virile. In the early eighties it was picking up steam for the battles to be fought at the end of that decade. In 1886, a huge parade was held on Labor Day in New York, which was made part of the campaign to elect Henry George mayor of New York City. Sam Gompers was there and aided in the campaign. Injunctions were being used on a wide scale and with impunity in a number of strikes that year in New York. "Down with Injunctions" was one of the slogans of the day. Gompers spoke from the same platform with Henry George and told the workers to violate the injunctions.

Then came the eight-hour movement. The American Federation of Labor was the initiator and the moving spirit of this memorable campaign. The Knights of Labor, grown to great power by this time, made a fatal error in refusing to participate officially in the movement for the eight hour day. But the A. F. of L. went forward with the preparations for the calling of a nation-wide eight-hour strike on May 1, 1886. May 1 was the logical time, with summer in the offing to fight the battle rather Labor Day with winter around the corner. That is how May Day came to be. And that is how May Day superceded Labor Day—why May Day is part of the flesh and blood of the movement. But Labor Day was continued. Yes. But that is another story.

The strike was called. The response was enthusiastic. Great gains were won for the workers. But on the 3rd of May came the Haymarket—the bloody conspiracy against again a handful of virile, revolutionary leaders of the workers that was in fact aimed at the growing militancy of the workers' movement in general and the eight-hour campaign in particular. The reaction to this violent reprisal was terrific, and there followed several years of inaction.

Nevertheless, at the convention of the A. F. of L., in 1889, the lull was broken and it was decided to proceed with the eight-hour campaign. One union at a time was to make the attempt until eight hours had become the universal work day. The Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners was chosen to call an eight-hour strike on May 1, 1890. Samuel Gompers addressed a request to the International Labor Congress, meeting in Paris, to aid the movement by calling mass meetings and demonstrations throughout Europe. The congress granted the request. The eight-hour strike was declared. More gains were made for eight hours in the building trades and great demonstrations of solidarity and support were staged throughout Europe. From then on May Day has been kept sacred by the militant European workers.

But what happened in the United States? After one more unsuccessful attempt, with the miners in the leading role in 1891, the eight-hour movement was abandoned. The militancy of the American Federation of Labor was dead. May Day was forgotten. In 1894, the United States congress enacted a law declaring Labor Day a holiday in the District of Columbia and the Territories. Perhaps the memory of May Day, 1888 and the fear that that day would come to be a tradition in this country as it had already become in Europe had something to do with this decision. The A. F. of L. was satisfied. This gift of the bosses fitted with the slogan, "A fair day's work for a fair day's pay." The perfunctory annual observation of an official holiday began and May Day was left to the revolutionary section of the American labor movement to keep alive.

From time to time, in various localities, Labor Day parades and celebrations have taken on a militant hue. They have occasionally been genuine workers' demonstrations, occuring in the midst of struggle, and serving as a means to unite masses of workers for a single purpose. But these occasions have been rare. For the most part, Labor Day parades are routine affairs conducted in each city by the central labor body which appoints a committee to arrange a parade and usually a picnic for it to wind up in. The speeches are the flat, colorless and highly eulogistic type of oratory, that slightly altered and spoken by different (but not always) persons, are heard on the Fourth of July or Decoration Day.

During the war, notably in the year 1918, Labor Day was used by officials of the American Federation of Labor as an occasion to rally the workers to "help win the war." The day was made over into a militaristic demonstration on behalf of the "War for Democracy." The American Federation of Labor officialdom and all the little petty officials were hand in glove with J. P. Morgan trying to win an imperialist war. Since that time, Labor Days have been hardly less servile in spirit, altho they of course lack the blood and thunder of that disgraceful spectacle.

In recent years many local labor bodies have lost even the incentive to arrange parades on the day. In Chicago, for example, the question of a parade has been a disputed question. There has been no parade for five years. In several more years Labor Day promises to be nothing more than a mere bank holiday.

Such, in brief, is the record of Labor Day. Indeed, Labor Day has traced from year to year, a veritable picture of the A. F. of L. Today the effete Labor Day of 1926 epitomizes the effete A. F. of L. of 1926. It is not our present job to go into the why of it. It is enough to say that the end of the militancy of the official labor movement approximates the beginning of the United States on its career as an imperialist capitalist power.

New blood is needed. The present officialdom of the American Federation of Labor is a dead and bloodless band guiding a movement grown sluggish thru too much patronage from the master class.

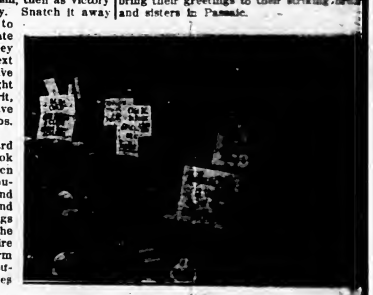
And that new blood, when it cuts off the dead hand and revitalizes the American Federation of Labor with the fighting traditions of its youth and the fire of struggle, will transform even Labor Day into a day of demonstration against capitalism, and will also observe in a real militant way the day of international working class solidarity—May Day.

Passaic Strikers' Reply to Mill [illegible]

By MARY HEATON VORSE.

LAST week the mill-owners of Passaic defied public opinion thruout the country by refusing to deal with either the Lauck committee or the American Federation of Labor. They threw a challenge to the 16,000 striking textile workers of Passaic and to every conscious working man and woman of this country. To the letter sent by the plenary committee proposing negotiations toward a strike settlement, Charles F. Johnson, vice-president of Botany Mills, stated arrogantly, "as far as we are concerned the strike is over."

Early in the evening the streets near the mills were full of people going in one direction. These were the striking textile workers going to Belmont Park to give their answer to Johnson of the Botany Mills as to whether or not the strike is over. The streets are full of people. Women walking in couples, heads up, stepping out in wide springy footsteps. Streets full of people walking with purpose. They are gay and they laugh. These are happy people walking toward Belmont Park. It gets to be a procession. Thousands on thousands of people are coming together to tell the mill owners what they think of this new carefully planned offensive. It was a move calculated to break strike morale. Let the workers believe that there will be a settlement. Indicate that if their leaders will step aside that the mill owners will deal with the American Federation of Labor. Bring the striking textile workers to a high pitch of hope and enthusiasm, then as victory approaches snatch it away. Snatch it away just as they are about to change leadership. Separate them from the leaders they love and trust on the pretext of settlement and don't give them a settlement. That ought to break the workers' spirit, especially workers who have been on strike seven months. So the bosses thought.



The crowd going toward Belmont Park does not look as if it's morale had been shaken. Thousands on thousands of people are there and more are coming. They stand quiet behind the high palings that shut the Park from the street. The tall trees spire above them. Dark trees form a background for the thousands of strikers' families gathered there.

A car drives up, the speakers are getting out. A murmur runs through the children, "Elizabeth Guriey Flynn." When the children here have grand children her name will still be a beloved name among the textile workers of New Jersey. The children who meet here every night to cheer the speakers, and especially to wait for Albert Weisbord, set up a shout. The crowd opens to let the speakers through. Women put beautiful bouquets of flowers, zenias and dahlias, into their hands. On the platform are the leaders the waiting people know and trust. They have been with them all the long months of the strike. Alfred Wagenknecht, relief director; Robert Dunn of the Civil Liberties; Elisabeth Gurley Flynn. Rank and file leaders from the Botany Mills, from the Forstmann & Huffmann Mills, are talking to the crowd. They catch the mood of the calm, assured thousands, the young local speakers laugh [illegible] offensive.

The listening crowd stands [illegible] on top of the world. Their [illegible] more formidable than the [illegible] lines. They have victory [illegible] have victory in their step; [illegible] faces have lost the anxious [illegible]

There has never been [illegible] Never in the history of the [illegible] other, can you find a strike [illegible] would stand secure and [illegible] an offensive like today a [illegible] months. They have the [illegible] ible.

What a sight to look down [illegible] sea of faces. Every one is [illegible] people, but everybody, mother [illegible] dren carrying on the strike [illegible] the men, with the women [illegible] bing in their hearts, strike [illegible] hearts. The women in this [illegible] the men. They stand here [illegible] They have lost the mill pallor [illegible] of defiance; they have the [illegible] from strength.

The sky grows darker, the [illegible] lit. A shout echoes through [illegible] and swells. The young [illegible] to the platform. [illegible] beth Flynn has [illegible] has brought word that Miss Williamson, representing the striking miners of England, bring their greetings to their striking [illegible] and sisters in Passaic.

She finished and her place is taken by [illegible] ord.

What a jolly crowd, they take active [illegible] n the meeting, shouting out full-throated [illegible] swers to the speakers' questions. Their [illegible] constant response, a give and take between [illegible] speaker and listeners that is unlike the [illegible] stolid passivity of the average audience. [illegible] thousands of people standing here so [illegible] assured, so alive, send up a stream of [illegible] and trust toward their leaders.

Weisbord is explaining that [illegible] registration for the United Textile [illegible] will begin. Another shout goes up. [illegible] ers of Passaic are not alone in [illegible] against Mr. Johnson's "new policy." [illegible] though side by side with this great [illegible] invincible, the other workers [illegible] slight possible.

Who said you can't buy happiness? [illegible] happiness couldn't be bought! [illegible] can't buy it. But you can give [illegible] down in your pocket for Passaic [illegible] up something you needed for [illegible] at the Passaic workers, then [illegible] the strike money can buy bread [illegible] age to laugh at the last set [illegible] tack of the bosses. The [illegible] them is a shout from the [illegible] of "Union! Union! Union!"

Art and Labor - - - - -

By PIERRE HAMP

EVER since people have been people, how many have realised that that which is most beautiful in the world is labor? Throughout the centuries, art has knelt before the woman, the warrior, the state. It has knelt before the laborer? Are the fearless firemen a less heroic sight than the military encounter? From the face of the kneeling donors, one can tell what faith was. But what picture has been left to us to show the person who loved his occupation, the transfigured being enraptured by his beautiful work?

Each day, the worker consummates with his hands the welfare of the world. And it is to him that art will owe its new life. The spectacles of love, of prayer are exhausted for the artist. Who has worshipped the dolorous beauty of the trades?...After so many ont-worn images, here is the renaissance: The blast furnace opens its mouth from which a tongue of flame leaps out. Its the fearless men. The smoke stack blows towards the sky its great laugh of sparks which the birds overleap. In the midst of the white steam, the linen weaver appears. Half-dressed, in the moist incubus of her misty loom, the moving solutions illuminate her livid countenance.

Those who do not wish to find in Socialism the loftiest mysticism: the mysticism of the idea of justice, and those who oppose to it the respect for income, hold themselves triumphant in this affirmation:

It leads the world to ugliness. Through it art would perish.

We must beseech them not to cling so much without clearly ascertaining to what. What is their art? The novels where three hundred pages are necessary to learn whether the viscountess trifles with the baron or with the marquis, or with both. The plays in which a married woman discovers, during four acts, reasons for her liking for sleeping out.

This world is no longer capable of invention. Is it necessary to meditate so long before contemporary art to see that for it also the revolution will be salubrious. Its spent soul searches impotently after pornographic diversions. Let us delight in the healthy destroyer who will achieve its destruction. That which deserves to die ought to die. The world must be born anew.

The poets of the agricultural races have kissed the earth; and those of warlike peoples, ennobled murder. The writers of our industrial race confine themselves to erotic amusements.

The condition of labor produces the permanent struggle between work and leisure. How many people will be allowed meditation by the shortest working day? And what art will come from this meditation of the people? The crowd which deals with reality supports the tenured artists, ink-splashers, who spend their lives passing from a study filled with books to a salon filled with women. The dead mason, in erecting the story where they now write, has completed a drama as they will never write it.

What grandeur there is in the consciousness of the craft? No one yet has caused this beauty to dominate us. For, those who accomplish it are vowed to silence.

Ceasing to reproduce the gesticulations of idlers and to invent the psychology of stockholders, art is going to rediscover the times in which it was the sublimation of labor, labor of the soil, labor of war. The drama of the workshop is on the same plane as the Iliad.

The people who today hold reality in their hands, who endure the shock of the stone that falls and the engine that bursts, are the poets with sealed lips. There is a tragic harmony in their hidden suffering.

Their pain precedes the light. They come in the agitated hour of dawn. In the factory, their tramping changes to motionless transmissions. The habitual motion of the machinist feels the serrated screw-nut to the last thread.

It is the hour. The slow starting of the motor-rod displays the light-colored oil on the white, smooth surface. The fly-wheel winds its cables onto its spokes which accelerate themselves, great side-rods shooting out as if to seize an unattainable ideal. The looms go. The noise of the workship in the open morning seems like the buzzing of an insect with black wings.

Who will tell of the lost paradise of this humanity? But see the good gang of workmen labor:

Six steel frame-workers bolt a high beam. Under them the abyss where flocks pass by. Their dozen arms obey a single spirit, the spirit of the trade. He who misses here falls and kills the others. Against risk, they are armed with skill. Their motions set, one in rhythm with the other, form themselves into a single motion. Nothing is so beautiful as labor. If they fall, it is without knowing that their fall pours forth into space a silent song great as the songs of Homer.

In the resistance of giddiness; before the enchantments of the fire, where sweat the faces of hard toilers, and whose active flame casts reflections on the hidden bodies, all these are the men who bear the grief of the world. In their spirit lives the millenary religion whose Messiah has not yet come: justice. Their dream is to hope for it, their passion to establish it. They are capable of dying gladly for them. What more powerful spirit can give to art its inspiration?

Hold Successful Labor Defense Conference

248 DELEGATES SET 300,000 MEMBERS AS GOAL FOR SECOND YEAR OF ACTIVITY OF I. L. D.

With 248 delegates from 38 cities reaching from coast to coast, the Second Annual Conference of International Labor Defense which ended its two-days' sessions yesterday listened to reports of the growth of the strength and influence of the organization which already contains 20,000 individual members and 100,000 affiliated collective members.

The numerous successful campaigns initiated and led by the I. L. D. and the cases it has already defended in the year of its existence including Sacco and Vanzetti, the Michigan Communist cases, the Pittsburgh cases, the Zeigler miners, the Passaic strikers and dozens of other large and small cases.

Adopt Program for New Year.

With enthusiasm the conference adopted a program for the coming year for an intensive organization drive to secure an individual membership of 50,000 and a collective membership of 250,000, under the direction of the new national executive committee which now includes such well-known labor fighters and progressives as Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, Albert Weisbord, Charles Cline, Clarence Darrow and J. W. L. Dana.

The conference, called by the secretary of the I. L. D., James P. Cannon, elected Edward C. Wentworth as temporary chairman, who turned over the gavel, after the credentials of all the delegates had been accepted, to the permanent conference chairmann, Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, who had chief charge of the Passaic strike field. Wentworth and Ralph Chaplin were chosen as vice-chairmen and George Maurer, Chicago secretary of I. L. D., was made secretary of the gathering.

The report of the executive committee on the work of the past year was then given by James P. Cannon. He reviewed the growth of the organization in the past year, the difficulties it had to meet, the bad defense organizational traditions it had to overcome in the process of work, and the doubts in the minds of many workers which it had conquered by making bolds out of the words of the resolutions of the first conference a year before.

With facts and figures he traced the campaigns conducted by the International Labor Defense in its first year, indicating always the fact that I. L. D. constantly maintained its standard of nonpartisan and united labor defense. In the defense of the Pittsburgh Communists, the Fall River anarchists, the Zeigler miners, the Passaic strikers, and its work for numerous members of the I. W. W., the American Federation of Labor, for Sacco and Vanzetti, I. L. D. had lived up to the aim it had set at the first conference.

Maintains World Solidarity.

The organization had also maintained the spirit of international solidarity to which it had pledged itself. The campaign for class war victims in Hungary, Lithuania, Poland, Britain and other lands was a testimony to this. And the reciprocal aid of the workers in other countries to the campaign for Sacco and Vanzetti conducted here was adequate proof of the value of world-wide labor unity.

Comrade Cannon then analyzed the growth of the organization, with figure which showed that the membership in the last six months of the year had doubled over the figures for the first six months. Not only the sales of dues stamps, but the sales of literature had increased decisively. A careful compilation revealed an individual membership of some 20,000 workers in over 150 branches, and a collective affiliated membership of between 75,000 and 100,000 members. But what had been done up until now, said Cannon, was as nothing compared to what might have been accomplished. The organization was

Current Events

THE Morning Telegraph of Findlay, Ohio, is entitled to the animated piece of cheese for the most idiotic editorial published in these United States during the month of August. Under the title "Legion on Guard," the writer thanks the American Legion for protecting against the existence of an alleged school somewhere in Arkansas which is run by a mythical organization known as the International Workers of the World. No doubt the dumb scribbler had the I. W. W. somewhere in his confused noodle, but he makes matters worse in the next sentence by declaring that the Soviet government was partly responsible with the wobblies for the financing of this institution. This suggested partnership would make a hard-boiled anarcho-syndicalist wobbly as mad as any legionary.

"THE nation is fortunate to be guarded by an organization of patriots like the American Legion," continues the Morning Republican. Let us stop here to observe that the United States was once fortunate in having such patriots as Harry Daugherty, Jess Smith and other Ohio boys guarding its interests. Jess was so successful that he committed suicide when his "patriotism" was about to be discovered and Daugherty is now facing trial in New York for helping a confederate to "guard" Uncle Sam's interests to the extent of separating the jolly old soul from something like $7,000,000. Sure we are lucky, and we know it!

LEST there may be some doubt in the minds of our readers that Findlay is not entitled to the cheese, we hereby rest the case on the people's side by quoting the following excerpt from one of Calvin Coolidge's masterpieces which adorns the columns of the Morning Republican. "One newspaper is better than a volume of criminal laws. One schoolmaster is better than a legion of bailiffs. One clergyman is better than an army with banners. These are our guarantees of international peace and progress." We hate to spoil the soup by adding more water, but if clergymen are so invincible why not release the standing army and allow the clergymen to take their place?

IT is now a misdemeanor for an Italian citizen to leave Italy on a vacation," according to an article in the Chicago Daily News from its correspondent in Rome. Those who leave the country for a vacation find their names published in the press and branded as slackers. Mussolini will soon have the once sunny and gay land of Italy transformed into a huge prison. It is bad enough now, but it will be worse before it gets better.

REPORT THAT CHAMORRO HAS RESIGNED AND FLED

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 7.—The Mexican consulate in Managua has been closed, thus breaking off all relations between Mexico and Nicaragua. There are unconfirmed reports here that President Chamorro has resigned to flee the country because of continued victories of the revolutionists on both coasts. News of heavy fighting with the rebels gaining ground in Nicaragua comes by telegram from Guatemala and San Salvador.

State Troops Use War Methods on Strikers

Here is shown a barbed wire entanglement thrown about a textile mill at Manville, Rhode Island, near Providence, after state troopers had wounded five strikers by firing a volley into the ranks of a picket line. Tear bombs, rifles and barbed wire, complete war-time equipment has been brought into play in behalf of the mill owners in an attempt to break a strike of 3,000 workers.

MUSICIANS ON STRIKE HERE 3,000 STRONG

400 Movies Run Without Music in Chicago

A lengthy conference between James C. Petrillo, president of the Chicago Federation of Musicians and former Judge George F. Barrett representing 400 moving picture theater owners "broke up in a riot" as the former put it, and indicated that the 3,000 movie musicians on strike since 1:30 Sunday morning will continue off the job. The union submitted wage demands for the ensuing year raising their pay from $62.50 to $6.00 per week. This the theater owners agreed to pay but when it came to a settlement of working conditions and length of contract the union balked.

President Petrillo told The DAILY WORKER that the owners have violated their contract and that that alone was the cause of the strike. When asked if the owners were out to break the union, he said he thot so but that "they haven't got enough money to do it."

Want 3-Year Contract.

The owners are demanding a three-year contract. The union insists on a one-year agreement. The owners have violated their previous agreement by attempting to withdraw musicians from theaters in which the agreement calls for no less than four men.

The union has no knowledge of scabs being used in any of the theaters as yet. "President Petrillo said he didn't think the union would resort to picketing for a while. Concerning whether or not he would call upon other theatrical unions for assistance, he said it was not yet decided.

May Strike in Sympathy.

George E. Brown, vice-president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes, said that the stage hands would be called out on sympathetic strike with the musicians if the latter require it.

Thomas J. Reynolds, president of the local union of moving picture operators said he had just returned from his vacation and had not yet got into the full details of the musicians' controversy. He said he was calling a board meeting of his union Tuesday afternoon. When asked about his attitude towards sympathetic strikes, Reynolds said, "As a good union man, of course, I am in favor of them if they have to be used."

The Bill Foster's Union announced thru their local president that they were not prepared to say as yet what action they would take to help the

FASCIST RULE IS VICTIM OF INNER STRIFE

By G. ROSSI

(Special to The Daily Worker)

VIENNA, Austria, —(By Mail)— The most important event in the home politics of Italy in the last few months was the fall of Farinacci, the general secretary of the fascist party and his replacement by Augusto Turati (not to be confused with the social-democratic leader of the same name). Farinacci's resignation, which of course was forced upon him, was the culminating point of the fights which have been taking place in the corridors and antichambers of the various palaces in Rome, in which the ministery of the interior, the prime minister's office and the offices of the fascist party are housed. After the Matteotti case came

MEXICAN LABOR SENDING ENVOYS TO A. F. L. MEET

Delegates Will Defend Calles' Position

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.— Three spokesmen of the Mexican Regional Confederation of Labor will attend the convention of the American Federation of Labor in Detroit Oct. 4-16, and will defend the policies of the Calles government. They are Ricardo Trevino, general secretary of the Confederation; Juan Rico, secretary of the labor party, and Ezequiel Salcedo.

Trevino, as the actual leader of the labor movement since Luis N. Morones went into the Calles cabinet, will defend the Mexican revolution against the charge that it has interfered with freedom of thought and worship. His reply will be that it is seeking to establish for all Mexicans an equal liberty to think and to exercise religious freedom, and that the old clerical party is resisting this democratic movement.

The Mexican fraternal delegates will urge that no step be taken to break down the Pan-American Federation of Labor, in which the Mexicans are affiliated with the A. F. of L.

Editor Falls Off Ship.

HALF NEW YORK UPHOLSTERERS' SHOPS SIGN UP

NEW YORK, Sept. 7.—About 50 per cent of the upholsterers' shops struck here on Wednesday have already settled with the union on the basis of the 40-hour week, which was the main demand in the strike.

This is the first strike here of the Upholsterers' International Union since 1919. At the first meeting held after the walkout enthusiastic greetings were given the union officials, who pointed out that Local 76 (New York) had always been first in improving conditions in the trade.

An organization committee of the most active members was elected, and an energetic appeal was made to all workers in non-unionized shops to line up in the union.

Soviet Workers Increase Aid to British Strikers

By JOHN PEPPER.

(Special Cable to The Daily Worker.)

MOSCOW, Sept. 7.—At an extraordinary meeting of the Presidium of the Central Council of the Labor Unions of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, it was resolved to remit to the Executive Committee of the Miners' Federation of Great Britain the sum of 3,000,000 roubles ($1,500,000), comprising the total sum so far collected by the assessment levied by the trade unions on the salaries of the membership and also an advance on the future collections.

The trade unions are responding unanimously to the invitation of the Central Council for a one per cent assessment for the aid of the British miners.

The above sum of $1,500,000 adds to the sum previously sent, approximately $3,000,000, making in all about $4,500,000 sent to the aid of the fighting miners of Great Britain from the Russian workers.

Trade Union Congress Opens

By EARL R. BROWDER.

(Special Cable to The Daily Worker)

BOURNEMOUTH, England, Sept. 7.—The British Trade Union Congress opened today with the General Council presenting a united front to critics of its policies in the general strike and the miners' strike.

To avoid the censure due the General Council for its betrayal of the general strike, it appears no report is to be made on the council's role in the strike except to mention it and make a mild defense of the general strike as a principle.

It is rumored that an agreement has been reached with the miners' executive to support a compromise resolution on the lockout, to be moved by Herbert Smith, pledging support to the miners, but leaving all concrete action to the various unions and keeping silent on the shameful role the General Council has played in the part.

On the subject of international world trade union unity, the General Council will ask full powers, but no instructions. The council will ask that the congress reject resolutions for more power to the General Council.

The council has leaned a protest against the axclusion of Tomsky, and other members of the delegation of the Russian unions, by the Home Secretary, William Joynson Hicks, but the capitalist press remarks that the General Council is secretly grateful to the British tory government for its action in stopping the visit of the Russian delegates.

Miners For a Clean Sweep.

Rumors are current that the miners' delegates will vote against all present members of the General Council for seats in the new council.

Hamilton Fyfe, editor of the London Herald, labor organ, before whose office a demonstration was staged last week in protest of an editorial saying that the miners should have accepted the Samuels memorandum last May, has left the Herald. But his first act afterward was to celebrate his first Sunday by publishing in the capitalist paper, the Sunday Express, a bitter attack on the Miners' Federation and particularly against Secretary A. J. Cook.

British Government Takes Revenge.

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., Sept. 7. — In connection with the refusal of visas to the delegation from the Central Council of the labor unions of the U. S. S. R. the British Trade Union Congress, Melnichansky of the Central Council declares that the English capitalist class and its government is attempting by all means to hamper the struggling miners of Britain from the outside world. He says:

"The refusal of visas to our delegation is undoubtedly an act of political revenge against the Central Council of the labor unions of the U. S. S. R. for relief received sent the striking miners of England."

At a meeting in Manchester it is noted, John R. Clynes of the labor party, has characterized the barring of the Russian delegation as petty and provocatory interference in the rights of the toilers of England to establish connections on an international scale.

Owners Refuse to Negotiate

LONDON, Sept. 7. — The central committee of the Mining Association, the mine owners' organization, has endorsed the refusal of the owners' executive committee to negotiate a national agreement with the striking coal miners. The owners insist on district agreements such to be arrived at according to what they claim are special local requirements. The miners point out that this is merely a method of breaking up the Miners' Federation into sections and crushing them one at a time.

The refusal of the owners took the form of a refusal of the invitation of the government, made by Winston Churchill, chancellor of the exchequer, that the owners meet in a three-cornered session, with the government and the miners, to negotiate a national agreement.

This throws the situation into a deadlock anew and renders futile the efforts of the Miners Federation, which had moved for a settlement, with the sole reservation that a national agreement be reached.

A. J. COOK SPEAKS FOR UNITY AT T. U. C.; ACCUSES UNION LEADERS

BOURNEMOUTH, England, Sept. 7.—Renewed proposals for "one big union," to comprise all trades unions in Great Britain, brought forth an acrimonious debate in the Trades Union Congress here today.

A. J. Cook, secretary of the Miners' Federation, made a harsh attack against leaders of other unions charging them with "abandoning" the striking coal miners. He declared on amalgamation of the unions into one union would strengthen the labor movement.

...CRATS IN GREECE DEMAND CAPITAL TAXES

Condylis Recognizes Communist Power

ATHENS, Sept. 7.—The Communist Party took immediate advantage of the change in governments here to obtain a permit for a demonstration and held a great mass meeting and parade.

The meeting passed resolutions which demanded, among other things, the right to free elections and proportional representation, heavy taxation of big capital to relieve the distress of the refugees and the unemployed, punishment of the backers of the Pangalos dictatorship, freedom of the press, increase of wages, eight-hour day, completion of the re-settlement of the refugees, and discharge of the present reactionary committee on refugees, which seeks to force them into strike-breaking and other obnoxious activities.

The refugees are a serious problem in Greece, consisting of uprooted families from the regions affected by the Great war and the Greek war with Turkey.

The Communists paraded past the Hotel Great Britain.

Condylis Recognizes Power.

"LONDON, Sept. 7.—The London Times publishes with surprised editorial comment and veiled threats against the new government of Greece a telegram from its Athens correspondent giving the main features of an interview between General Condylis and the Soviet News Agency.

Condylis stated that the first object of the new provisional government, which had overthrown the dictatorship of Pangalos, would be to hold free elections, the speaker remaining for the present head of the cabinet of ministers as well as chief of the democratic party. He said he would settle the economic problem among the lines of social-democratic reforms, heavy taxation on big capital and relief for the poorer classes, the foreign policy to be one of peace.

Menarchists Attack.

NEW YORK, Sept. 7.—Atlantis, the Greek monarchist paper published here, launches an editorial attack against Condylis because of his announced plan to tax big capital for the benefit of the poor, and reported friendship for the Soviet Union. It denounces him as a "buck private" who secured his epaulets thru revolutions, and reminds its readers that the labor and Communist groups, towards which Condylis now inclines his policy, were formerly persecuted by him.

Atlantis emphasizes the fact that the committee for the re-settlement of refugees in Greece is an international affair, with representatives of several nations on it.

A Former Fascist.

The editor of Empros (Forward), Greek publication of the Workers' Party in Chicago, states that Condylis is really a former fascist; while a minister he persecuted labor unions and the Communist Party; he organized the "Pursuit Bands," a kind of fascist corps; he drove underground the world war veterans' organization, which was friendly to the Communists; he was the first to order troops to fire on the strikers in Cavalla.

The Empros' editorial states that Condylis' change of tactics is the result of the great growth and influence of the Communist Party in Greece.

COURTS ATTACK N. Y. CLOTHING TRADE UNIONS

Injunction and Damage Suit Acted Upon

Supreme Court Justice Welsh has handed down an injunction, which is novel in a way, forbidding the striking garment workers to picket within four blocks of the store of the Tailored Women, Inc., at 512 Fifth avenue, one of the shops that cater to wealthy trade. Part of the court's declaration rade:

"Any such attempt to interfere with the employer's constitutional prerogative to conduct his business as he sees fit, provided he does not interfere with the rights of others, is obnoxious, as being, in effect, a wanton and malicious interference with another's business by those who have no justification for their conduct."

Another capitalist court attack on the labor unions was the judgment filed in the supreme court against the Workers' Union of New York, on behalf of one Joe Cohen, who claims he is a fur cutter and alleges that he could not obtain employment without a union card, which the union denied him. The judgement was for $25,000. The suit was not defended in court and was made by a sheriff's jury.

Good Business While Average Wage is $25

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—A reflection of America's temporary industrial prosperity so far as capitalists are concerned was seen today in a report of the federal reserve board showing an increase of $400,000,000 in the amount of bank outstanding on August 26 as compared with the same date a year ago.

The total loans then were $14,097,845,000, the board announced, indicating that American capitalists are showing tremendous activity in expanding commercial enterprises. The increase in loans totalled $4,000,000 in the last week alone, the board announced.

At the same time American capital has had sufficient reserve funds to increase its holdings in investments by $144,000,000 over the amount held a year ago. This increase came solely. It was added, from an increase of $186,000,000 in the holdings of private and semi-public bonds, stocks and securities, as the holdings of government securities declined $43,000,000 in the same period.

Light Wines and Beer Leader Pans Agents

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—In its efforts to enforce prohibition, the United States government is instituting a system comparable only to that which prevailed in Russia in the days of the czars, was charged today by Capt. W. H Stayton, head of the organized vets here. Stayton referred to the policy of rewarding informers for information of violations.

To Spy on Tenants.

"In Russia for many years under the czar," said Stayton, "the janitor of every apartment house was a paid agent of the police whose duty it was to inform the police of the doings of everybody in the house.

"This gave the police, of course, a beautiful opportunity not only to regulate every action of the residents, but also to blackmail them. Everyone has heard of the 'agent provocateur,' the despicable spy who urges people to commit crime, and then either blackmails them or reports them.

Prohibition Spies.

"Many of our prohibition agents are nothing better than spies, and the present plan means that we are to add to our force of paid scoundrels a great body of rascally volunteers. What a contemptible business for the United States government."

That's what fascism has accomplished for the Italian workers.

WHILE the fascist regime in Italy has just put the finishing touch to whatever vestige of elective privileges remained in possession of the masses, the Soviet government is pushing on energetic campaign among the peasantry with the object of inducing them to take a more active part in politics. The Soviet government is not afraid of an educated peasantry and proletariat, because the only obstacle that stands between the closer friendship of the peasantry with the government is ignorance. Thus the Soviet government's budget for education is tremendous in proportion to its revenue, while the fascist government has clamped an iron lid over the masses and gives them neither the opportunity to learn nor the liberty to express themselves.

CHARLES CLINE, just released from a Texas penitentiary, where he spent over 13 years, walked into The DAILY WORKER office last Saturday and chatted with the staff. Cline's blue eyes twinkled as merrily as if he had returned only to trip around the world. The best part of his life was spent behind prison bars, he is just as eager to serve the working class movement as the day he went in. Cline was arrested while on his way to Mexico to aid the revolutionary movement against the reactionary usurper, De la Huerta. He has a great story to tell and we hope The DAILY WORKER will heve e chance to let you in on it.

A HEADLINE tells us that the pope moves for a place in world politics. The old boy has been doing that for quite a long time and has succeeded rather well. He has had tough luck in Mexico, but the millions of American dollars that flow into his treasury console him somewhat for the spiritual coldness of the Mexicans. According to a fascist newspaper the vatican is ready to bargain with England on the Palestine question. The vatican also favors a seat for Germany on the league of nations tribunal, but will not support the Spanish claim to Tangier. The pope had a scrap with De Riviera recently and, furthermore, the pope does not went to hurt England's feelings. John Bull looks with a jaundiced eye at Spain's claim to Tangier.

and yet well-knit welded together and completely mobilized. This was the task for the coming year.

"I. L. D. has taken its place in the labor movement," commented Comrade Cannon, "and it has demonstrated its ability to mobilize thousands of workers of all opinions and affiliations in the working class under the banner of Labor Defense. It his given many of them their first lessons in the class struggle. Our work will not end quickly for it can end only when all workers have been released and none can any more be threatened with imprisonment. But that will only be when all workers are released—not only from jail but from that gigantic prison which is capitalism."

Big Ovation for Cline.

Before discussion began on the report, Chairman Flynn introduced Charles Cline, who had but two weeks before been released from a thirteen year term he served in a Texas prison for participating in a Mexican revolutionary expedition. Cline was greeted by a great ovation with cheers and applause, reaffirmed the faith he had always held, and which had always buoyed him up in prison, in the working class. It was this faith which enable him to stand up under the hell of a Texas prison for thirteen years. His thanks for release were to the working class and to such an organization as International Labor Defense which was developing the power that would free all the class war prisoners. Cline read the pardon given by the governor, with his own comments, while the delegates laughed when the governor declared that Cline had done no worse that the "immortal Travis, Sowin and Crockett" the heroes of Texas independence. "It took them thirteen years to find that out," said Cline.

Albert Weisbord, the young leader of the Passaic textils strike, followed Cline, the delegates rising and singing the international. Weisbord said that his own case or that of any other individual in itself was not of essential importance, for the class struggle would proceed with or without this or that person. But the need of defending prisoners for labor's ranks, of maintaining their morale and courage, of snatching prospective victims from the clutches of the capitalist class was of great importance. The I. L. D. said Weisbord, was doing a great work and the cases in Passaic demonstrated this. It had become and should become not only a shield of defense but a weapon for offensives against the enemy.

Chairman Flynn "conscripted" Ralph Chaplin to speak. Chaplin expressed the great faith of the men in prison and of the value of the international Labor Defense as a unifying instrument in defense work.

Elizabeth Gurley Flynn began her talk by saying that a year ago, when I. L. D. had been organized, she was a skeptic. But her doubts were all removed now. The work of the I. L. D., especially in the Sacco-Vanzetti campaign was of great value to the working class. It had proved, in addition, that defense work was not something undertaken for sentimental reasons but that it was an essential and integral part of the class struggle.

Delegates Join in Discussion.

Discussion from the floor was then opened. From one city after another the delegates spoke of the development of the work of the international Labor Defense, of the obstacles that they had overcome and the successes they had achieved. Agreement with the report of the executive committee given by Cannon was universally expressed.

Cyril Lamkin, secretary of the Detriot I. L. D., then reported for the committee on the secretary's report. A resolution proposed was unanimously adopted. The resolution accepted the report of the executive committee and commended it on the fidelity with which it had carried thru the resolutions of the last conference. It recommended to the incoming committee that it conduct its activities along the same line, adhering to the same policy.

Carl Hacker, secretary of the Cleveland I. L. D., raported for the resolutions committee. Resolutions were adopted against the imprisonment of workers and peasants in Poland, after a speech by the representative to the conference of the Inter-parliamentary Committee of the Polish Sejm for Amnesty in Poland. A U. S. Congress demand for amnesty was endorsed and a cable sent to that effect to the Polish premier. A resolution of greetings to class war prisoners, assuring them of the untiring efforts thet I. L. D. will continue in their behalf, was unanimously adopted, as were all the other resolutions. Resolutions of warm greetings were sent to Sacco and Vanzetti, to Eugene V. Debs and to Bishop William Montgomery Brown. A resolution protesting against the abrogation of the right of asylum for a number of Italian political refugees was endorsed. Calling attention to old and almost forgotten cases a resolution was laid on the table to renew the struggles for the release of these old fighters. A resolution on organization was also adopted.

A few constutional changes were proposed by the constitution committee in the report of Robert Zeims, Boston I. L. D. secretary. Dues are to be as before, 10 cents per month with 25 cents as initiation fee.

The final business session of the Labor Defender, read the manifesto of the Second Conference to the American workers, and with some suggestions from the delegates, it was unanimously adopted.

Read Greetings to Conference.

Following the discussion, Comrade Cannon replied to some of the remarks made by delegates in their speeches. Telegrams and letters of greetings to the conference were read from the secretary of the International Class War Prisoners' Aid of England, from the Latvian Board of the New York Furriers' Union, from Warren K. Billings, Matthew Schmidt, from Pablo Manalepi in prison in Hansleid, Robert Whitaker of California, from Passaic strikers and numerous others.

The second day of the conference heard a report by C. E. Ruthenberg, following decision on the Comintern appeal, on the white terror in other capitalist countries. Ruthenberg pointed out the frightful situation existing in numerous European countries and the need for extending the hand of fraternal solidarity to these class war victims and prisoners. Harrison George reported on the situation in Latin-America, where American imperialism is instrumental in imprisoning scores of labor fighters and those who are battling for liberation.

The greatest part of the second day's session was taken up with organizational matters. Sharp and friendly self-critics of past activities and means of improving the structure and forms of activity of the I. L. D. Numerous suggestions in this direction were made by all the delegates. The discussion, which was led by Secretary James P. Cannon, took up all organizational questions from that of organizing the united front to the arrangement of a mass meeting and the sale of literature. In addition to this discussion, provision was made to take up local problems with a number of the delegates after the official adjournment of the conference.

New Committee is Elected.

The last point on the agenda was the election of a new national committee. The announcement by James P. Cannon that Elizabeth Gurley Flynn had consented to serve not only on the national committee but as a chairman of the organization in place of Andrew T. McNamara, who is very ill, and had asked to be relieved from his position for a short time, was greeted with long cheers and applause. All the members of the former national committee were re-elected, together with Charles Cline, Albert Weisbord, Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, D. J. Bentall, Robert Morss Lovett, Herry W. Longfellow Dana, Charles Gray and Clarence Darrow. The executive committee was empowered to add to this number at its discretion. The national committee will meet today to choose the executive committee and other officers of the organization.

musicians. In any case they had not been called on.

Asked about the next steps of the union to win the strike, President Petrillo said that a board meeting would be called Tuesday afternoon to decide upon this. "In the meantime, the men are going to stay out. For the moment, I see little chance of a settlement."

Another official of the union told The DAILY WORKER that the owners' association was "out to break the union. Their violation of the contract they had with us was their opening gun in an attempt to crush the union altogether in Chicago."

The first blood was drawn by the union when the Woods theater, showing a musical comedy dependent on an orchestra signed up with the union. The season in the Woods' musicians were called out was because the management also owns a moving picture house.

Not an instrument sounded in the many moving picture theaters thruout the city on Labor Day. The theater owners were boastful of their ability to attract the holiday crowds sans music, but union official said reports to them told of in some instances loud-voiced dissatisfaction with the unusual silence for which they were paying prices that ordinarily include musical entertainment.

During the night session, the producers offered what they called "arbitration" to the union. The "arbitrator" was to be chosen from one of three men: the postmaster, a judge and a county hospital surgeon. It was six of one and a half dozen of the other for the union, none of the so-called arbitrators could have been suspected of any sort of sympathy for organized labor. The offer was turned down.

A spokesman for the union pointed out that the owners were trying to abrogate a contract. "We have been doing business with them," he said, "on the basis of honor. But we have discovered that doesn't work. We had a verbal agreement with the owners during the war and at that time they stuck to it. Now, however, they are out to smash the union and the first thing they have done is to ignore the agreement."

Incidental to the desire of the owners to break the union, the association is trying to uphold the stand of a group of smaller houses to take on less than four musicians as at present required. The union officials show the insincerity of this move by pointing to the fact the owners have made no move to redrce prices in the theaters in which they wish to cut the number of musicians used.

A union official told The DAILY WORKER, "we are getting a new deal from most of the daily papers in Chicago." The plute press, which seems to feel it cannot afford to desert its cause of the owners, whose advertisements are an important source of income, have been carrying stories calculated to break the morale of the musicians. An afternoon paper carried a streamer on Tuesday saying that a settlement was near while The DAILY WORKER only a few minutes later was assured by the union that the settlement was a long way off unless the owners acceded to the union demands.

"Build Your Union!" Is Weisbord's Last Appeal to the Passaic Strikers

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

ALBERT WEISBORD, the youthful Communist leader of the Passaic, New Jersey, textile strike, has withdrawn from the struggle. On the eve of Labor Day he bade farewell to the 16,000 strikers with whom he had battled for nearly eight months against all the strength that its powerfully entrenched mill owners could muster against the mill workers.

Weisbord will not withdraw of his own volition. He wanted to stay and fight it out to the finish,—to the final victory against the Passaic front of the textile profiteering industry that must yet be won, and that will stimulate the workers in other textile centers to similar brilliant struggles.

Weisbord withdrew from the struggle as a condition imposed by the officialdom of the American Federation of Labor for the admission of the great host of strikers to the recognized American movement.

The millions of American workers, organized and unorganized, will demand to know why Weisbord had to withdrew from the struggle.

He had come into this slave center of the textile industry and under the genius as an organizer to bring the workers together. It was only after weeks of preparation and in the face of a vicious cut in wages, that the Passaic workers went out on strike. They didn't all come out at once. One mill followed another—the Botany, the Gera, the Forstmann-Hoffmann, the Lodi—until the mighty hosts were on the march in one of the most historic battles in all American labor history.

The Communist, Weisbord, was their leader. Weisbord, the Communist, was a successful organizer, a successful strike leader. That was his only crime. Thru actual achievements in the Passaic strike, he proved the lie in every attack that labor reaction, thru its conservative officialdom employing ancient methods in trade union work, has made upon the Communists.

The brilliant triumphs achieved by Communist leadership and militant methods in conducting the Passaic strike, threw an intensely revealing glare on the outworn tactics of the labor officialdom that denied the class struggle and knows only the war against the progressives.

The forced withdrawal of Albert Weisbord was another glaring illustration of the expulsion policy invoked by the labor officialdom to insure the continued rule of reaction, to maintain the treacherous "class peace" with the employers, the truce of surrender. Just as an effort has been made to drive Communists and forward-looking militants out of the miners' union, the machinists' union, the carpenters' union, the painters' union and some needle trades' unions, so is the effort made to eliminate Albert Weisbord from the Passaic strike situation and, if possible, from the labor movement.

Weisbord withdraw from the Passaic strike at a time on the eve of labor day, when the full strength of the Green regime in the A. F. of L. was busy assuring America's exploiters that American labor would not rebel against the heavy chains that shackle them.

President William Green was at the sesquicentennial in Philadelphia and on Sunday at Carnegie Hall in New York City, pledging his listeners that "the rule of reason prevails," yet he marvelled that conditions, such as exist in the non-union coal fields "still prevail in a 'Free America.'" He gave the lie to himself. Secretary Frank Morrison was in Washington to defend the capitalist congress in Washington against "slure and insults," that he says were unjustly hurled at this lackey of capitalism. Their views were hailed by the employers' press generally. The Chicago Tribune, while attacking the musicians' strike, gloried in the fact as expressed in a headline over an article by one of its financial writers thet, "American Labor Is Still Feeling Gompers' Power." It hails with joy the declared fact that, "Another Labor Day finds the American labor movement still distinctly diverse from those prevailing in Europe."

The Chicago Daily News, the organ of the LaSelle Street bankers and the local "open shop" interests and Landis Awarders, greets with acctacy "the creative spirit in trade unionism," that "frowns upon needless strikes and lockouts and abhore the propaganda of class struggle and destructive radicalism."

The Green-Woll-Morrison policies have the approval of the worst exploiters of the workers in their struggle to prevent the vitalization of the American trade union movement.

The farewell tendered Weisbord by the Passaic textile workers was labor's best answer to the Greens, the Wolls, the Morrisons, The Tribune, the Daily News and everything that they stand for. According to the strikers' official publicity service, "The meeting (held in the open air at Belmont Park, in Garfield) was one of the most important and dramatic held in a strike which has had many dramatic moments. The huge park was packed to capacity, over 15,000 persons managing to squeeze themselves into the premises, while other thousands jammed the windows and doorways of the adjoining hall and occupied verandas, roofs and trees across the road."

"Gustav Deak, the head of the strikers' organization formed under the standards of the United Textile Workers' Union, afflicted with the A. F. of L., presided at the farewell to Weisbord.

Weisbord is in Chicago attending the International Labor Defense conference. He now wears a watch with a case of white gold bearing on its back the inscription: "From the Passaic Textile Strikers to Our Organizer, Albert Weisbord, in Appreciation of Loyal Service in the Class Struggle, Sept. 2, 1926."

There was a fountain pen and a pencil from the five members of the Relief Committee, the staff leaders of the struggle with "From the U. F. C. to A. W." engraved upon them. There was a huge silver loving cup from the Lodi strikers, presented by a committee of Negro workers. And flowers! And huge placards displayed over the mighty farewell throng proclaiming, "Weisbord, We Will Build a Strong Union as a Monument to You." And then Weisbord spoke:

"It seems that my head has been demanded for having faithfully and loyally served the interests of the strikers," he said. I am sure that there are many workers who will ask, 'What is it that Weisbord has done that he should be removed?' They will want to know if he is dishonest or disloyal. They will want to know why Weisbord can find no place inside the American Federation of Labor.

"These are questions that President William Green and all the members of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor will find it very difficult to answer.

"I may be expelled from the Passaic textils strike, but I cannot be expelled from the labor movement.

"I shall continue to devote my life's work to the cause of the working class. I have no interests other then those of the workers. When it became necessary that I remove myself in order to pave your way into the American Federation of Labor and to victory over the mill bosses, I gladly lodged myself to do so. I am here tonight to carry out that pledge. As you are aware, when I came among you to organize you. I had no thought of organizing MY UNION. I knew it would have been insanity to organize an independent union. From the very beginning it was my aim to get you into the main body of the American labor movement, and in this connection we made several overtures to the United Textile Workers of America, but the U. T. W. was not ready at that time to take us in. Now that you have gained admission into the U. T. W. we celebrate the realisation of your first objective.

"That I am going away is not a sign of weakness. It is a sign of strength that I am able to leave you, satisfied that you are now powerful enough, that you have wise and trained leaders who have come up from your ranks, to assure the protection of your every interest."

Then Weisbord sounded the call:

Build your union!
Build your union!
Build your union!

Weisbord has helped batter a breach in the high wall of opposition erected by the American Federation of Labor officialdom against the organization of the unorganized.

The 16,000 workers in Passaic textile mills, unorganised a yeer ago, are today marching into the A. F. of L., an organized, militant body, an inspiration and vanguard for unorganized workers everywhere.

BRITISH MINE UNION LEADERS TO NEGOTIATE

Conference Authorizes National Agreement

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Sept. 7.—The conference of miners' delegates has given authorization to the executive to "take necessary steps to submit proposals for setting up a national agreement for the mining industry."

Executive May Compromise.

Just what this means seems to be dependant on whether any reservations are made by the executive on wages and hours. If the executive, which has before shown signs of weakness, as in the chancellor's proposals, should negotiate an agreement, even on a national scale, retreating from the standpoint of sturdy opposition to the longer work day and reduced wages, there is certain revolt ahead from the rank and file, which has voted against compromise on both.

Some workers are warning against the influence of the labor party leaders, the right wing MacDonald-Thomas group, which is doing everything possible to force the miners into a compromise that can be presented to the Trade Union Congress which opens Monday in the disguise of a "victory."

The Vote.

The card vote of the delegates was 557,000 for authorizing negotiations on the basis proposed, to 225,000 against. Of the delegates, voting individually, the vote was won by a majority of 339 out of 2,000. The executive will arrange a conference without delay, with the government, prior to negotiations with the mine owners.

Huge Coal Shipments from Poland Helping Break British Strike

MOSCOW, Sept. 2 (By Mail).—The captain of the steamer "Spartacus," which has just arrived in Leningrad, reports:

More than 200 steamers are lying in Danzig harbor loading coal for Great Britain. The work of loading is continued day and night. There are so many vassels there that the Polish exporters have been compelled to pay for the waiting time of the steamers because the harbor is not built to load so many ships with coal simultaneously.

A. F. of L. Holds up Statement on British Strike Relief Funds

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—Secretary Morrison of the A. F. of L. has decided that he will make no statement of the amount of money he receives for the British strikers' relief fund until the total has reached a high figure. Most of the sum pledged have not yet reached his office.

Airplane Sleeper Has Porter for Capitalists

BERLIN, Sept. 7.—Berlin to London air service is increased by the addition of a night "sleeping car." It has berths for four passengers, a porter, and wireless telephone. It is built of aleminum, and is an "Albatrose" hiplane. Others will be in use shortly.

DEMISE OF VALENTINO CRACKS CHURCH BOYCOTT

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 7.—Valentino's death has resulted in a vogue for his old pictures. The Church's prohibition of moving pictures, one of the religious boycotts against the state has failed to prevent great crowds wherever the shiek is on the screen. The government itself is considering prohibiting "The Four Horsemen" because of gratuitous insults to Germans contained in it.

BRITISH TRADE UNION CONGRESS NOW IN SESSION

Storm Expected to Put Out Strike Betrayers

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Sept. 7.—When the Trade Union Congress meets this week at Bournemouth British labor faces many issues of grave importance. To deprive the congress of the right to hear the message of the Russian labor unions, who have contributed about $3,000,000 so far to the aid of the striking miners, the British government has announced that it will not permit M. Tomsky, of the Central Council of the Soviet Labor Unions, to land.

Storm Expected.

The congress, however, is expected to be the stormiest ever held, with the right wing leader, J. H. Thomas, and the apparently united members of the General Council, striving to head off attacks upon them from betraying the general strike in May, and hindering effective support of the miners ever since.

Observers indicate that a strong fight will be made to replace the General Council members with more militant workers who respond to the unquestionable militant rank and file.

Right Wing Against Unity.

The right wing, it is certain, will make an effort to break off the bonds of unity between the English and Russian workers, which was set up previously by the Anglo-Russian Trade Union Committee.

An avalanche of criticism is probably due to the General Council for its attitude in the Paris conference of the Anglo-Russian committee, where British delegation refused to discuss the question of relief to the British miners, and by putting their pride before their duty demanded that the General Council of the Soviet Labor Unions withdraw their public statement on the general strike betrayal by the General Council.

These and other matters, wherein the strength of the left wing, or National Minority Movement, is expected to make a telling effect, will make the congress of enormous importance.

War Department Head Guilty of Defrauding

NEW YORK, Sept. 7.—Benjamin F. Faltar of Chicago, formerly head of the textile branch of the surplus property division for the war department, today was found guilty of conspiracy to defraud the government in the filing of false claims of goods sold to the Universal Sales company of New York.

He will be sentenced Wednesday, the maximum penalty is two years imprisonment and $10,000 fine.

COURT PART OF LEAGUE SHOWN BY DISCUSSION

Powers Chew Over U. S. Reservations

(Special to The Daily Worker)

GENEVA, Sept. 7.—The fifth reservation, proposed by the United States as a condition to its entry to the world court, proved a difficult pill to swallow for the representatives of 37 powers, signatory to the world court, in conference here to pass upon the American reservations.

Wants Border, Not Border.

Representatives of France, Belgium and Italy all attacked this reservation, declaring that the United States is seeking a special and privileged position. "Does America want all of the privileges of a member of the council of the league without having any of the burdens of a member?" queried Sir Cecil Hurst, British delegate.

The Belgian delegation suggested that the world court be asked to decide whether unanimity or a majority is required to accept the United States reservations.

British Want Obscurity.

Sir Cecil Hurst suggested that it would be better not to ask the court for an opinion on this matter now, but let the question remain obscure for the time being, at the same time giving the United States assurances that it would have all the privileges before the world court that would be given to a member of the league council, no more and no less.

"Then we can see what the United States really wants," said Sir Cecil. "The fifth reservation is the most difficult of many very serious difficulties, but why not let the United States come in on a basis of equality and leave the details to the future?"

All Depends on What it Means.

"There is a great divergence between the wording of the fifth reservation and what Senator Walsh says it means," said the Czecho-Slovakian delegate. "If Senator Walsh is right, then the solution might be easier."

M. Fromageot, French delegate, objected to the proposal of Sir Cecil that details be left to the future.

"I think it is never wise to leave anything obscure," he said.

Oh, Certainly Not!

"The United States has not seen fit to join the league, yet the league is a very potent machine and certainly the United States wants to hinder the proper functioning of this machine," responded Sir Cecil.

The discussions were replete with references to the league and continual comparisons were made between the United States' position and that of a member of the council of the league, which proves that the two institutions are closely linked.

$122,000,000 Profits Made by Big Railways During Month of July

For the month of July the first 78 railway systems of the "Class One" lines report a total net profit of $104,850,000, compared with $85,681,000 for the corresponding month last year, an increase of $19,909,000. In June these same roads had a net profit of $96,684,000.

On the basis of the 78 so far reported, all the Class One roads are estimated to have received approximately $122,000,000 net profit in July, compared with $99,462,735 last year in July, and $107,386,654 for June this year.

DAILY WORKER GREETS NEW YORK CONFERENCE TO DESTROY FASCISTI

The DAILY WORKER has addressed a letter conveying good wishes and fraternal greetings to the conference of the Anti-Fascist Alliance of North America. It is as follows:

Chicago, Ill., Sept. 3, 1926.
Pietro Allegro, Secretary,
Anti-Fascisti Alliance of North America,
New York City.

Dear Comrade:—Our DAILY WORKER sends fraternal greetings to the conference in New York of the Anti-Fascist Alliance of North America.

It is hoped that your gathering will strengthen the struggle of the American working class against the fascist oppression of the workers, not only under the Mussolini tyranny in Italy and in other European countries where the workers are now suffering under the heel of the fascist outlaws, but also here in the United States of America.

May this conference result in the enlisting of the broad masses of the working class, native as well as foreign-born, into this movement against fascism.

Down with fascism!
Long live the Anti-Fascist Alliance of North America!
Fraternally yours,
THE DAILY WORKER.

Reparation Payments Endanger Production in the Other Nations

BERLIN, Sept. 7.—Carl Friedrich von Siemans, chairman of the German railways administrative board, in commenting on the report of Reparations Commissioner Gilbert, remarks as follows:

"In the Dawes agreement Germany's contention was admitted that she can meet the payments, not in gold, but only in kind; this, in turn, being dependent on the readiness of other nations to buy German goods.

"The extent to which Germany will be able to transfer the heavy demands in the coming years to other countries, depends on the world's economic development and the readiness of other countries to purchase German goods."

It is noted that of America's share of the reparations so far paid, 33,000,000 marks was paid in goods.

Spanish Deport Worker from Colony They Want

(Special to The Daily Worker)

TANGIER, Sept. 7.—The Spanish representative here nearly precipitated a general strike by arresting and ordering deported to Spain a member of the Spanish Workers' Union. The union met at midnight and called out all workers in the cafes. A procession marched to the Kursaal and only the trickery of the representative, who held the crowd in conversation while the man was shipped aboard a warship, was the deportation accomplished.

Warships of various powers are flocking into the port here. There is friction between the French and the Italian-Spanish combination. The Italian consul has made a formal protest against articles in the French paper, Depeche Mercosino, which attacks Mussolini's scheme to support the Spanish annexation of Tangier.

RAILWAY UNIONS PLEDGE BRITISH MINERS' SUPPORT

Ben Tillett Declares Wall Street Involved

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 7.—Ben Tillett of the British miners' relief delegation announced on the eve of the delegation's departure for England that 21 standard railway unions in the United States had pledged to the strikers in the British coal fields their full financial support.

The American unions made the decision, which Tillett said means millions of dollars for the British miners, at a recent conference in this city.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers has issued thru its grand officers a strong appeal to the membership and to local unions to help the British strike, said Tillett.

The British delegate stated in his address that Wall Street's bankers are getting a firmer and firmer grip on the British government and are backing the conservatives in their attempt to smash the unions. He said that a national election at this time would put the Labor Party in power.

No Cancellation, Says President's Friend; Treasury Gets Witty

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—Both from Coolidge's summer fishing grounds in New York and the officials of the treasury, come cold and clammy comments on the proposal of Newton D. Baker, wartime war in Wilson's cabinet, that the war debts be cancelled.

Coolidge, thru his usual "friends" says that loans made in good faith should be repaid, not altogether an original observation, but adds that if the government has any money to give away, it ought to be given to road workers, not to foreigners.

Treasury officials sarcastically suggest that the only way cancellation can come about is for the holders of liberty bonds to donate them to the foreign governments, the they are held against the United States government. This government, says the treasury, is merely the trustee for the bondholders, and apparently has no other responsibility toward the bondholders but to act as a collection agency. The bondholders themselves must do the cancellation, according to this peculiar idea.

They Do Sell Oil Stock, Why Not Shares in God

NEW YORK, Sept 7.—If you survive capitalism until after Christmas you will see on all of the bulletin boards and car cards a real modern up-to-date selling campaign, the commodity offered the public being a rather elusive and evanescent stuff call "salvation."

The international Advertising Association, composed of men with fertile brains, who make a living selling people what they don't want, can't use, and have a hard time paying for, is setting its members a stunt by guaranteeing that they will sell religion for three months beginning Dec. 25. One hundred preachers will assist in writing the slogans. Rev. Dr. Chas. Stelzle has been appointed director of the work. He says he will deal not only with heaven and hell but also "the attitude of the church toward present day problems."

AMERICA GETS WHACK AT LOOT FROM GERMANY

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—The American government has received $66,000,777.68 as its share of German reparations under the Dawes plan, it has been announced by Acting Secretary of the Treasury Winston. Payments were made in two instalments, the last being received Tuesday.

POLISH CONSUL RECEIVES CALL FROM WORKERS

Lodge Protest Against Polish Terror

A delegation consisting of Wm. H. Holly, an attorney of the Chicago Liberal Club; Sam Cohen of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, and George Meurer and B. K. Gebert of the local branch of International Labor Defense, visited the Chicago consul of the Polish republic to demand, in the name of their organizations, amnesty for the many political prisoners in Poland.

Admit Many Prisoners.

In conversation with the delegation the counsel, Mr. Kurnikowski, admitted there were many political prisoners in Polish jails, saying, however, that this was done because they were "a danger to the state."

The chairman of the delegation, George Maurer of the I. L. D., invited Mr. Kurnikowski to speak at a mass meeting at Ashland Auditorium on Labor Day to explain the status of political persecution in Poland. But the consul excused himself by saying he would be hastily occupied that day.

Shoot Down Workers.

B. K. Gebert pointed out to the consul the terrible conditions under which class-war prisoners are held in the jails of Poland and that workers were on more than one occasion shot down in the streets.

The consul's only explanation for this was that "economic conditions are very bad."

Mr. Kurnikowski promised the delegation that a resolution of protest they gave him would be handed to the Polish ambassador for forwarding to the Polish government.

U. S. Cruiser Added Hospital Service

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 7.—Threatening immediate withdrawal of Nicaragua from the League of Nations if the present revolution against Chamorro succeeds, the revolutionary party here sent a cable yesterday to the League of Nations and warned against supporting the tyrant of Nicaragua in his protest against alleged Mexican aid to the rebels.

U. S. Helps Chamorro.

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, Sept. 7.—The heaviest fighting of the rebellion has taken place at Coseguina on the west coast. The government forces claim a victory. Eight were shot, hundred killed and many wounded.

On request of President Chamorro the American gunboat Tulsa, stationed at Corinto, sailed for the scene of action to take care of the wounded.

Mussolini Monkeying with Balkan Politics May Ally to Roumani

ROME, Sept. 7.—Premier Averescu of Roumania is in conference with Premier Mussolini this week over the proposed treaty between the two countries guaranteeing the frontiers of Roumania.

Roumania emerged from the war with military control of more than twice as much territory as she had when she entered it. Annexations of Bessarabia, Hungarian and Russian lands were made. There is great unrest over all these conquered districts because the Roumanian land system is a relic of feudalism and probably the worst in Europe.

Bessarabia, the portion of old Russia now ruled by Roumania, is particularly mistreated, as the peasants there for the freedom they gave across the border and are continually being dragooned by the large army stationed among them.

Italy supports Roumania against Jugo-Slavia and may bargain with her to break the Balkan alliance. On the other hand, some observers expect Italy to guarantee the frontiers of Roumania in such a way she may decide that she is not able to outside of them.

Censorship Hides the Fate of Hankow; Army of Canton Presses on

SHANGHAI, Sept. 7.—As a desperate measure to keep the victorious Cantonese army from capturing Hankow, famous river port of China, somewhat Wu Pei-Fu, northern war lord, is reported today to have opened the dykes protecting the city from the Yangtze river. Only meager advices regarding the situation are reaching Shanghai because of censorship imposed by Wu.

It is claimed from Canton that the Cantonese army has already captured Yochow, on the Yangtze, and is now holding his position, he would be glad to tell the news. That he is silent and notes censorship indicates he is losing.

Trade Unionist Writes About "A Matteotti Murder in Cuba"

ARTICLE III.

(By a Cuban Trade Unionist)

Yestarday we told of the assassination of Alfredo Lopez, secretary of the Havana Federation of Labor, at the hands of the Machado government, whose fascist regime is waging in a campaign of white terror against the labor movement of that island "republic" which has come under the despotic control of the National City Bank and the Washington government, represented by General Crowder of the U. S. army. The present article tells of the growth of fascist white terror in Cuba.

Fascism in Cuba began with the regime of General Machado, who took office on the 20th of May, 1925.

During his electoral campaign in 1924, Machado promised the Cuban people that if he got elected he would do away with all fraud and would kick out all the old crooks and corrupt politicians who were robbing the people for many years (this is the same old story of all new aspirants) and that he would construct good highways, railroads, schools, etc., and that he would give the people heaven on this earth. The people were tired of the old politicians and hoped in the promises of the new adventurer, and so elected Machado in the November elections.

Machado Pledged to Wall Street.

After Machado was elected and before he took possession of the presidency, Machado was called before the Wall Street magnates to be examined. The Wall Street magnates questioned Machado on several matters pertaining to Wall Street interests in Cuba—such as what action he would take in regard to certain contracts, loans and strikes in Cuba. To this Machado's answer was—"No strike will last over 24 hours in Cuba, because I will break them all." This is taken from Machado's speech as quoted by the New York press. In view of the satisfactory examination, the Wall Street magnates passed him and placed Machado in power. Machado followed Machado to become president of Cuba. He took office on the 20th of May, 1925.

Three months after the 20th of May, Machado and his co-partner of the dictatorship, Zayas Barzan, started their fascist work which Machado had promised to Wall Street.

The fascists of Cuba not only kidnap radicals and labor men, but they shoot and kill their political opponents.

The First Victim.

The first victim of Cuban fascism was Senor Armando Andres, Armando Andrew, a commander of the Army of the Independence of the Republic, who fought against the Spanish tyranny, an ex-captain of the Havana customhouse, and ex-representative to the congress, a political opponent of Machado, and the editor and founder of the daily paper, "El Dia," was shot at the front door of his house on or about the 14th of July, 1925.

Twenty-seven bullets perforated the body of Armando Andres. Right across the street from the house of Armando Andrews, was an empty house. This house had been hired by the government so that it could be the assassins in it. It was from this house that all the shots came. The assassins had an automobile ready to run—which they did, with the protection of their co-partners, the police.

The First Repression.

The first repression of Cuban fascism began in August, 1925, and culminated with the destruction of the Factory Union—the most radical union of Havana. It had shop control in all the refreshment and cafe factories of Havana and in some match and soap manufacturing plants, as well.

This repression began when there was a strike in some of these plants where the union had shop control. At that time, Senor Blanco Herrera, president of the New Ice Plant, Tropical, and Polaitas Beer, and Senor Cotarrillo, superintendent of the International Beer company, gave a few thousand dollars to the fascist government for the destruction of the union. Zayas Barzan, the secretary of the interior, issued an order for the closing of the Factory Union's local and declared that the union was illegal. He issued also an order for the arrest of 52 of its members (all present and past leaders) and warrants for 190 deportations of foreign-born members of the organization.

Troops and Police Destroy Union.

President Machado appointed a military supervisor over each plant and the policemen threw a few bombs in different places of the city to intimidate the workers and to stop the public opinion. After a short struggle, by the union against the magnates and the bomb throwers of the fascist government, the strike was lost and the union was destroyed.

The ordar for the 52 arrests was not accomplished because some of the wanted ones went to Mexico and some others were hidden in some parts of the republic. Neither were all of the 190 deportations carried out, because most of them fled and only 40 were deported. The rest of the deportations are still pending.

The 12 members arrested, together with Julio Antonio Mella and Alfredo Lopez, were charged with the violation of the explosives law. The two latter ones—Mella and Lopez, as I have already said above, were not members of the union but they got arrested and were framed just the same as the rest of the prisoners.

The Next Victim.

The next victim of Cuban fascism was Enrique Varona. Enrique Varona has been very active in the labor movement. He helped to organize the railroad workers' union of the North of Cuba Railroad, of which he became the president later on. In the first part of April, 1925, a strike was called on this railroad (the North of Cuba R. R.) and Varona was railroaded to Camguey county jail.

Imaginary charges were placed against Varona and six months later Varona was tried on these charges and acquitted by the court of Camaguey. Varona returned to his home town, Moron, to live in his proletarian but with his dear wife and his beloved children, but he lived there only three days. On the third night after his release from jail—at ten o'clock, right in front of his wife and children, with whom he was going to the theater—Varona was shot to death on the streets of Moron, across the street from the Soldiers' Barracks. The assassain fled this time, too, with the support of the co-partners of the crime—the policemen and soldiers.

The Next Repression.

The next repression of Cuban fascism was the destruction of the railroad brotherhoods of Camaguey, Santa Clara and Santiago de Cuba. This organization was a branch of several locals of the general railroad brotherhoods of Cuba, and embraced all the lines that the Cuba Railroads company owned from Stena Clara to Santiago.

During the first part of 1926, the Cuban Railroad company—an American outfit—broke its agreement with the employes and started an open shop drive which the company succeeded in, thru the aid of the fascist government. On April 16, the railroad workers called a strike on all the lines, stations and shops of the Cuban Railroad company to force the American magnates to comply with their contracts.

Soon the fascist government of Cuba with all its forces of destruction, went to the front to protect the American interests. The honorable President General Gerardo Machado, Morales, and the Honorable Secretary of interior Rogerio Zaya Barzan, started their fascist atrocities against the Cuban workers in order to save the interests of the no less honorable American magnates, who own hundreds of miles of Cuban railroads, and sankvs thousands of Cuban workers.

Labor Under Imperialism.

But these fascist atrocities did not surprise the Cuban workers any longer, because we know the relationship of the fascist government of Cuba with the American magnates. Their relationship is undoubtedly that of master and servant. The honorable Mussolinis of Cuba had put into practice their humble sentiment of love and respect for all the great and good American magnates who allow thousands of Cuban workers to work for them, providing they do not belong to a union and keep their mouths shut about the daily occurrences as the recent open ship drive.

A few days after the strike call, the honorable fascists of Cuba appointed—as they always do—military supervisors over all the cities, stations and shops of the Cuban Railroad. Two hendred men were railroaded to jails and warrants for the arrest of hundreds of others have been issued by the honorable secretary of the interior. The president of the Brotherhood of Camaguey, and the whole executive committee, were thrown into the rotten and lousy jails. Their friends have been intimidated and even their legal attorney, Dr. Gonsalos del Cristo, was arrested a couple of times.

Engineers, conductors, and firemen were taken from their beds at night and placed on the engines, and were made to work by the force and violence of armed soldiers. After a short, hard struggle the strike was broken by the strikebreaking fascist government of Cuba. The halls of the brotherhood were closed, the union was destroyed, but the interests of the Cuban Railroad company has been saved by the fascist government of been clubbed in this strike by the fascist government of Cuba.

Besides the many workers who have worked for many years. Thomas Grant, due to his many years of residence in Cuba, became familiar with the Spanish language and the railroad workers appreciated him very much, as I made him their leader.

The Murder of Thomas Grant.

As the fascist government always selecting the leaders to be their victims, they selected Thomas Grant, too. And so the American citizen, Thomas Grant, when he was coming off the train in Ciego-de Avila, a small country town, on the 15th of July, 1926, was shot to death and fell like a log in the station platform.

Were Thomas Grant an American citizen of the exploiting class, the Washington government soon would raise hell about it, and no doubt the Washington government would send a few notes to the fascist government of Cuba, and even probably collect at the damnity from the fascist government. But because of the fact that Thomas Grant was an American citizen of the working class, the Washington government will remain indifferent and silent.

The Mussolini of the Antilles. The dictatorship of Machado is worse than the dictatorship of Mussolini in Italy or of Primo de Rivera in Spain. Its crimes are not far short of those committed by other dictators across the Atlantic Ocean. That strikebreaking agencies are as well organized as those of Mussolini of Italy, Primo de Rivera in Spain, and William J. Burns in the United States.

The atrocities of Cuban fascism are too many to be described here and I need a book to write them in, but I may do later when I leave this country.

Russians over the frontier of the Soviet Union. This forgery was carried out on the order of the Bulgarian government. The declaration of Chitcherin that the Soviet Union would no compelled to take action against persons arriving in Russia without permission and especially against the ship's officers responsible for this traffic he was issued by the forgers as a threat of the Soviet Union to take reprisals "in particular against ex-officers."

Twisted Stories.

The same forgers, in reporting upon events at the Polish-Lithuanian frontier, put instead of Poland the Soviet Union. That is to say, they did not report that Poland was mobilising against Lithuania, but that the Soviet Union was sending troops to the Polish frontier.

The latest inventions concerning alleged insurrections in the Soviet Union, arrest of persons guilty of attempts upon Soviet leaders, etc., have as their object the covering up of the preparations for an attack on Lithuania. The worth of these inventions may be judged by the fact that even Milinkov has issued a warning against slanders issued from Riga and Stockholm.

OPEN SHOPPERS WARN OF UNION DRIVE RESULTS

Fear Auto Industry May Be Organized

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—Warning has been issued to its members by the Employers' Association of Denver against the campaign begun by the machinists, metal workers, carpenters, upholsterers, and teamsters and chauffeurs' international unions to organise the men in the automobile and garage industry. One of these circulars, issued by the Denver antiunion group of employers, has reached the headquarters of the international Association of Machinists.

"Up to this time," says the circular, "they have made no material headway in organising mechanics in Denver, at least. But in eastern cities they have met with better success and the automobile industry faces the necessity of so organizing its forces that it will be prepared for whatever may come.

"The organizing of taxicab, motor bus drivers and truck drivers is part of the campaign and is backed by the machinists. Next comes the organization of auto plants, including three international organizations—the upholsterers, and sheet metal workers—to secure the membership of body trimmers, wood working mechanics and sheet metal workers.

"And last, but not least, the Automobile, Aircraft and Vehicle Workers of America are gaining membership thru an intensive drive. This union is dominated largely by the Communist element. So it needs no stretch of imagination to see what the consequences would be, should organized labor establish the closed shop in the automobile industry. . . . Organized labor must not get control of this industry, for it will mean another transportation strike as of 1922, with the automobile transportation thrown in."

We will send sample copies of The DAILY WORKER to your friends—send us name and address.

POVERTY DRIVES MOTHER AND FOUR YOUNG TO DEATH

Husband Can't Support Family on Wages

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 7—Crushed by poverty and hunger and with eviction from their modest home staring them in the face, Mrs. Edna Fuller, 35, gave up the struggle here today when she huddled her five children ranging from 3 to 11 years into one room, locked the door and windows and turned on the gas.

Her Husband Returns.

When Otto Fuller, 40, the husband and father, a night watchman, returned to his home he found his wife and four of the children dead. Winfield, 11, was found barely alive. He was rushed to the University of California Hospital, where physicians are endeavoring to save his life. Fuller has offered his own blood for a transfusion operation that may be necessary.

Struggling With Poverty.

The family had been struggling with poverty for months. Fuller told friends and neighbors his wife became temporarily deranged when she resorted to her desperate act. A pitiful story of privation and misery was told by Fuller. He said his monthly salary was $65 a month.

"Thirty-five of this," he said, "went for rent and the remaining $30 the family for months had gotten along as best they could.

"It was agony for me to see them suffer so."

He was frantic with grief and was on the edge of collapse.

Charge Bankers' Trust Officers With Larceny

ATLANTA, Ga., Sept. 7.—Fifteen indictments, ten of which charge larceny after trust, three a misdemeanor and one another felony, were returned by the grand jury investigating the case of President W. D. Manley and other officers of the now defunct Bankers' Trust Co. of this city.

When the trust company collapsed it caused the closing of over 100 banks, most of them in Georgia, Florida and Alabama. Over $20,000,000 was lost in deposits, capital and surplus, of which $10,500,000 in Florida. More than 110,000 depositors had their entire life's savings swept away.

The defendants are under $16,000 apiece in bonds. An attempt has just been defeated to have Manley declared incompetent, and sent to a sanitarium, thus preventing prosecution.

Herrin, Ill., Mine Resumes Operations

HERRIN, Ill., Sept. 7.—For the first time since April 15, last, work has been resumed at mine No. 7 of the Consolidated Coal Company of St. Louis, which is regarded as the backbone of Herrin's coal industry. The mine employs about 700 men. The Bobby Dick mine announced it would start immediately.

WITH THE YOUNG WORKERS

FRENCH COMMUNIST YOUTH SUPPORT FIGHT AGAINST NEW BOSS OFFENSIVE

PARIS, France (By Mail) — It is only the Communist Party here which is carrying on a consistent and sincere fight against the government of Poincare, Briand and Herriot, just as it did against the not much less reactionary governments of the smashed left bloc.

The Young Communist League of course is helping the party carry on its fight against the new indirect taxes, the transferring of state monopolies to private exploitation, the continuence of the wars in Morocco and Syria, the wholesale dismissals of the government employes and reductions in their salaries, the prepared Dawes plan for France which also has the sanction of socialists like Paul Boncour and Philip Snowden, the new inflation of the franc, etc.

In this situation the most important slogans raised by the party are: The nationalization of the banks, the confiscation of the rich, the state monopoly of foreign trade with workers' control, the cancellation of the international debts, the dissolution of the chamber (parliament) which was elected against Poincare and is now supporting him, and for a workers' and farmers' government.

At the same time the Young Communist League also issued a stirring call to the young workers, peasants and soldiers to organize their defense against the offensive of the capitalists, calling especially on the boys of the army and navy to fight for their right to organize themselves and read the workers' press and telling them: "Don't shoot on the workers when they are on strike! Don't let yourself be used as strikebreakers! Fraternize with the toiling masses in their struggle against oppression! Fraternize with the peoples of Morocco and Syria."

POST OFFICE RETURNS WORKERS PARTY MAIL IT PRESERVED 2 YEARS

By just now returning to national headquarters in Chicago a letter sent August 7, Nineteen Hundred Twenty-four to Wm. Johnston, 1 North Square, Boston, Mass., the United States postoffice has somewhat further demonstrated its incapacity and inefficiency.

Both the address of the sender and that to which the letter was intended to travel are even now, after two years in the mails, plainly legible on the envelope, as is also the dated postmark. But before the government of Morgan and Rockefeller got around to deliver it, Johnston had moved.

The envelope contained material for the Foster-Gitlow presidential campaign in 1924.

Polish Child Describes Situation

By MANNY MANKIN,
Young Pioneer.

THE government of Pilsudski is trying to make the people of Poland believe that they want war. What Pilsudski really is plotting for is to get control of all the countries around Poland. He is also trying to destroy the mass membership of the Polish (Communist) Party, but the workers and peasants of Poland can see right thru his plans. The more things he does to destroy them, the more members they get into the party. The Workers (Communist) Party of Poland is regarded as illegal by the Pilsudski government and anyone found with any party literature in their possession, the penalty for this crime is from four to ten years at hard labor. There is practically no freedom of press in Poland. If any paper comes out it is either censored or is confiscated by the Pilsudski regime. All the schools are under Pilsudski, and they are taught whatever the dictator wants them to know.

THE CO-OPERATIVE MOVEMENT.

By JOHN HAMILTON.

CHAPTER IV.

The Rochdale Pioneers and Their System.

IT is of interest to note why revolutionary trade unionism and chartism collapsed. The early trade union movement failed mainly because economic conditions bred intense competition amongst the workers. Chartism mainly failed because it had no organized industrial strength of the workers to support it.

The seed of the pioneers eventually took root and bore fruit, for the Rochdale Pioneers' store in 1844 saw the beginnings of a movement destined to have a great effect on the working class, not only in Britain, but over the whole world. In some instances, indeed, the movement has developed with

Alexander Campbell and His Pioneer Efforts.

Alexander Campbell- claimed to be the first propounder, in 1822, of the theory that profits, since they represented a surplus charged to the consumers over the actual cost of the goods, should be distributed to the purchasers after the books had been periodically balanced. He had lectured in Rochdale, and was consulted by the pioneers when their famous Equitable Society was being formed.

Other societies preceding Rochdale by paying dividend on purchases; e.g., The Meltham Mills Society, near Huddersfield, established 1827, and the Lennoxtown Society, 1812. Hodgskin also explained this idea to the Rochdale weavers, made it the recognised system of profit distribution in Co-operative Societies, and the success of the system in Rochdale gave it new impetus and made possible the growth of the movement.

The Rochdale System.

The system adopted was "that the profits made by sales should be divided among all members who made purchases in proportion to the amount they spent." The initial capital was £1 apiece, subscribed, in weekly subscriptions of 2d., by the 28 trade unionists, chartists and Owenite socialists who formed the original members. Owen's teaching can be plainly noted in the aims of the society, for these included, besides the establishment of a store for the sale of food, "the building, purchasing, or erecting a number of houses, in which these members, desiring to assist each other in improving their domestic and social condition, may reside; the manufacture of articles, or purchase or rent of land, in order to employ members who were out of work or underpaid;" and further, "that as soon as practicable this society shall proceed to arrange the powers of production, distribution, education, and government; or, in other words to establish a self-supporting home colony of united interests, or assist other societies in establishing such colonies."

Many industrial districts followed the Rochdale example. The purchase in bulk and co-operative distribution of food and other essential commodities were plainly perceived by the workers to be an advantage. The development of the trading side especially attracted the attention of all, and the idea of self-supporting colonies faded from the vision of British co-operation.

Economic Reasons for Success.

The success of the trade union and co-operative movements, after 1850, was due mainly to the enormous economic development, which, aided by improved means of transport, opened up the interiors of the vast continental markets. Hence increased demand for labor-power to produce commodities, and decreased competition amongst workers, allowing them to organise more effectively. Dives could afford a few more crumbs for Lazarus!

The repeal of the corn laws in 1846 changed food, while the factory lords signalised their political triumph by a 10 per cent all round reduction in wages. As the more fare-seeing of the capitalists had previously pointed out, the landlords were not the only enemies of the workers. One of the most important of the factory acts was passed in 1844, and this was followed by the ten hours' act in 1847. Legal protection was given to the friendly societies, and to a small extent co-operative societies, in 1846. All this tended to awaken the more skilled craftsmen of a better standard of life. Real wages mounted steadily and surely upwards, not to decline until the formidable rivalry of Germany and America developed in the eighties. The result was the growth of reformism, and organizations based on that tactic—co-operation and trade unionism.

"British labor entered upon a long period of comparative material comfort and extreme intellectual stagnation."

CAMPAIGN IS BEGUN TO INCREASE BALTIMORE DAILY WORKER READERS

BALTIMORE, Md., Sept. 7.—The Workers' (Communist) Party of Baltimore is in the midst of a campaign to increase the circulation of The DAILY WORKER in the Maryland district. The following lottor has been sent to members and sympathisers of the party urging them to support the campaign:

Dear Comrades: Do you know what a strong DAILY WORKER means to the existence of our party? It means that we will be better able to get new members in the party, it means that we will get into our party people who will be attached to our party, thru o press, which they will recognise as their press. Are you the party member who does not care if the party grows or not or are you the one who wants to see the party grow and grow. You must be the latter one or you would not be a member of the party.

Lenin said in relation to the Russian press, "a paper is what we need above all" and we can say the same thing in relation to the English press. Lenin said this in Russia and we say it in America.

Local Campaign.

In order to give you a chance to do the real work this time we are giving out the call for a local campaign for The DAILY WORKER.

There is going to be held a big affair for the benefit of The DAILY WORKER and there is also going to be organized a DAILY WORKER Builders' Club and only those who get a certain amount of subs will be able to become a member of this club which will be an honorable position in the city of Baltimore. Are you going to be a member of the club?

Banquet.

In order to become a member of the club, and in order to be let into the banquet, free of charge, you need only get $10 worth of subs to The DAILY WORKER. Workers Monthly, Young Worker, Improcor or any others of the English press. That is, you must get $10 worth of subs for any of these papers or a donation of $10 for them. Well known national speakers will be at the banquet, and there will also be a fine program.

Get to work—the campaign ends on Sunday, Oct. 17. Subs must be given to the city literature agent (DAILY WORKER) in order to count; and send them in, let's keep The DAILY WORKER agent busy sending in the subs.

EXPOSE LIE FACTORIES WHICH TURN OUT ANTI-SOVIET FAIRY TALES, NAME THEIR MANAGERS

MOSCOW, Aug. 10 (By Mail).—The campaign of lies carried on by the international bourgeois and social democratic press against the Soviet Union is directed against the Soviet Embassy in Berlin, Stockholm and Prague where specially invented communications concerning the Soviet Union are fabricated. For instance, the head of the bureau in Riga is one Karakhcheyev, publisher of the magazine, "Mir," who provides foreign correspondents with information about the Soviet Union.

The foreign correspondent of the Times, Urch, fabricates his "special telegrams from Russia" in Karakhchevsvy's bureau. Amongst the employes of the bureau in Prague there is a certain Block who is a Bessarabian amigrant and leader of the Russian section of the semi-official Prager Presse, and a certain Dolgovski, correspondent of the Europapress agency, and a certain Megerovski, an employe of the official Czecho-Slovakian telegraph agency.

Stockholm Lia Bureau.

The head of the bureau in Scandinavia is a member of the French mission, a Russian white guardist, Shereshevski, alias Sergei Chessin, alias Sergae de Chessin. One of his assistants is a certain Zion, who is permanently in London and who publishes in the Stockholm Tidningen "correspondence from Moscow."

This lie factory forged the well-known "telegramme" purporting to be from Chicherin to Krassin upon the illegal transportation of repatriated

SOUTH A HEAVEN FOR EMPLOYERS; LOW WAGES RULE

Macon Boasts of $9.00 Wage for 60 Hours

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MACON, Ga., Sept. 7.—Macon is one of the cities of the "New South"—not that it is young, but what the boosters term "forward looking" in the industrialization that is making the agrarian South of old hum with factories, mills and large industry—with labor working at the lowest possible level of wages.

$9 to $18 Wage For 60 Hours.

The city council has voted 20 to 1 to exempt new industries from taxation for five years. In addition attractive publicity is put out extolling the benefits to be derived from the low wages paid to labor. There are 17,000 wage earners in Macon, and they get from 15 cents to 20 cents an hour, with the working week being sixty hours, or from $6 to $18 a week.

Lincoln McConnell, manager of the Macon chamber of commerce says that the South is the paradise of factory exploitation. He states that while only 45 per cent of the total capital employed in the cotton goods industry, exclusive of small goods and laces, is in the South, the South produces 82 per cent of the total value of the country's output and shows 118 per cent efficiency against the 87 per cent of the North.

Low Average Wage in South.

The average annual wage in North Carolina is $671; in South Carolina, 1656; in Alabama, 1597; and in Georgia $590. The percentage of labor cost in the finished product runs 17 per cent in North Carolina; 16.6 per cent in South Carolina; 14 per cent in Alabama, and 12.3 per cent in Georgia.

Smelt Labor Turnevar.

An instance of how southern capitalists count on a small labor turnover in spite of the miserably low wages, is shown in the citation made by McConnell of a Macon men who opened a furniture factory few years ago. He pays his men workers 20 cents an hour. During the four years he has employed a force of 80 men, and his labor turnover in the four years has been only six men.

Within the last year, there have been opened eight new industrial concerns, a cement plant, a box factory and a brick plant have been started with outside capital entirely.

HAT FRAME MAKERS TAKE STRIDE TOWARDS NEW LOCAL IN CHICAGO

Steps were taken towards the reorganization of the hat frame makers' union at a meeting held in Douglas Park Auditorium. The crowd was quite enthusiastic, and practically all of those present who had not already lined up, did so on this occasion.

The meeting heard P. Ginsberg, Chicago representative of the General Board read a copy of the agreement with the employers made in New York, where the union is well established. After reciting conditions, wages and hours readily broken than any prevailing for similar work in Chicago, he asked them why they could not do as well here as was done in New York. He pointed out also how the organized frame makers in Chicago five years ago were able to demand and get the forty-four hour week, whereas now they have to work 48½ hours.

Start With Treasury.

Executive board member Leshitsky of Local 47, the men's local in Chicago of the Cloth Hat, Cap and Millinery Workers' Union informed the new members that the treasury of the old frame makers' local here is intact and will be turned over to the new local as soon as it is ready for action. He urged women as well as men to join, as they need and will receive from the union the same protection.

In addition to these two speakers, Louis Klein, the organizer of Local 47 and Anna David, the organizer and secretary of the Millinery Workers' local in Chicago also spoke. Brother Klein assured the frame makers of all possible aid from Local 47.

Solidarity Needed.

Secretary David explained her presence at the meeting, pointing to the fact that altho in another trade, she was in the same industry, and that as the bosses had a solid organization in the industry, the workers should have one also. Furthermore, a worker has always something in common with another worker, there are two main classes, workers and employers. She outlined the three main tasks of the workers at this meeting. The first is to all join the union. The second is to become, every one of them, organizers for the union, by bringing into it their fellow workers on the job. The third is to keep the organization intact once it is started.

Hat frame makers of all sorts, both wire frame makers and linckram frame makers, and the blockers who work on hats are to come into the new local now being organized. Another meeting will be held Tuesday, Sept. 7, in the hall of the sixth floor, 166 West Washington St.

MAY STRIKE BIRMINGHAM STREET CARS

Bosses Reject Outside Arbitration Plan

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 7. — A strike is brewing on the streetcar lines here, after a rejection by the company of the wage demands of the union for "living wages" of 87½ cents an hour, otherwise known as the "Memphis award." The company refuses to pay more than 62 cents. The present "top wage" is 50 cents.

The company also rejects arbitration, J. S. Pevear, operating vice-president of the electric company, saying:

No Outsider Wanted.

"No one impartial to both sides can be found to make the third member of the arbitration board, and the company will not place its safety in the hands of an outsider who knows nothing of its financial status."

Pevear insists that the company is "too poor" to pay more without, as usual, "an increase in fares." So he comes forward in defense of the "public." He adds that "conditions are different in Memphis."

Difference Favors Birmingham.

The union agrees that Memphis conditions are different, but points out that the difference lies in the fact that the Birmingham company is better off, transporting more people per car mile than in Memphis. Therefore it ought to be able to pay at least as much as Memphis, which is all the union asks.

The offer of the company to give 52 cents as a top rate was turned down unanimously by both motormen and conductors, the vote being 850 to nothing.

SUBWAY STRIKE TO WIN A REAL LABOR UNION

I. R. T. Men to Join The Amalgamated

By EDWARD P. LAVIN

Leader of the Subway Workers' Strike Against the Company Union of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company of New York.

The leaders of the Consolidated Railway Workers of Greater New York, the I. R. T. workers who went on strike some weeks ago, have been in constant conference with James H. Coleman and P. H. Shee, organizers for the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes of America.

The men on the I. R. T. have been organized to an extent and the leaders are now confident that within a few days they will be affiliated with the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes of America, an organization affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

The leaders consider this is splendid news for the workers, coming so near Labor Day, the day set aside for the laboring classes.

APPEAL FOR U. S. MEDIATION WITH ERIE MARINE CO.

Union Heads Charge an Attempt to Bribe

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Sept. 7.—Striking freight handlers of the New York Marina Co. are appealing to the federal railroad mediation board for a hearing. The 500 strikers, organized by Union Representative Henry J. Chandler into the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employes, demand an increase in wages from 50 to 75 cents an hour, an eight-hour day, and recognition of the union.

Pickets remain near the piers where they left Erie Railroad freight cars loaded with fruit. Thomas Reilly, a strike leader, challenges Mason Grimos, president of the New York Marine Co., to cause his arrest for charges Reilly makes that two company men offered him money to leave town or get the strikers back to work.

Reilly says that he and Secretary Burns of the new local union were first offered $400, but had the sum increased to $3,500 each. Calls were traced on these offers to the offices or homes of Erie Railway officials and the contracting company, the workers assert at strike meetings.

Big Six Wants Higher Scale; Lynch Opposes a Strike; Offers Nothing

NEW YORK, Sept. 7.—Big Six Typographical Union of New York has rejected the compromise offer by publishers on the workers' wage demands. The union seeks $6 a week more pay, six and one-half-hour days except for the "short trick"—midnight shift—of six hours.

Negotiations have been going on for three months. The agreement expired June 30. International President James M. Lynch, who has handled negotiations for the last two weeks, says that the union will not strike, but he does not indicate what the next step will be.

Chicago Politician's Home Greeted by Bomb

The home of Morris Eller, republican politician, boss of the 20th ward and a trustee of the Chicago sanitary district, was wrecked by a bomb early Friday morning. Altho no one was injured, the home was partially wrecked. The bomb had been placed near the side door and threw the Eller family out of bed. No reason has been found for the attempt, altho it is supposed that Eller's connection with the at times violent politics of Cook county offers a fairly adequate clew.

NEGRO PORTERS' UNION TELLS OF YEAR'S ACTIONS

Message of Unionism Carried to Many

By ESTHER LOWELL,
Federated Press.

NEW YORK, Sept. 7.—Its first anniversary is being celebrated by the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters. The union has in its first year of existence won over half the 12,000 maids and porters employed by the Pullman Co., challenged successfully the employe representation plan, or company union.

What Has Been Done.

General Organizer A. Philip Randolph sums up the year's achievements of the brotherhood:

1. Forced the company to call a wage conference in February under company union and great porters and maids a per cent wage increases, raising pay from $67.50 to $72.90 per month.

2. Forced company to revise time sheet.

3. Forced local officials to be more attentive to porters and maids.

Message of Unionism.

4. Carried message of labor unionism to over a million and a half black and white workers from Aug. 25, 1925, to Aug. 25, 1926. Over 800 meetings held, with 100 to 1,500 or more at each. Thousands of Negro workers who had never heard about organized labor before addressed. Over 40,000 heard the general organizer speak on the cause of black labor at the opening of the Sesqui-Centennial in Philadelphia.

5. Central labor bodies told of porters' case and the fact of Negro workers generally.

6. Secured entrance to many Negro churches and endorsement of various Negro organizations, clubs, etc.

Put Out Literature.

7. Distributed over three and a half million pieces of literature.

8. Brought the porters' plight to the attention of university and college groups and to conventions of many organizations.

9. Over 75,000 miles covered by organizers.

10. Brought persons of importance to speak to porters' meetings for education of the workers. Many trade union officials and officers of railway brotherhoods have been among the speakers.

Women's Auxiliaries.

11. Established women's auxiliaries in New York, Chicago, Washington, Boston, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Oakland, Los Angeles, Denver, Omaha, Salt Lake City.

A great mass meeting, at which all friends of the porters were invited to attand, was held in New York on the anniversary.

Chandelier Assemblers on Strike in New York Ask Council to Assist

NEW YORK, Sept. 7.—The workers in the 100 per cent strike of the chandelier fitters and assemblers belonging to Local 261 of the international Brotherhood of Electrical Workers are looking forward to the Building Trades Council here for support. They are also forming co ollience with Platers' and Polishers' Local No. 42 (A. F. of L.) for support in the strike. J. Mead, international representative of the I. B. E. W., is actively in charge of the strike and the negotiations.

The strike started August 25, and about 300 men are out. They have picket lines around the various shops.

The union demands a 40-hour week, $1.13 per hour for mechanics and $35 per week for helpers. At present the helpers receive $18 to $20, while mechanics get $28 to $32 while working from 48 to 52 hours per week.

Philadelphia Furriers Fight For Forty-Hour Week; N. Y. Gives Help

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 7.—Philadelphia fur workers are following the New York workers' lead by refusing to work Saturdays. The New York agreement has been accepted by the Philadelphia market, including the 40-hour week provision.

The workers will seek back pay for Saturdays worked since June 19, when the New York agreement was signed. The International Fur Workers and New York Joint Board Furriers are supporting the Philadelphia workers' stand and will help if a strike has to be called to enforce the pact.

Fifty-Four Per Cent of Reparations Paid in Goods by Germany

BERLIN, Sept. 7.—According to the report of Seymour Parker Gilbert, agent general of reparations, nearly 54 per cent of the second year's payments of Germany on reparations has been paid in deliveries of commodities.

The total payments amounted to about $290,360,000, and the delivery in kind (of goods) covered about $156,212,000. More than one-third of these deliveries were of coal, coke and lignite. Other products were of dyestuffs, drug products, chemical fertilizers, coal by-products, agricultural products, timber, cement, etc.

SOVIET UNION'S COMMISSION AT GREAT RAM SHOW

Breeders' Association Gives Them Banquet

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SALT LAKE CITY, Sept. 7. — A sheep buying commission representing the agricultural commissariat of the Soviet Union, and the Amtorg Trading corperation were principal guests here of the eleventh annual ram show and sale of the National Woolgrowers' Association.

Government and Amtorg

The members of the commission are Michael S. Perefarkovitsh, manager of the bureau of animal industry in the commissariat of agriculture, J. V. Slodkevitche, animal husbandman of the same department, Stephen S.Odinzow of the agricultural department of the Amtorg.

The commission stated that the need of buying sheep for the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics does not come, as many supose, from the scarcity of sheep animals there, but is due to the desire of the government to improve the breed. The wool of Russian sheep is rather coarse, and for this reason extensive purchase of Rambouillet rams are to be undertaken, as the wool of this type is fine and silky.

Commission Fated

The Salt Lake chamber of commerce gave a dinner on August 31 to the U.S.S.R. commission; the Rambouillet Association was the host on August 30, the opening day of the ram show, of this commission and several other distinguished foreign buyers.

The sale itself is the largest ever held. F. R. Marshall, secretary of the Woolgrowers' Association says, "There are more genuine top sheep here than we have ever seen at a ram sale before."

Concentrate Credits for Soviet Farmers

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R. (By Mail).—The economic conference of Soviet Russia, after examining the question of the distribution of the funds intended for the relief of poor peasants, as a part of the concentration of their economic struggles, has decided to adopt the principal of concentration of these credits in those regions where agriculture has been reconstructed (as compared with the pre-war level), and of applying these funds with the best possible effect. Concretely, these funds are to be distributed in productive credits to cooperative as well as non-co-operative farmers.

The credit funds are made up of special budget assignments, contributions from the profits of the Russian Agricultural Bank (Rosselhank) and other sources. The amounts loaned to individual farmers are not to be in excess of 200 roubles, and in exceptional cases 300 roubles. For collective farms the amounts of the loans are to be fixed by local agricultural boards in consultation with local agriculturel credit societies.

At the same time the economic conference established the conditions of the loans and the terms of repayment, the rate of interest and the responsibility for the loans.

WORKING CLASS MOTHERS DIE AS WAGES DECLINE; GHASTLY TOLL SHOWN BY GOVERNMENT'S REPORT

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—(FP)—Maternal death rates in the United States increase in proportion as the husband's earnings fall, says the report on the mortality rates of mothers, just issued by the Children's Bureau. The study was conducted by Dr. Robert Morss Woodbury, and it covers all available information as to why mothers die at the time of childbirth. It finds that these deaths among mothers at childbirth are almost wholly preventable.

Wages Fall and Mothers Die.

"As with infant mortality also," says the report, "poverty is found to be an important factor in maternal death rates, these increasing as the husband's earnings fall, probably because of lack of proper facilities and adequate care for the poor mother.

"Color and nationality are also important factors in maternal mortality. In the birth-registration area for 1921 the Negro maternal death rate was 67 per cent higher than the white rate. On the other hand, the rate for foreign-born white mothers was slightly lower than for native white mothers . . . The rate was lowest for mothers born in Russia, and next to lowest for mothers born in Italy. At the other extreme were the rates for mothers born in Ireland, Great Britain, Canada, Hungary and Germany."

Why Not Government Aid?

The substance of the bureau's recommendations is that all mothers be provided with "skilled supervision at fore and during childbirth." This implies freedom from the pressure of poverty. Negro mothers, and the mothers in white families living at the poverty line, cannot afford skilled help.

Urge Compensation for Farmers Up In France

PARIS (By Mail).—The question of the introduction of a law for the compensation of peasant farmers by landowners for improvements effected by them during the period of lease has been discussed in France many years. Such a law is opposed by the landlords, and insisted upon by the farmers. Some economists consider such a law subversive to private property, and they also urge the material difficulties attending with the introduction of such a measure.

However, the measure is practically feasible, since the actual compensation for improvements already exists in the price which a new tenant has to pay after the expiration of the lease, when he has to pay additionel rent to the owner for economic improvements effected by his predecessor upon the farm. In the absence of such a law of compensation the landlord may be tempted to change the tenant at the expiration of the lease, with detrimental effect to the property. Such cases have already taken place.

Strike of Peasants.

PARIS (By Mail).—Eight hundred peasants organised into a dairy syndicate in the town of Mass, who supply milk to the cheese factories, have gone on strike in view of the cutting of prices. The peasants of the adjacent agricultural commune have declared their solidarity with the strikers.

PRICE OF WHEAT TO BE LOWER IN 1927—FORECAST

Department Prepares Farmers for Shock

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7. — The world market situation for wheat next year will not be materially different from the present, with the result that American wheat will remain on a world market basis, the department of agriculture announced today.

The is little indication of any material expansion in acreage outside the United States and the carry over next July is not likely to be large. Barring unusually high yields, such as occurred in 1915 and 1923, over a large part of the wheat area of the world, foreign competition will probably be about on a par with the present year, the department's survey indicated.

Increase Exports.

If American farmers carry out their intentions to increase winter wheat 14.4 per cent, as indicated by reports up to Aug. 1, and abandonment and yields are average, a winter wheat crop areand 573,000,000 bushels will be produced, about 9 per cent less than harvested this year. With this average yield next year and an increase in acreage as large as that indicated there would be a surplus for export and additions to carry over of about 200,000,000 bushels. In 1924 exports amounted to 255,000,000 bushels, while last year, when there was a relatively short crop, exports totaled only 92,000,000 bushels.

Lower Prices.

"Farmers should not be misled by the relatively high prices received for the 1926 crop, when prices were on a domestic basis," the department warned today. "Under normal conditions they should expect, in 1927, prices more in line with world prices.

"The effect of the present year's larger supply upon prices is already evident in the relationship between prices in the markets in the United States and Liverpool."

The department's experts further said farmers in sections which normally have a large corn acreage should also keep in mind, in making a shift to wheat acreage, that the present unfavorable situation for corn is not likely to be repeated next year.

Coming Around to It

Signs are multiplying that a diplomatic accord may be reached between the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics and the United States in the near future.

That powerful financial and commercial interests in this country are openly and secretly urging recognition is no longer a doubtful matter. Such an important organ of big business as the New York Journal of Commerce is conducting a campaign for recognition and several emissaries with credentials from influential quarters in Washington have recently visited Moscow, ostensibly to gase in rapture at the weird architecture of the church of Saint Basil, but really to have a chat with Tchitcherin about the business of getting the two countries on official speaking terms.

Accordbg to news dispatches from Moscow, the Soviet Union is willing to discuss payment of the Kerensky debt, the most of that money was spent by the "orphan" Bahkmeteff, in his efforts to overthrow the Soviet government.

Diplomatic and commercial relations with the United States are necessary to the Soviet Union and American business men stand to make large profits from trade with the workers' republic.

The entire indebtedness of the Soviet Union to the United States, including claims of private concerns, is less than half a billion dollars. When the U. S. S. R. puts in a bill for damages caused by the invasion of Russia by American armed forces under the administration of Woodrow Wilson, the difference between the two bills may be worth considering. It should not be forgotten that this invasion was without congressional sanction, illegal even under the elastic rules of international usage and an attack on a country then in friendly relations with the United States.

Sooner or later the American government must recognize the Soviet Union. It is the most stable government in Europe. Even the most optimistic of the "emigres" have given up hope of overthrowing the rule of the workers and peasants. This is a bitter pill to swallow for international capitalism, but business is business. So the American capitalists will grasp the hand of the "bloody Bolshevik" even as the British capitalists did when the latter came to the conclusion such a policy was more profitable than financing counter-revolutions and paying spies to blow up bridges and wreck plants in Russia.

The state department has often declared that the chief obstacle in the way of an accord with the U. S. S. R. was a recognition by the latter of its indebtedness to the United States. This indebtedness is a mere bagatelle compared to what France owes the United States government, yet the American ambassador to Paris has not been recalled. The real obstacle to recognition never was a disinclination of the Soviet government to take a realistic view of the debt question, but the opposition of certain American interests that the administration dared not oppose.

It appears now that the forces favoring recognition are strong enough to force the administration to give serious consideration to their demands.

That such a development is considered probable in the near future is still another sign of the growing power and stability of the Soviet Union.

The Colonel is Clean!

The republican state campaign committee of Illinois will support Col. Frank L. Smith for the United States senatorship, despite his besmirching with the slush funds distributed by Samuel Insull, Ira Copley, Studebaker, public utility magnates and other interests who were benefited by Smith's benevolent action as chairman of the Illinois commerce commission.

This polluted candidate will be supported in the elections by the G. O. P. machine against the somewhat less polluted George E. Brennan, democrat. But Brennan is less polluted, not because his political morality is higher than Smith's, but for the simple reason that it was not necessary for Insull to expend as much money on Brennan's primary fight as he spent in putting Smith over. Insull turned two hundred thousand iron men loose in behalf of Smith and only fifteen thousand for Brennan. Both won and no matter which of the two is elected Insull will be the victor.

THE DAILY WORKER would be as strongly opposed to those two errand boys of capitalism as it is now if they never had received a penny in campaign contributions from the big utility men. All capitalist candidates serve the interests of capitalism as a whole. Against the true interests of the working class they are united. Sometimes the capitalists quarrel over spoils and they subsidize their favorite politicians to do their fighting.

Certain interests in Illinois politics prefer Frank L. Smith. Others prefer Brennan. Insull is big and wealthy enough to purchase both, so he can now sit back and let the voters amuse themselves.

The workers, still influenced by reactionary leadership, are participating in the election shell game presided over by the capitalists. One set of labor leaders support Frank L. Smith, tho covered with slush. Another group are behind Brennan. Whichever of the two wins the workers will lose.

Owing to the alliance between the reactionary labor leaders and the capitalist politicians the workers of Illinois will not fight a congressional campaign this year under the banner of a united labor ticket. The Workers (Communist) Party has urged a united front of all working-class organizations in the congressional elections, but it was a voice crying in the wilderness as far as the leaders of other groups are concerned. Therefore, the Workers (Communist) Party has entered the campaign under its own banner and nominated J. Louis Engdahl, editor of THE DAILY WORKER, as the standard bearer of the interests of the working class against the two puppets of Samuel Insull and capitalism, Brennan and Smith.

Valentino's estate was stripped to the bone when he died, bnt a few days of pitiless publicity sent hundreds of thousands of movie fans to see him again on the screen. # British Leaders Endanger the Coal Miners' Strike

The Anglo-Russian Committee for world trade union unity recently met in Paris. Because of the attitude of the British delegates, nothing was accomplished to aid the British miners, tho the Soviet delegates had proposed relief to the miners be the work of the conference. The following is the resolution of the plenum of the Central Council of the Soviet Labor Unions on the Conference, adopted after the report of Andrayev, chairman of the Soviet delegation:

AFTER hearing the report upon the conference of the Anglo-Russian committee in Paris and upon the work of the delegation of the Central Council of Soviet Labor Unions, the plenum of the Central Council of Soviet Labor Unions ratifies the actions of the delegation during the conference.

The plenum pointed ont that the British delegation to the Paris conference took up an attitude contrary to the interests of the broad masses of the British miners. The chief question is that of supporting the heroic struggle of the British miners. The striking miners, their wives and children, are suffering the greatest need and privations. All the forces of the bourgeoisie—the government, the mine owners, the police, strikebreakers, and espionage organizations—are directed against the miners.

THE hypocritical "friends" are attempting to cripple the will to struggle of the miners and to spread defeatism in their ranks in order to force them to surrender. The miners are in great need and it is the duty of every honest supporter of the worker's cause to regard the support of the miners as the chief task.

It is for this reason that the central council took the initiative in calling together the Anglo-Russian committee and proposed the question of support for the British miners as the one and only point on the agenda, a support which would oppose the insolent attacks of capitalism not only in words but also in deed.

THE Soviet Labor Unions have done everything within their power to this end. They considered it necessary to increase the amount of support, and to enlarge the campaign to include the whole international proletariat. "A friend in need is a friend indeed."

But altho the privations of the miners have become very great, and the attacks of the bourgeoisie have become particularly sharp, the

British delegation refused to discuss the question of supporting the miners.

The central council regards this attitude as wrong both in substance and in form.

FORMALLY, this attitude is wrong because the answering telegram of the general council of the British Trade Union Congress accepting the offer of a conference made no protest against the agenda proposed by the Soviet labor unions which contained only one point, the question of supporting the miners.

In substance this attitude of the British delegation is the continuation of that policy of capitulation and sabotage pursued by the leaders of the general council during the general strike which damaged the working class movement and above all the interests of the miners severely.

THE plenum of the central council wishes to place the fact on record that thru this attitude the British delegation must take the responsibility for any lack of sufficient support for the miners.

The plenum is of the opinion that the demand which the British delegates placed before the Soviet delegates calling for the withdrawal of the declaration of the central council of the Soviet labour unions in connection with the British general strike is more than unfounded.

The central council sees no reason to alter its analysis of the British events and the role played by the general council and its present leaders in it. Particularly as not only the history of the strike, but also the attitude of the British delegation at the Paris conference fully corroborates the basic contentions of this declaration.

The plenum wishes to place the fact on record that the refusal of the British delegation to discuss the question of support for the British miners and its covering of this refusal by the demand for the withdrawal of the declaration of the central council of Soviet labor unions is in fact a step towards the breaking up of the Anglo-Russian committee and an attempt to make the international campaign of assistance for the British miners impossible.

Altho the working masses of Great Britain and other countries are closing in more and more round the banner of unity, altho the possibilities of activity for the Anglo-Russian committee are becoming ever greater and altho the working masses are regarding the Anglo-Russian committee with ever more sympathy, nevertheless the leaders of the British trade unions have taken the responsibility for the first step towards breaking up the committee.

THE plenum declares that the responsibility for this step rests absolutely and completely on the shoulders of the British delegation in the Anglo-Russian committee.

The plenum is of the opinion that it is the duty of the Soviet labor unions despite the attitude of the British delegation to prosecute the idea of the unity of the trade union movement with all the means at its disposal. For the Soviet labor unions the Anglo-Russian committee is not a block of leaders, but the embodiment of the friendship and solidarity between the working masses of Great Britain and the Soviet Union.

THEREFORE the central council of the Soviet Labor unions in the conviction that the maintenance of the Anglo-Russian committee is necessary in the interests of the international proletariat, will continue to demand from the Anglo-Russian committee an active support of the workers against the capitalists, a support not in words but in deeds. This is the only honest, working class policy.

The plenum is of the opinion that it is the duty of the Anglo-Russian committee to use all the means of its power to support the miners. The plenum considers a refusal of this support to be tantamount to an indirect support of the capitalists and all class enemies of the proletariat.

THE plenum stresses the necessity for a complete freedom of mutual criticism inside the Anglo-Russian committee. The central council of Soviet labor unions as an organization of the victorious proletariat of the Soviet Union has had immense experiences of the class struggle and its labor unions have conducted victorious general strikes against the enemy more than once. It will not keep silent when the incorrect policy of the leaders of the central council demages the cause of the working class struggle.

The central council makes not the least demand to be allowed to "interfere in internal matters." It wishes to assist the British proletariat both materially and ideologically.

THE central council observes with indignation the strikebreaking attitude of the Amsterdam international and the leaders of the International Miners' Federation and the other international organizations who for the sake of the bourgeoisie have refused deplorably to support the heroic British workers.

The plenum of the central council considers it necessary to continue the energetic campaign of assistance for the British miners.

FASCIST RULE IN ITALY IS SHOWN VICTIM OF INTERNAL STRIFE

to an end, Farinacci was superfluous and was removed.

Altho the censorship prevents any discussion and any explanation of this matter, the Farinacci affair is causing the government much worry. There have been conflicts between fascists in various Italian towns, in Turin, in Genoa and other places. Thus, in Savona, the opposition succeeded in taking possession of the town hall, the sub-prefecture and the premises of the fascist party and the fascist trade unions. The plot was suppressed in time by the police, the carabinieri and the militia.

In Naples also, there were serious encounters between the official fascists and those of the opposition in consequence of the death of Captain Padovani who had been excluded from the party and who died under peculiar circumstances. It is further a telling fact that Farinacci was called upon by the prefect of Milan to leave without delay that town, in which he had come together with his friends. In Trieste also there were a number of sharp conflicts between the public forces and fascists, which even led to shots being fired in the streets of the town.

Fascists Grab Funds.

The chief scandal, however, was caused by the fascist press and by the authorities in connection with the collapse of the Agrarian Bank of Parma.

In this collapse, some of Farinacci's friends from Cremona, a town in the neighborhood of Parma, were involved. The responsible director of the bank was Count Lusignani, one of the most famous businessmen, who had only recently declared himself a fascist and had understood how to procure the friendship and protection of Farinacci in spite of the most violent opposition of a section of the fascists of Parma.

Merely an Incident.

The breakdown of the bank in itself is of no special importance. It was merely a case of several millions which were squandered by a few financiers and political businessmen, that is to say of an event, which is by no means anything peculiar under the fascist regime. Farinacci's opponents however seized the opportunity and embarked on a violent campaign of agitation. Matters were brought to light which otherwise might have been left in the dark. Among other things, Farinacci's friends were accused of having embezzled money of a charitable institution in Cremona, and Farinacci himself was accused of having pocketed money for his paper "Il regime fascist." (The Fascist Rule.) The methods were revealed by which he extorted subscriptions and assignments of money from the agrarians of Cremona according to the amount of their possessions. Altho Farinacci's opponents work on the same lines, all this was dragged into the light of day in order to injure Farinacci. The money affairs of a certain Max Bondi and a certain Cupini are connected with this matter; the financial collapse of the latter was a breakdown in grand style, in which Deputy Balbo, one of Farinacci's intimate friends, played a disgraceful part.

Struggle Developed.

At the same time another struggle developed between the leaders of the fascist corporations (trade unions) and the leaders of the association for industry and agriculture. The new trade union law and still more its regulations, make the unions absolutely dependent on the political authorities and rob them of all autonomy and all freedom of action, whilst in reality the associations of employers retain the greatest freedom of action. The leaders of the corporations tried to offer resistance, either to satisfy the masses to some extent or to pacify their discontent or to do justice to their natural desire to defend their own power. Consequently there were some lively discussions in the bosom of the great council; Deputy Rossoni, general secretary of the corporations, talked in threatening language, whilst in private conversation he did not even hesitate to make some very cutting remarks about the Duce and some of his chief collaborators. Another leader of the fascist unions even dared to speak openly of a general strike! It is a matter of course that the landowners and the industrialists met with success all along the line.

Points of Dissension.

The last great point of discussion was the question as to whether the (proletarian), tenant farmers should belong to the association of the landowners or of the agricultural workers. In reality, a political problem is in this case concealed under the mantle of a legal problem, because, as a matter of fact, the agrarians wish to prevent any alliance between the tenant farmers and the agricultural workers by forcing the former into the organizations in which they themselves are of course masters. Article 5 of the trade union regulations had already decided the question according to the will of the landowners. The fascist trade unionists succeeded in bringing the matter up again for discussion. It is however very doubtful whether they will attain their end.

Increasing Discontent.

The struggles to which we have referred are in reality extremely important, because they are symptoms of rapidly increasing discontent among the masses of the petty bourgeoisie with the oligarchic and plutocratic rulers who are now completely and openly in control of the government and of fascism. They are symptoms of deep clefts between the center and the periphery.

The central power is today, in the hands of the masters

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

THE following editorial excerpt reads as if written by Arthur Brisbane. The index finger of circumstantial evidence points to Arthur. Firstly, because the article is stupid, and secondly because it appears in a Hearst paper. Of course, there may be readers who will say it is presumption on the part of a DAILY WORKER editorial writer to jump on a gentleman who gets over $100,000 a year for his daily column. But if radicals were not presumptive how could they exist? Now let's go on with the story as the diary of "Peaches" Browning says.

THIS is the hunk: "It pays to be prepared, Uncle Sam, take notice. Switzerland has always been ready. Therefore in the great war fighting nations kept away from Swiss territory. Every Swiss is trained as a fighter and has his weapons in order. Because the Swiss were prepared before the war, Switzerland is rich now and able to lend sixty million real francs, twelve million dollars of our gold money, to France."

THERE is so much imbecility packed into those few lines that it is almost beyond human ingenuity to select the exact spot to land the first crack on. Switzerland was not attacked, because every Swiss keeps his catapult in order but because Switzerland had nothing worth stealing or grabbing. Anybody can see the Alps who has the money and a fairly respectable heart. The Swiss are as safe from invasion as the Esquimaux unless somebody discovers oil in the Alps. And then, France, the beneficiary of Swiss wealth, was armed to the teeth in 1914. So was Germany. One won, the other lost. In fact, both lost. But America that was not ready for war won the war at the expense of those that were ready.

IF we could leave Valentino and the chiropractors alone this column would be in a fair way to stand in the good graces of a considerable number of readers. We have the chiros glaring for breath, but the Valentino fans show no sign of surrender. "Mary Jane," from Charley Dawes' home town, pulled off a dirty trick when she lamped this writer with the editor of the Chicago Tribune, on the ground that both hated Rudy's powder puff. Well, everything is fair in journalism. Suffice it to say that "Mary Jane" stands almost alone in her adoration of Valentino as far as we can gather from The DAILY WORKER readers who have enough energy to drop us a postal card. Nevertheless, she wields a wicked Waterman.

THERE is nothing that I can think of more conducive to mirth than the labor day pronouncements of the labor fakers, unless it be the congratulations showered by defeated candidates on their successful rivals in hotly-contested elections. Most of the labor leaders, whose inanities are given space in the capitalist press gloat over imaginary victories and call attention to some obvious flaw in the present social order which, if properly pruned would make things ideal. Having said those things and having proven to the capitalist class that they are worth their wages, the labor fakers resume their favorite indoor and outdoor sports of haggling with the employers over the price of their shame.

THE Federated Press notes that the labor papers, with one exception, did not comment on the Farrington sell-out. Of course, the radical press jumped at the chance. And as usual the radicals were violent and denunciatory. This is a vice that radicals are usually addicted to. They insist on calling a spade a spade, much to the disgust of liberals who are always hoping for the best—from the conservatives. On this Farrington matter. Just two years ago The DAILY WORKER ran a series of articles on Farrington's record in the miners' union. Some people thought the mine leader was charged with too much.

MUSICIANS MAY CALL NATIONAL STRIKE IN SUPPORT OF CHICAGO

While the condition of the strike of 3,000 musicians in Chicago remained unchanged with no sign of a settlement late Wednesday afternoon, John C. Gamble, vice-president of the Musicians' International Union, here to assist the local officers in the conduct of the strike scouted the possibility of a national strike of musicians in which stage hands, movie operators and other theatrical unions might join.

Gamble arrived here Wednesday morning and immediately went into conference with James C. Petrillo, president of the Chi-

BRITISH TRADE UNION LEADER APES A. F. OF L.

Apologizes for Strike; Asks Collaboration

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Sept. 8. — Arthur Pugh, president of the British Trade Union Congress, at its opening session again exemplified the character of the General Council that betrayed the general strike of last May, when in his leading address, he upheld the point of view that the general strike was "industrial and not political," renouncing thereby the struggle for power by the workers.

Collaboration The Result.

Logically extending this refusal to recognize the final and of the class struggle, Pugh made a bid for class collaboration in harmony with the so-called "new wage policy" of the American Federation of Labor, in the form of a request of a "scientific wage" policy for generally acceptable principles of division of the products of industry among those who have a claim upon it."

It was apparent that Pugh's speech to the 700 delegates was far more apologetic toward the capitalist class for calling the general strike than toward labor for betraying it when it was on the point of success. He only hinted that the principle of a general strike had not been renounced. In part, his speech was as follows:

Apology To Capitalism.

"It will be fatal to the future welfare of the country and destructive of all hopes of peaceable progress if that great and spontaneous demonstration of working class solidarity, so generous in its readiness to run risks and make sacrifices, is regarded as the outcome of a sort of avil conspiracy of a few agitators at Eccleston Square (the London labor headquarters during the great strike). It has been misinterpreted and nothing can be more dangerous than to proceed upon an assumption so false and perverse.

"Given the set of circumstances as they existed on May 1, a stoppage of a national character was inevitable. The choice lay between action by a controlled and disciplined body or industrial chaos and disorder.

"Purely Industrial."

"The supreme lesson of the national strike is the clear evidence it adduced that the trade union movement retains its belief in the essential rightness of democratic methods. It was not the unions but the government which endeavored to convert the industrial struggle into a political conflict. When the unions combined their forces last May they were not invoking any new principle of industrial action but simply asserting more effectively on a larger scale the traditional, trade union right not to accept dictated terms of employment, whether from employers or the government."

Big Far Class Collaboration.

Referring to the future policy of the trade union movement Mr. Pugh continued:

"A scientific wage policy for the unions requires to be brought out in relation to some generally acceptable principles for determining division of the product of industry among those who have a claim upon it. This is especially necessary in regard to nationalized industries. Has not the time arrived for us to consider how we can apply the principle of a living wage or basic wage correlated to the index of national production and aiming at an equitable distribution of spending power in relation to family needs and the cost of living?

"An inquiry along these lines seem to me to be an indispensable preliminary to any claim we may make for the establishment of a legal minimum of wages adjusted to human needs."

The natural result of recognizing that the capitalist "has a claim" is to

Cantonese Whip Wu Pei-fu, Rout British Marines

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SHANGHAI, China, Sept. 8.—The situation in the fight of the Chinese for national liberation from foreign imperialists has developed two outstanding features, the sweeping victories of the Cantonese liberation armies in central China, and the intervention of Great Britain, which evidently intends to wage open war upon the Cantonese.

After marching northward from Canton thru Hunan province, gaining support as they marched, the Cantonese have engaged the forces of the imperialist puppet, Wu Pei-fu, all along the central valley of the Yangtze river, captured Wuchang on the south bank, crossed the river and carried the arsenal at Hanyang and then captured Hankow, known as the "Pittsburgh of China," which lies on the north bank of the Yangtze in the province of Hupeh.

Hareic Fighting.

The advance of the Cantonese has been marked with fine strategy and heroic fighting. It has met with success against the resistance of the combined forces of the reactionary Wu Pei-fu and foreign imperialist forces, the latter acting under the claim of "protecting" their interests.

Reports are that sixty British marines which landed at Hankow from the British cruiser Carlisle, when they attacked the Cantonese in an effort to stop the advance against Wu Pei-fu, were driven off by the Cantonese with heavy losses.

Battle For Hankow.

The battle for Hankow was bloody and desperate, an estimate of 20,000 killed being reported. All observers agree that the Cantonese fought with great heroism. This and wholesale desertions of Wu's troops and many of his generals accounts for their successes.

At Wuchang artillery was used at close range. The Cantonese, after capturing it, crossed the river and opened a hot artillery fire upon the fortified hill guarding the arsenal at Hanyang. Then they followed this up with a heroic frontal assault on the fort and captured it, the arsenal and iron works. Other forces then began the attack on Hankow.

Soldiers Desert Wu.

The armies of Wu Pei-fu are dissolving before the victorious Cantonese or going over to the Canton forces. All Wu generals except Wu himself, favored surrendering the Hanyang arsenal to the Cantonese.

It should be remembered that the armies of both Wu Pei-fu and Chang Tso-lin are formed upon the feudal principle, each subordinate general contracting an alliance for cash with the higher command. The private soldiers owing no allegiance to the higher command, but to their particular commander. These lesser generals are evidently falling away from Wu Pei-fu, either from their soldiers being won over to the nationalist cause or from a conviction that it is best to fight on the side of the winning Cantonese.

Whip The British.

One of these generals of Wu Pei-fu, General Yang-sen, has clashed with British naval forces far up the Yangtze in the province of Szechuen, and beaten two British gunboats and an armed British merchant ship in a battle at Wanhsien, 400 miles west of Hankow and 200 miles further inland than the Yangtze is navigable for anything but gunboats of light craft. From this incident the British are advocating British intervention on a large scale, undoubtedly to try to crush Canton.

The clash at Wanhsien occurred when the British steamer Wan Liu

Washington Hears Its Friend Wu Is Having Bad Luck with China

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8.—General Wu Pei Fu, leader of the central Chinese army, is determined to continue his war with the Cantonese, but his chief officers are discussing peace terms, according to a dispatch to the state department today.

The fall of the Hanyang arsenal, one of Hankow's chief defenses, placed the city at the mercy of the Cantonese and spelled Wu's doom, the dispatch indicated.

Three Prisoners Escape.

SOVIET UNION WARNS CHANG ATTACKS UPON RAILWAY MUST CEASE

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, Sept. 8.—Foreign Minister Tchitcharin has dispatched a note to the Chinese legation demanding that Marshal Chang Tso-Lin, the Manchurian commandar, cease his aggressions against the Chinese Eastern railroad.

This is the second time in the past few months that the Soviet government has found reason to complain of thsss aggressions.

M. Tchitcharin's nota daclares that Chang Tso Lin has attempted to seize the Eastern railroads and steamships and has threatened to close Soviet schools.

M. Tchitcherin's note declares China has grossly violated the treaty with Russia in a manner which is, "unqualifiedly intolerable." He points out that the Chinese govarnment has cractd serious difficulties for future relations and concludes by stating that the Soviet expects a spendy reply from China indicating that urgent measures have been taken to correct the situation.

The Soviet press interprets the Chinsas situation as most serious.

"If the storm breaks in Manchuria it will certainly involve other countries," said investa. "The workers of the world will face a terrible danger of war."

CENTRAL CHINA VICTORY AID TO CHINESE LABOR

Canton Government a Friend of Unionism

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8.—(FP)—Collapse of the power of Marshal Wu Pei-Fu in central China under pressure from the armies of the nationalist government at Canton, which has always been friendly to labor, has again turned the attention of labor leaders thruout the world to the Chinase situatinn.

The Canton government was established by the late Sun Yat Sen, who studied the European and American labor movements and who attempted to begin the emancipation of the Chinese working class when he established the first Chinese republic. Since the Russian revolution it has been on friendly terms with Moscow, under the policy established by Dr. Sun and maintained by his successors.

During the past 16 months the Canton labor organizations have conducted an effective boycott, amounting to a blockade, against British commerce at Canton, Hongkong and other ports of southern China. This boycott is due to the massacre of peaceful strikers by British police at Hongkong. It has cost British trade hundreds of millions of dollars.

U. S. Has Same Policy.

American policy in China has supported British and Japanese policy in favoring the reactionary military chiefs, Chang Tso-lin and Wu Pei-Fu, against the progressive and radical forces of the Canton government on the one hand and the people's army of Marshal Feng in the northwest.

Now that the reactionaries are losing ground, trade union leaders in China who have been persecuted during the past six months are expected to resume their activity. The triumph of the progressive armies seems likely to usher in a period when millions of Chinese will enroll in a permanent trade union movement.

JOHN L. LEWIS TOOL SOLD OUT TO OPERATORS

COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 8.—Echoes of the Frank Farrington scandal were heard in Ohio when the executive board of District 6, U. M. W. A., unseated President Robert Marshall of the important Hocking Valley sub-district for alleged corruption by an operator. His vice-president was also removed. They had the interests of 11,000 miners in their hands. Both were supported by President Lewis.

Several months ago the pro-Lewis president of the Bellaire sub-district, the most important in Ohio, with 17,000 miners, was removed on similar charges. A president of the Ohio miners' union was removed from office a few years ago for alleged corruption.

TERRIBLE TURK LOOKS TERRIBLE TO JOHN BULL

GENEVA, Sept. 8. — With Turkey knocking at the door of the league of nations, the spectra of Soviet Russia is looming once more at Geneva.

Thru Munir Bay, its representative at Berne, Turkey has indicated at several capitals its desire to join the league, provided it receives assurance of a seat in the council.

Great Britain, thru diplomatic channels, has informed Turkey that an essential preliminary condition to her acceptance by the league is the revision of the Russo-Turkish treaty, particularly the neutrality clause, which provides that Turkey remain neutral if Russia becomes involved in war.

Great Britain contends that this clause violates the league covenant, inasmuch as if Russia should attack a member of the league, Turkey, as all other members, would be obligated to take measures against Russia.

The question of Germany's admission will not come before the assembly formally before tomorrow, it is believed.

ALEXANDRA KOLLONTAI IS APPOINTED SOVIET UNION MINISTER TO MEXICO

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 8.—Mme. Alexandra Kollontai, one of the leaders of the Russian revolution, has been named minister to Mexico, succeeding Stanislaus Pastkowsky. She will be the first woman diplomat ever accredited to Mexico.

Ambassador Pastkowsky is leaving immediately for Russia and his successor will arrive in October.

M. Pastkowski recently attracted rather wide attention when he delivered a speech here attacking the United States and declaring that Latin-American progress would be furthered best when Latin-America had freed itself from the influences of the "colossus of the north."

Mme. Kollontai formerly was the representative of the Soviet Union government in Norway.

Mill Town Stirred by Strike War

MANVILLE, R. I., Sept. 8.—"The Manville-Jenckes company today, as in 1922, is demonstrating its power over the authorities in Rhode Island," says Thomas F. MaMahon, president of the United Textile Workers of America, when informed of the warlike attacks on unarmed strikers by the state troopers and the illegal sending in of national guardsmen.

State, military, police and labor officials are in conference sifting the evidence as to who was responsible for the indiscriminate and wanton firing upon thickly-packed crowds by the state troopers. Also, as to who called out the militia, when Governor Pothier asserts he did not, and their call by anyone else was illegal.

When first approached, Governor Pothier declared:

"I do not know who ordered out the national guard. I cannot say whether I am ready to authorize its being used until I investigate the situation." A few hours later, however, the governor said the troops would remain.

This is the fifth time in 25 years that the militia has been called out in strikes. The first was in the Pawtucket trolley strike in 1902; the second in May 1920, at Bristol, in the strike at the India Rubber company's plant; the third was in February

PROFITS IN SCAB COAL FROM AMERICA

3,000,000 Tons a Week From West Virginia

By GORDON CASCADEN
(Special to The Daily Worker)

BALTIMORE, Md., Sept. 6.—Children of British miners are starving because their daddies are striking against longer hours. But American capitalists are perfectly happy. They have good reason.

Coal companies suffering from overproduction and railroads with stocks tumbling are now paying large dividends as a result of large shipments of coal to break the British miners' strike. Business men generally are getting increased profits.

Scab Coal Boom.

R. G. Dun and company, nationally known authority on business conditions, in discussing Baltimore trade conditions, predicts that the turnover for the latter half of 1926 will exceed the record established by the corresponding 1925 period.

Norfolk and Newport News business reports are even more optimistic. They prove that all previous records for booms in that community have been broken.

The shipment of coal to crush the British mining communities is the reason for all this "prosperity."

Crocodile Tears.

Yet the shipment of this coal to crush the British mining communities is responsible for the shedding, by the Baltimore Sun, of these "crocodile tears":

"Most Americans, regardless of whether they are employers or employed, will think first of the suffering in the British mining districts and second of where the deeply involved responsibility for that suffering is located."

This virtuous morning newspaper has not yet started a campaign to raise funds to which employers making money out of the "suffering in the British mining districts" might contribute "conscience money."

Baltimore business men, with railroad and coal mine shareholders, might top the list.

One Month Beats All Last Year.

Coal exports from here last month, according to financial reports, reached a "surprising total." In that one month they were higher than the total of all the shipments during the twelve months of 1925.

This country, at all times, sends considerable coal to other countries.

But in 1925 the total of American coal exports to Great Britain were less than 2,000 tons. In the first month of the British strike, Baltimore shipped more than ten times that quantity to British ports. The total shipments of coal from the United States to Britain reached 465,000, while, according to a conservative figure, they rose to 1,354,000 tons during July.

A Vulture Speaks.

The coal business with Britain is now so extensive that J. G. Bradley, president of the West Virginia Coal Association and past president of the National Coal Association, made a special trip to that country. He has just returned, according to a New York newspaper, "from a six-weeks stay in England, where he observed the coal situation and obtained first-hand information regarding it from distinguished sources.

"The force of public opinion," according to him, "is largely out of sympathy with the miners." He points with pride to the American method of conducting mine strikes, in separate districts, one at a time, instead of on a national scale like that in Britain.

While Bradley talks about the situation overseas, former United States Senator Clarence W. Watson, head of the Consolidated Coal company of Elkins, West Virginia, "predicts a steady increase in the volume of orders during the next month or so."

Scab Coal Company Prospers.

The Consolidation company is the largest producer of soft coal in the United States. It has reserves sufficient for 200 years with production at the average rate of 10,840,000 tons a year.

Watson and other coal heroes are mightily pleased at the outlook, for coal prices are also rising.

At this time of the year there is comparatively light demand for coal. But coal production in Northern West Virginia reached its peak for the year during the first week of August.

It was thought that would end the rise. But each succeeding week has seen a breaking of the previous week's record.

3,000,000 Tons a Week.

More than 3,250 railroad cars were produced in that one section of West Virginia in a single day, or at the rate of 600,000 tons a week. This brings the total output of West Virginia mines, in conjunction with the output of fields in West Virginia mines up to a mark not far short of 3,000,000 tons a week.

Many companies have actually been sold up during August. Very little free tonnage is available. Prices are higher than two months ago and they are rising.

Chinese Smash Imperialist Foes

sunk two small boats of troops of General Yang-sen. The troops seized two ships of the same company to hold them for compensation. When the British sent their gunboats, the Cockchafer and the Widgeen, and a converted merchant vessel the Kiawe, loaded with marines, to rescue the ships, the Chinese repulsed them with heavy losses not yet reported in detail. Because of shallowness of the Yangtze at this point, the British are unable to send larger war vessels further west than Ichang.

British Atrocity.

It is reported that in the battle the British shelled the city of Wanhsien, which has a population of 150,000, without regard for the non-combatant women and children and the civilians generally, who had taken no part in the action of the troops.

British and French marines have landed at Hankew in the center of the conflict and are barricading with barbed wire and other material the British and French concessions and the Hankow bund. All communication has been cut off between the native and foreign settlements.

Guard Shanghai.

At Shanghai, so strong has been the enthusiasm among the Chinese at the advance of the Cantonese, the foreign imperialists have taken alarm and have called out 2,000 foreign volunteers to suppress any sign of revolt among the Chinese workers and students.

Canton Warns British.

HONGKONG, Sept. 8. — In reply to the British aggression against the Chinese at Shameen in the Canton foreign settlement, where the British arbitrarily declared that all strike pickets would be "treated as pirates," the Canton government has written the British consul general demanding the immediate withdrawal of British marines from the jetties, which are Chinese property, the cessation of British interference with river traffic and a retirement of British gunboats to their usual anchorage.

The British had previously taken up a position openly hostile and arrested the Chinese strike pickets for "piracy," brought their gunboats up to the wharf covering the bund and occupied the jetties with marines. This action of the British is supposed to be the result of a policy to open active war to overthrow the Canton government. Hostilities may break into the open at any hour.

The Cantonese armies which have taken Hankow, have warned General Sun Chuan-fang, who occupies Shanghai and some of the lower Yangtze valley, to withdraw his troops from Chingsi province into Kiangsu and Chekiang provinces or the Cantonese will attack them. Sun has so far been able to get his troops to fight the Cantonese, altho he is an ally of Wu Pei-fu.

Constabulary Charged With Brutality

1922, in the textile strike in the Pawtucket valley, the fourth time was also in 1922, during September, to a street car strike.

The list of wounded in the night of battle, not number eight, besides those suffering from tear gas bombs thrown by the state troopers and deputies. Many of these gassed victims are women, girls and boys, who were in or near the scene when the state police began hurling the poison gas over the throng of about 2,000 people.

Young Workers Lead.

The youthful working class elements among the crowd took the lead in battling, following the provocation by the troopers and deputies. Almost all of the civilians wounded are boys of from 17 to 21. Aram Asclair, 17, an electrician and nephew of the Woonsocket mayor, was sitting in a machine parked a quarter of a mile away, when struck in the jaw by a bullet from the troopers, firing at random.

Mike Lamaki, 17, a textile bleacher, was shot in the leg by three different bullets. He is a striker. Victor Racette, 27, a butcher, was shot through the shoulder. Armand Pentbriand, 16, was shot twice in the leg. John Rymanski, 21, had two fingers shot away.

Police Crowd.

Shots from the troopers shattered windows in a restaurant where customers were eating. Another volley went directly into the crowd and wounded three. So angry was the crowd at the unprovoked attack, that it met the advance of the troopers and police with a rush of its own, led by young men of 17 to 18, who forced themselves right into the bullying officers' faces, throwing stones and hurling imprecations.

What had angered the crowd particularly, was the tear gas bombs, tossed at random, choking many girls and women, some of them clerks in stores in front of which they fell. One of the proprietors had to be carried out unconscious.

Population Resentful.

The population is highly resentful of the conduct of the troopers. Even the pastor of St. James church, the Rev. Lessard, said: "According to the law the troopers had no right to shoot at the people. It is terrible."

The Providence News, in an editorial, scathingly denounces the state constabulary, and points out that it behaved illegally. Moreover, the militia were literally called out. The editorial, entitled, "Those who administer the law must observe the law," speaks in part as follows:

Deliberately Brutal.

"In the first serious test in which it has been subjected, the new state constabulary behaved at Manville last night exactly as its bitterest enemies predicted it would behave. It proved itself to be a body not only contemptuous of the people's civil rights but utterly incapable of keeping its head in a crisis. Without warning, without a reading of the riot act as provided by statute, the troopers took to their guns, firing first by way of intimidation, and wounding one person as a result, then firing with deliberate brutality into a crowd which their previous conduct had exasperated. That the casualties were as light as they were—though they are no light matter to the wounded and their families—can be described only as providential.

Not Justified.

"For the methods and acts of the state police their command must bear full responsibility. That command cannot maintain that last night's warlike demonstration was justified as a means of protecting the Manville mill. Earlier in the day loomfixers had actually been in the mill and removed their tools. They had done this in an orderly legal way, making no attempt whatsoever to injure the mill or anything in it. Had they been inclined to destructive action that would have been the time for it.

Strikers Denied Their Right.

"The bridge at Manville which was the scene of last night's fight is part of a public highway. It is the sole avenue between the homes of hundreds of the strikers and the mill in whose neighborhood they desired to exercise their legal right to picket peacefully. When Col. Chaffee and his man daubed the strikers the use of this public highway for a purpose which the law recognizes as proper, they were usurping a power which the statutes of Rhode Island do not give them.

"That was not the only instance where the law was ignored by the state officers last night. The calling out of the state militia was also accomplished in an illegal fashion.

Officers Break the Law.

"It is of the highest importance to the people of Rhode Island that the public peace should be preserved. It cannot be preserved if officials charged with administering the law do not themselves scrupulously respect every detail of it."

America's Workers Must Learn Now How to Aid Striking British Miners

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

IT was pointed out in the column recently that the organized American labor movement ought to contribute $5,000,000 in aid of the striking British coal miners. It was shown that it could do it and hardly miss it.

At the time this demand was made, the workers of the Union of Soviet Republics had raised their total to about $2,500,000.

American labor with its boasted flivvers, radios, victrolas, cottages in the suburbs—"the workingest class with the highest standard of living in the world"—ought to do at least twice as good. Five million dollars might be expected from about 40,000,000 of workers "receiving the best wages on earth," to quote the speeches of the officialdom of the American Federation of Labor. That means an average of about 12½ cents per worker, the price of a good cigar, a couple of packages of chewing gum, less than the price of a movie, the most of half a gallon of gasoline.

But the American working class has signally failed to make good. Its total contributions so far will not reach half a million dollars, perhaps not much more than $100,000.

In the meantime the workers of the Soviet Republic have pressed forward more and more. They are now close to $5,000,000 in their total of contributions to the British strikers. They have just sent 3,000,000 rouhles more ($1,500,000) to England to help the strikers battle hunger, the weapon of the mine owners and Baldwin government.

The Soviet workers are gradually lifting their standard of living out of the depths in which it was held under czarism. They pause temporarily to give their British comrades a helping hand in the struggle which, if lost, gives aid and comfort to the developing fascism in Great Britain. The Soviet workers are conscious of the class war and all its implications.

All the time American labor slumbers, doped by the sweet chloroform of honeyed phrases. Labor Day comes it wholesale.

America is fed on phrases. The constitution and the declaration of independence are overflowered with them. Meaningless phrases. Empty words. The prosperity press gushes sugared praise. There is no working class, it says. The workers, if there are any such, belong to the middle class, with its car and its home, and have the future carefree and contented. So argue the enemy employers and most of the labor officials.

Of course, the facts prove something entirely different. But even a slave or a serf may be lulled into semi-contentment. The collections for British strike relief have proved that this is so in America.

The American Federation of Labor is going thru the cheap formality of sending out another circular letter to affiliated unions.

"Received and filed!" is the usual sentence pronounced upon these circular letters unless followed by an active campaign. There has been no such active relief drive directed from the A. F. of L. headquarters in Washington. Secretary Frank Morrison of the A. F. of L. refuses to make public the total of relief contributions received so far. Is the total really so small that it cannot be submitted to the light of day. If it is small, it should be a spur to greater activity. If is large it will be an inspiration toward the same end.

The executives of the 31 Associated Railroad Labor Organizations put their names to an appeal addressed to the Railroad Workers of America. Not one of these organizations, however, some of them rich as Midas, have dipped into their own international treasuries, so far as is known. It is reported that the Brotharhood of Locomotive Engineers has sent individual letters to its 83,500 members. That is something. Acting President L. G. Grifling inclndes an appeal for the British miners on his page in the September issue of the Locomotive Engineers' Journal. It is a thin thread of international solidarity, indeed, almost cut in twain by one of the concluding sentences in the acting president's labor day message proclaiming that, "Behind our loyalty to America stands out loyalty to the Universal Brotherhood of Labor". Truly far behind when not a single one of the numerous brotherhood banks can be forced to disgorge some of the nation's funds for British coal miners' strike relief.

It should, therefore, be hardly necessary to repeat to the rank and file of American labor that the officialdom, reactionary and really satiated with things as they are, has passed the challenge of the Russian workers on to them. It is the rank and file in the shops, the mills, the mines and factories, that must give the answer.

It was promised that the workers of Chicago, under the guidance of the Chicago Federation of Labor, would give $50,000. They gave less than $17,000.

The United Mine Workers of Illinois gave $26,000 in a lump sum. Not even one among the many other district organizations of the United Mine Workers of America has given as much, or anywhere near it.

The British mine strike is now in its fifth month. The fail is here with its threat of approaching winter, and its misery. The appeal of the American railroad workers' organizations truly says:

"These marvelous coal diggers (of Great Britain) know how to die but they do not know how to surrender."

The workers of America have yet to learn how to give. Now is a good time to learn.

CURRENT EVENTS

Time has proven the contrary and the liberals who were screeching Farrington's hack a few years ago are now branding him as a traitor.

THE socialists have formed a dual anti-fascist league in New York for the simple reason that the latter body refuses to be dominated by them. This news is taken from a socialist organ in New York which is edited by James Oneal. The same journal tells us that a fellow by the name of Cohen won a suit (not a suit of clothes) and $25,000 against the Joint Board of the Furriers' Union. We are inclined to regard Cohen with suspicion since this neat sum was awarded him by a capitalist court.

DOCTOR NORMAN THOMAS of the socialist party is rather angry with Congressman LaGuardia because the latter has returned to his foddorbin in the G. O. P. He always believed there, but the socialists are so willing to grab any politico slut that makes eyes at them, that "Brother LaGuardia" was readily accepted as a helpmate of the Reverend Norman Thomas and sundry other socialists and labor-socialists during the LaFollette boom. LaGuardia did not espouse socialism. He didn't have to. All he had to do was to say nasty things about the House of Morgan and his words had made him whole.

DOCTOR THOMAS believes that Farrington's removal from the presidency of District 12 of the U. M. W. of A. is not an unmixed blessing. For one thing the temporary administration is less "progressive and courageous" than Farrington's and, holy Moses! "it will not let Adam Coolidger continue to write the best editorials in America in the office of the Illinois Miner." Adam Coolidger is none other than Oscar Amaringer, a pot-boy of Farrington. But what can you say to a man who considers a $25,000 a year servant of the Peabody Coal company progressive and courageous? Tet tha Reverend Norman Thomas is looked on as a wild-eyed leftist in the socialist party!

WORK is not what it is cracked up to be as Osborne C. Wood, son of the governor-general of the Philippines, alias "Ivory Soap Wood" found ent to his cost. Only a few days ago we were reading of the gallant fight young Wood was making to learn an honest business by starting in at the bottom. He was working in a factory and lived like an ordinary worker on the very pitiful salary of $125 per month. Now the poor fellow is in an hospital and the doctors kindly refrain from telling us what's the matter. They say: "There are certain cases in the medical profession in which we do not wish to make the diagnosis public, and this is one of them." Now that we know Osborne has tonsilitis, isn't it time to reflect on the hazard that a era strews in the path of a fellow who wants to make good?

THIS is what I call tough luck: Mexico City.—The constitutional reforms opposed by the catholic episcopate, are pigeon-holed in congress today because no deputy or senator has been found who is willing to sponsor them proposals for reform. An amplyer of the episcopate delivered the proposals to the congress and they were immediately tabled." The suspicion has suddenly dawned on us that Calles had something like this in mind when he generously suggested to the hierarchy that they appeal to congress for succor. But it appears that an angler was not available. In a crisis like this a holy ghost would come in handy but since his advenure in the Holy Land, he seems to be taking things easy.

'FREE THEM ALL!' IS SLOGAN AT I. L. D. MEETING

Enthusiastic Gathering Hears Noted Speakers

"We must weld our forces together so that at the next annual conference of International Labor Defense we shall have on this platform not only Charles Cline and Albert Weisbord but also Sacco and Vanzetti and Tom Mooney and Warren K. Billings and the scores of other working class fighters who are in prison today," said Elizabeth Gurley Flynn at the mass rally of International Labor Defense held at the Ashland Auditorium following the adjournment of the conference of the organization. The several hundred workers gathered at the meeting stood up, cheering and applauding this declaration.

Chaplin Speaks.

Ralph Chaplin, himself a former class war prisoner in the famous I. W. W. cases during the war, was the first speaker to be introduced by chairman James P. Cannon. Chaplin spoke of the importance of the International Labor Defense and the success attained at the conference.

Chaplin was followed by B. K. Gebert who pictured the persecution of workers and peasants in Poland under the regimes of Witos and then of Pilsudski. A resolution damanding general amnesty in Poland was adopted by acclamation.

Negro Workers' Support.

A. L. Isbell, chairman of the Chicago American Negro Labor Congress, who spoke next, pledged the support of increasing numbers of Negro workers to the cause of labor defense. The imprisoned soldiers of Houston, Texas, who had asserted their rights following the war were a part of the prisoners of American big business, and the persecutions of Negroes that are still going on made it necessary for them to unite with the white workers for common defense.

Paul Bucha, a thirteen-year old defense orphanage from Indianapolis, told of the activities of the children in that city for the I. L. D. and that the police there were not only afraid of the children "everthrowing the government," but had actually arrested four of them. The audience laughed and applauded as Bucha told how the children outwitted the Hammond police.

Cline Cheered.

Charles Cline, a free man for two weeks after serving a thirteen-year term in a Texas prison for participating in a Mexican revolutionary expedition, was given a tremendous ovation when introduced. Cline told the story of the events leading up to his arrest and exposed the manner in which he and his Mexican comrades had been framed up by the Texas bourgeoisie. He retained his faith in the power of the working class and called for continued support in the struggle for the release of all class war fighters.

Elizabeth Gurley Flynn was applauded when she told of how her doubts as to the efficacy of International Labor Defense had been rapidly removed in the last year thru the work done by the organization. "We must not allow our fellow workers to be snatched from the ranks of labor by the capitalist class and languished in their dungeons. We must unite our power and our solidarity will make it difficult indeed for workers to be so easily seized and hurled alive," she said.

Ruthenberg Speaks.

C. E. Ruthenberg, who is awaiting decision on his Supreme Court appeal, urged all workers to unite in the International Labor Defense to free those who dared to challenge the might of the ruling class.

"Shield and Sword."

A contrast to Charles Cline, just released from prison, was Albert Weisbord, facing the courts next month on charges arising out of his activities in the Passaic strike which he led. Weisbord was given another tremendous ovation by the assembled workers. "Not only must the I. L. D. be a shield of defense but it must become a sword of offense against our common enemy," said Weisbord.

A good collection was taken up for the I. L. D.

CUBA SUFFERS IMPERIALIST WHITE TERROR

Unions Crushed and Unionists Killed

By HARRY GANNES.

Alfredo Lopes, the secretary of the local Federation of Labor of Havana, disappeared on the 20th day of July, 1926, and since no trace has been found of him.

The disappearance, arrest, and oftentimes open murder of labor and revolutionary leaders in countries dominated by American imperialism is not an uncommon occurrence. The disappearance and probably secret murder of Alfredo Lopes is not at all surprising when we remember that Lopes was charged with being the author of a pamphlet criticising the strikebreaking activities of President Gerardo Machado, the outright tool of American imperialism and particularly of General Crowder, the personal representative of Wall Street in Cuba.

Crushes Railway Union.

Machado had succeeded, thru the use of the most brutal and terroristic methods, in crushing the railroad brotherhood of Camaguey. Local organizations of the railroad union were raided, members were indiscriminately arrested and held under cruelly illegal and wantonly brutal conditions. Machado's role as chief scab most glaringly puts him in the limelight as the puppet of American capitalism in the breaking of the railroad union. All the railroads in the north of Cuba are controlled by United States capital. Undoubtedly Machado's orders were to crush the brotherhood as a safeguard for American profits. Lopes, active labor leader, was picked as one of the foremost organizers in Cuba.

This was not Lopes's first taste of Machado's fascist methods. Lopes had often been arrested, questioned, bullied, but was usually set free on pressure from the working class.

Not the First.

Neither is the murder of Lopes the first act of open brutality on the part of Machado's Wall Street governmental machinery in Cuba.

Julio Antonio Mella, now an exile in Mexico, is another victim of American imperialism in Cuba. The memory of Mella's illegal imprisonment and hunger strike has hardly slipped out of the day's news when Wall Street adds a deeper hue to its already black record in Cuba by the murder of Lopes.

"Independent" Only in Name.

The independent Cuban government, dominated by a subservient group of Wall Street bootlickers, is one of the most groveling supporters of American imperialism. Every possible penny of profit that can be wrung out of the Cuban workers and peasants finds its way into the coffers of American bankers.

The exploitation of the Cuban workers and peasants is carried on wholesale under the foremanship of President Machado. His entire state machinery is at the beck and call of the American investors: the United States Fruit Company, the American Sugar Refining Company, the AmorRan Tobacco Company and last, but not least, the National City Bank. These in reality are responsible for the murder of Lopes.

Same in Peru.

Machado in Cuba does not stand alone as the willing and servile tool of American imperialism in the exploitation of his own people. Wherever American imperialism does not outrightly own the land, whether it be in Central America, South America, or elsewhere, it does not overlook protecting its investments by the corruption and subsidization of the local dictator. The dictatorship of Peru is just another such an example of the terroristic rule as that of Machado in Cuba.

First Mella, and now Lopes. But the crimes of Machado and the American investors in Cuba has not ended with Lopes. No organization of the workers in Cuba is safe in the face of the strikebreaking, union-smashing, openly terroristic activities of General Crowder's Cuban government.

Cuba is a small country, a semi-colony lying in the shadow of the United States' right. Cuban workers must have help to fight the Machado-Crowder-Super Trust terror.

The unopposed success of the bloody deeds of Machado will mean the extension of this method of subduing workers wherever the American dollar collects the sweat of the workers.

Cuban Workers Heroic Fighters.

The Cuban workers and peasants have always exhibited a determination to fight unrelentingly against American domination and exploitation. That's why Lopes was murdered. To crush the tyrannical cooperation of American imperialism with the union-destroying, murdering Machado dictatorship, the united protest of the workers everywhere affected by American imperialism is necessary.

The murder of Lopes will not stop the heroic efforts to stem the worst type of exploitation rampant in Cuba. But the murder of Lopes cannot go unchallenged by the entire working class of the United States, Mexico, Central and South America.

VENEZUELAN LABOR UNION IN AN APPEAL AGAINST OPPRESSION BY TYRANT GOMEZ, IMPERIALIST TOOL

Because of the white terror regime in Venezuela under the dictatorship of General Juan Vincente Gomez, the Venesuelan labor union is compelled to maintain its chief center of activity in New York City. The DAILY WORKER is glad to voice the protest of the Venezuelan workers in their letter printed below, and to point out that American labor has a duty to perform in opposing the imperialist oppression of the Venezuelan people by the United States, for which Gomez is the willing tool. The same could be said for Dictator Orellana of Guatemala.

Blessed by Rome.

The bloody rule of Gomez in Venezuela with its repression of the workers, has proceeded under the blessings of the catholic church, for the catholic religion is there joined with the state. The rule of Gomez has been so malodorous that Mexico severed relations with the Venezuelan government.

But the United States government has no quarrel with Venezuela and no capitalist papers of the United States have wept crocodile tears over Venezuela as they have over the supposed "rights" of catholic priests in Mexico.

A. F. of L. Does Nothing.

Nor has the American Federation of Labor done anything to protect the Venezuelan Labor Union, with which it is affiliated thru the Pan-American Federation of Labor, from American imperialism. Instead, it has stifled Venesuelan leber protests thru its control of the Pan-American Federation congress. The Venezuelan Labor Union's letter is as follows:

4 Willow Street,
Brooklyn, New York,
August 19, 1926.

Editor, The DAILY WORKER:

Taking for granted your passion for the liberty of all peoples, wo of the Venezuelan Labor Union have recourse to your periodical in behalf of a nation cruelly oppressed, in which, owing to monstrous and swaggering tyranny, no proper use of the press can be made.

Genuine Tyranny.

Venezuela has no lack of lofty credentials among the peoples of America; she has a right to a patent of honor; and it is with reason that she appeals to all republics for moral and material aid. There is now in South America a people in grief under the lash of governmental abuse; their arms, in the name of all that is pitiful, are raised for help; but for every one that ventures to speak up against such tyranny, there is sudden seizure, the burden of chains, and incontinent seclusion in some dungeon, where often enough he is floored to death.

In the name of the martyred and silenced people of Venosuela, our organization begs you to give space in your periodical for their complaints, that we may thus secure the attention of America, that all humankind may hear it, that magnanimous souls may be moved to come to the help of those who have tho undeclinable duty and the most decided purpose to break a way toward the light thru the jungle of social venality.

Went Support.

We wish to count upon the material and moral support of those for whom patriotism is a noble and vibrant matter, in order that in the near future our banner of protest may flutter under a favorable American sky.

It is a disgrace to America that there are to be found anywhere such acts of the magnitude of those which successively occur in Venezuela with the knowledge and sanction of the civilized world.

Hires Journalists.

Human dignity, a well-conceived Americanism, and the most elemental principles of solidarity constrain every country not to regard with continued indifference the vandalic capers of Juan Vincente Gomez, applauded as they are by a vile cohort of hired journalists who in no way reflect popular sentiment, because they confound the issues and renounce all dignity for the sake of the despot's favor.

For the present, in order that our introductory correspondence may not be a burden to you, we shall call to your attention only one matter, of recent occurrence, which pictures in masterly style the ambition of the tyrant, and the malleable and elastic fashion in which he has struck terror into the hearts of men distinguished for their intelligence, their social and economic tenure.

Enormous Graft.

By consent of the national congress it has been resolved that Juan Vincente Gomez might purchase for the sum of seventeen million bolivars the estates known as "Hatós de El Cauca," consisting of more than one hundred square leagues along the Orinoco.

Serves Imperialism.

These Gomez acquired for the ridiculous sum of three hundred thousand bolivars; he contrived to plunder Venezuela with his customery procedure, and suggested the scheme to his henchmen in congress. It was accepted without objection, with the enthusiastic approbation of persons who, thru fear or effrontory, sanctioned and continue to sanction the monstrosities of the man who has given free entrence, without precaution and to their huge advantage, to the dangerous magnates of imperialist countries.

In Venesuela Gomez disposes of the property of the natives quite as he pleases. The measures which he puts into practice have a monstrous range —from impudent offers for valuable property all the way to arrant bullying; imprisonment or death are current coin.

Salzes National Wealth.

Thus ho has seized upon whatever the country produces, monopolizing the cattle industry and its derivatives, the mills, navigation, the manufacture of Roman cement, the exploitation of minerals, woods, pearls, cigarettes, transport, etc—all this to such a degree that a newspaper in San Jose, Costa Rica, edited by Venesuelan exiles, enumerating the number, extent, and other particulars of the properties acquired by Gomez during his dismal predominance, establishes a total of much more than a thousand million bolivars! And yet when he first came into power he was a man of very modest fortune.

We make Pan-Americanism effective by attacking in its very lair all such systematic plundering. We do not hositate.

Respectfully yours,
Martin Feinstein,
English Secretary, the Venesuelen Labor Union.

Rob Oil Station.

BELOIT, Wis., Sept. 8.—Three armed bandits early today slugged L. H. Vance, and oil station attendant, into unconsciousness and escaped with $100, the Labor Day receipts.

Further executions may take place, it is said.

The Excelsior also reports that a party of rebels is operating near Las Vegas, and that trains from Mexico City and Vera Cruz are operating under a heavy guard.

Identify Only Six of 48 Victims of Movie Fire in Irish Town

DRUMCOLLIHER, Ireland, Sept. 8.—Deadly silence prevails in this stricken village, broken only by the tramp of feet, sobs and an occasional hysterical shriek as attempts are made to indentify the dead of the disastrous fire in the improvised motion picture theater here.

The charred remains of 48 bodies lie in coffins in the houses and stores and all day a continual procession of relatives and friends filed before these bodies striving to identify them from rosaries or trinkets which were found upon them.

Thus far only six of the 48 bodies have been identified.

Spain Leaves League as Germany Enters It

MADRID, Sept. 8. — At a meeting of the king's council it has been decided to send a note to the league of nations withdrawing Spain from membership in the league. The note will rebuke the league for showing Spain no consideration, while not mentioning Spain's demand for Tangier, and citing that Spain's "traditions, prestige and importance" as the mother country of twenty Latin-American countries deserved a better treatment.

S. P. RAILROAD SENATOR IS A BORE ON FLOOR

Press Gallery Groans at His Re-election

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8. — (FP) — Triumph of Senator Sam Shortridge of California in his campaign for renomination at the hands of the republican voters of his state has been met by groans from the veterans of the senate press gallery. Not because Shortridge is a reactionary, whose devotion to the service of the Southern Pacific Railway and to the big banking magnates of California is canine in its completeness.

The senate has always had its majority of servants of big business. The reason why newspaper correspondents hoped that Shortridge would be lost somewhere on the Golden Gate is because he is the dullest bore among all the tiresome persons in that assemblage.

He Takes Punishment.

Tall and cadaverous, with a solemn horse face which is apparently incapable of a gliint of humor or a gleam of enthusiasm, Shortridge rises in the midst of almost every serious debate to ask, pompously, some silly question. Sometimes he repeats his query three or four times, in a measured tone and with slow gestures which he considers impressive, to the senate senators. Usually his question stops the debate for five or ten minutes, because he never is satisfied with an answer such as the mental quality of his interruption warrants. Jim Reed of Missouri once became so irritated at the show-off tactics of the Southern Pacific senator that he remarked that "No man in human history has ever been so wise in fact as the senator from California looks." Whereupon Shortridge assumed a lordlier pose than before.

Don Chafin Paroled.

Parole of Don Chafin, former sheriff of nonunion Logan county, West Virginia, from Atlanta penitentiary, has been granted by the federal parole board. Chafin applied for release last June, but another indictment was hanging over him, due to his activities as partner in a bootleg enterprise, and the parole was delayed until that indictment could be quashed. Chafin's downfall after nearly a score of years of terrorism in Logan was not due to his lawless intimidation of trade unionists who ventured into that corner of the coal fields of West Virginia. Big Bill Coolidge, head of the Island Creek Coal company, dominating the Logan county coal field that Don was elected sheriff year after year, on the democratic ticket. The Island Creek and other coal companies, thru their county associations, supplied Don with funds for the hiring of a private army of deputies, with which he patrolled the road entering the county from the north, searched every passenger train that arrived, and stopped strangers from hotel beds in the middle of the night to explain their errands in his hallwick. Occasionally they killed a man, and all of those whom they murdered were beaten. None of these acts met any punishment from the federal authorities.

Don Gets Too Fresh.

But in the campaign of 1924? Chafin tried to carry his county for Davis against Calvin Coolidge. He had a delegate in the national convention in New York City, and felt that it was up to him to arrange for direct into Big Bill voters who would not support the democratic nominee. His strong-arm methods amused the republicans, and as soon as the machine's could be set in motion for him Chafin indicted and convicted on a bootleg conspiracy charge. Chafin seems to have considered that federal liquor laws did not apply to his territory.

His release after a little more than a year in prison is credited to "Big Bill" Coolidge, cousin of Calvin. The coal operator visited his cousin in the White House last fall, and made a request that his friend be turned loose. Then "Big Bill" went home to Boston and reported that the White House would be all right on coal matters.

Missouri R. R. Gains Trackage.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8.—The Missouri Pacific railroad today was authorized by the interstate commerce commission to acquire control, by purchase of capital stock, of the Marions & Eastern, a coal carrying road in Williamson county, Ill.

FIVE DIE IN LABOR DAY WRECK IN HEART OF CITY; BIG CRASH AT JUNCTION

As overloaded excursion train of the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad was visited by death as it was bringing Labor Day vacationists from Wisconsin towns into Monday at Clybourne Junction. Five persons were killed and more than half a hundred seriously injured when another train hit the rear car and sent it crashing thru the one before it, telescoping them and imprisoning the terror-stricken passengers in the twisted iron and splintered beams.

The driver of the suburban train that crashed into the death cars has been held responsible. The engineer, however, in his own defense said he was following instructions to go slow, proceeding at no more than ten miles an hour when suddenly the lights of an oncoming train blinded him and next he knew he was upon the other train.

The scene of the wreck revealed that not only were the cars overloaded, people being forced to stand in the aisles, but that both the cars in which the greater number of victims were killed and injured were of wooden construction.

WOODEN COACHES RESPONSIBLE FOR HOLIDAY DEATHS

Coroner's Jury Lays Blame on Road

An engineer in bad health and over-crowded ancient wooden coaches are held as the real causes of the Labor Day wreck on the Chicago and Northwestern railroad at Clybourne Junction, with a toll of five lives and severely injured more than 50 holiday passengers, by members of the coroner's jury now investigating the disaster.

Coroner Blames Road.

The officials of the road, after an investigation conducted by them, have laid the full blame on the engineer of the suburban train that crashed into the fated rear coaches of the death train. But the coroner's jury has heard evidence to show that the engineer had been in poor health for years and had poor sight. Coroner Oscar Wolff, after he viewed the wreckage said it was a marvel to him that so few people were killed.

Antiquated Coaches.

He openly laid the burden of the blame on the Northwestern road for using the antiquated wooden coaches to care for surplus fares on holidays. The coroner charged that if steel coaches or even more durable wooden had been used, no one would have been killed and few injured.

Reading Road Wins Race to Acquire 219 Mile Pa. Line

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8.—Around a 219-mile railroad, extending from Temaque, Pa., to Campbell Hall, N. Y., will center one of the biggest railroad fights the interstate commerce commission has encountered since it rejected the Van Sweringen billion-dollar railroad merger.

This became known today when the commission gave notice that it would conduct hearings, beginning tomorrow, on the application of the Philadelphia & Reading to acquire control of the Lehigh & New England by lease and other trackage arrangements.

This apparently insignificant road, which is devoted largely to freight movement, was a prize for which five great systems angled for months and which the Reading finally landed.

MORO TROUBLE IS ARTIFICIAL, SAY FILIPINO

Independence Committee Accuses General Wood

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8. — With regard to alleged conflicts between Filipinos and Moros in the Philippines Moro region, V. G. Bunnen, head of the Washington office of the Philippina Commission of Independence, has the following statement:

The reported strife between Filipinos and Moros in Zamboanga and Jolo during the visit of Colonel Thompson in those places was the result of an attempt on the part of the enemies of Philippine independence to impress the president's envoy with the supposed hatred between these peoples, according to advices we have received from our Manila office. In fact, a Filipino ex-governor of one of the Moro provinces charged Major Fletcher of the United States army with being responsible for it.

It Sounds Familiar.

This is not the first time that similar efforts have been made, for the alleged hatred between Filipinos and Moros has been invoked time and again, especially since the introduction of the Bacon bill, as an argument against independence and for the separation of the Moro region from the rest of the Philippine archipelago. The reported conflict is the same story —the same music, staged to the presence of Colonel Thompson and the effect in the United States, was in so far as the Filipino people are concerned, they are satisfied with the comforiable knowledge that Mr. Thompson and the American people have too much common sense not to see thru it.

Wood in Plot.

And despite the assertion of Governor General Wood that the Zamboanga affair, according to Manila dispatches, was so serious that only the presence of Major Fletcher and his troops prevented a toll of five lives and many dispatches state that Colonel Thompson dismissed it with the statement: "I am sure it was only a misunderstanding which has now happily ended."

The following facts and figures taken from the official records of the bureau of nonchristian tribes of the Philippine government will show beyond the shadow of a doubt that the Filipinos and Moros can live togather peacefully if undisturbed by outside influences. During the Harrison regime, when the Filipinos were permitted to manage their own affairs, including those of the Moro region:

Americans Cause Killings.

From the period beginning July 15, 1902, to December, 1913, before the Jones law, during the regime, there occurred 152 encounters between the Moros and the constabulary. During the period from January, 1914, to October 15, 1913, the Harrison regime, only 20 encounters occurred. Taking only a short period of two years of the Wood administration, beginning October 16, 1921, more than 26 encounters have already occurred. At least 17 have occurred up to August, 1923.

Worse Now Than Ever.

From July 15, 1902, to December, 1913, as a result of these encounters, 1,565 casualties are recorded, while during the Harrison administration, running for a period of about seven years, only 373 casualties occurred, and during the administration of Governor-General Wood up to August, 1923, less than two years, 163 casualties have happened. Under the previous administration up to 1913 the average encounters between the constabulary and the Moros was one per year, 20, while during the Harrison administration it was only three, and under the Wood administration up to August, 1923, it increased to 89.

Wood Makes Trouble.

Under the previous administration prior to 1913 the average number of casualties per year was 108, while under the Harrison administration it was only 63, and under the Wood administration up to August, 1923, it increased to 89.

These statistics speak for themselves and show beyond any doubt that at least the relations between the Filipinos and the Moros during the Harrison administration when the government of Mindanao was in the hands of Filipinos, were more cordial than at present, let alone the greater progress attained during that period compared with that which preceded it and the present one.

CONNECTICUT CONVENTION FOR UNITED LABOR TICKET CALLS ON UNIONS TO AGITATE IDEA

In the early part of July a provisional committee composed of bona fide trade unionists, members of the American Federation of Labor, issued a call for the Connecticut United Labor Campaign Convention, for Sunday, August 29, 1926, at Central Labor Hall, Hartford, Conn.

The intention of the committee was to mobilize the support of trade unions and all labor organizations of the state for the establishment of a united all the labor forces in the state of Connecticut for a militant labor ticket campaign.

The program which the committee drew up consisted of the following points:

1. Abolition of the right to issue injunctions.
2. Abolition of "yellow dog" individual contracts between employer and employe.
3. Public ownership of public utilities.
4. Adequate compensation for those injured in industry.
5. Abolition of government arbitration boards, with power to dictate the condition of work for employes.
6. Maternity compensation laws, equal wages for women and protection of women in industry.
7. For the child labor amendment.
8. Against military training schools and military training in schools and colleges.
9. Establishment of the right to recall.
10. Establishment of the right of government employes to organize.
11. Preservation of the constitutional guarantees of freedom of speech, press and assemblage.
12. Legislative measures to improve the condition of farmers and increasing taxation on large incomes and excess profits.

It was on this program that the committee hoped that organized labor should unite for independent political action. The committee intended that if there was a widespread support from the organized labor candidates under the united labor ticket of Connecticut.

Socialists Betray.

However, due to two contributing factors, this convention call has not received sufficient support in the ranks of organized labor. The first of these factors is the attitude of the state A. F. of L. officialdom. The State Federation of Labor has maintained either a passive silence towards this progressive move or has else resisted the attempt to make the convention a success. The second of the contributing factors has been the regrettable attack by the socialist party of Connecticut which has charged this committee as being Communistic and deceptive. This charge is of course ridiculous. The issue is not one of Communism, but a question of unifying all labor's forces for independent political action.

In view of these facts it is considered inadvisable and undesirable to place a ticket on the ballot. The committee does hereby issue this statement in explanation of its activities and intentions.

Now What Is To Be Done?

The committee calls upon all the delegates present at this convention to go back to their local unions and there carry forward this work for labor's independent political action. We will urge the socialist party of Connecticut thru their fraternal delegates to the coming State Federation of Labor convention to there propose the formation of a united labor party with bona fide labor leaders at its head.

We call upon all working people in the state to carry on in their organizations the agitation for independent labor political action.

Let us break away from the old parties of Wall Street!

Let us cease trying to "support our friends and defeat our enemies!"

Let us come forward in this election campaign and in the presidential elections of 1928 with a labor party which shall take away the power from the old boss parties and which shall give power to government to a party of the working people in the state of Connecticut.

Above statement adopted unanimously at the United Labor Campaign convention held in Hartford at Labor Union Hall, 23 Central Row, on Sunday, August 29, 1926.

Young Recruits at 'Peaceful' C. M. T. C. Urged to Join Army for Three Years

FORT NIAGRA, N. Y., — (C. M. T. C.) — Situated as I am in an advantageous position in the C. M. T. C. up here at Fort Niagra, I can communicate several interesting facts to our comrades on the outside as to conditions up at this "blessing for the working class youth."

This morning General Summerall of Governor's Island, commander of the second area corps of the army visited us. I wasn't much surprised when I heard his line of talk. He talked of patriotism and devotion to the country which sanctioned freedom of speech and the press. He told us that when the time came he hoped the young citizen would be prepared to take up arms to protect the "property of Rockfeller and Morgan."

Some of the boys were quite impressed by his ovation for capitalism, but a few boys beside me said that they were used to hearing such humbug. One boy to whom I talked for a short time told me that he believed in Communism. He said that the only reason he came to Fort Niagra was because he was unable to secure a job in the city. This is true of quite many others.

When I heard General Summerall speak of freedom, I said to myself "How the hell have you get the nerve to throw the old bologna like that when it is impossible for a worker to read the constitution in the streets without being arrested." I recollected about the Passaic strikers, how they were unable to collect money in the street because of the influence of the mill-owners on the police. After Summerall's speech a parade was held. It turned out to be quite a sumptuous undertaking. There were many dashing lieutenants who were much more interested in impressing the young ladies than in parading about the field.

The authorities out here are trying to make the fellows enlist for three years in the regular army after their month of training is up. Everything is perfectly arranged out here for the growth of nationalism and to divert the attention of the boys away from anything intellectual and radical.

The most popular books in the library are:

1—Action stories.
2—Wild West stories.
3—Home Journal.
4—Tarzan of the Apes.
5—Oppenheim and Haggard stories.

These books had all been approved by the chaplain. He believed that all religions ought to be combined so that the ethical point of view might be attained. I told him something. I said to him "the only thing that can really unite the vast majority of people who are wage-earners is the settlement of the economic problem." The fact that I believe in a creed that everybody else believes in does not exempt me or anybody else from being exploited. He really understood my point of view but he was not courageous to stick to his real convictions. He had a good job to look after.

I told him "what difference would it make if all religions were united the workers would still be robbed and underpaid." He told me that he agreed with me up to the point where he wished me to love my fellow man but beyond that he did not approve of my manner of attaining it. I threw the peace and brotherhood advocated by the citizens' committee including several prominent catholic priests in the Passaic strike, at the reverend faker and with that I left.

The Shady Record of Frank Farrington

THE following sketch of Frank Farrington's career in the United Mine Workers of America is a summary of a series of articles that appeared in The DAILY WORKER in October 1924, under the title, "On a Labor Faker's Trail." Farrington's latest exploit in accepting a $50,000 a year salary from the Peabody Coal company, while still president of the Illinois Miners' Union, makes it impossible for even his closest friends to condone his action. His new stands suspended from office by action of the district executive board.

Union Strikebreakers.

ARTICLE 4.

It is not surprising that Farrington would consistently sell the miners' votes to the government of the state of Illinois. During the stormy days of 1919, hundreds of special deputy sheriffs similar to those appointed at the request of Gary in the steel strike, were appointed by the state and county officials at Farrington's request. These deputies were union strikebreakers and not paid by the county which appointed them. These deputies were paid out of the $27,000 fund of which Farrington refused to give an itemized report until compelled to do so by the international convention.

Here was the edifying spectacle of Farrington, president of a great labor organization paying officers of a capitalist government to put the members of his own union in jail. Wives of miners were thrown in jail, some of them with babies at their breasts. The coal operators got their wish and hundreds were indicted and held on heavy bail.

Then John L. Lewis came to the assistance of Farrington. According to the International Constitution of the United Mine Workers of America the International president only has the right to revoke the charters of districts, anti-district and locals, but Lewis delegated this right to Farrington in the state of Illinois with the result that the latter revoked the charters of 24 locals and made an agreement with the coal operators that none of these who took leading part in the insurgent movement should be employed in the mines. To use Farrington's own words: "It is our understanding that the operators will not pick the ringleaders in the strike, which has crippled the mines . . . If any do get positions and are admitted to a local we intend to file charges against them and oust them from the union."

What does Farrington mean in the paragraph: "It is our understanding that the operators will not pick the ringleaders in the strike, which has crippled the mines . . . It simply means the application of the dreaded blacklist, not only at the instigation of the boss but by the president of the miners' union acting in harmony with the coal operators. Farrington and the operators had a common ground for action against the militants in the union. The bosses knew that the latter would interfere with their ability to violate contracts at will and Farrington saw in them a standing menace to his position as head of the union which enabled him to draft and sell the miners to the enemy.

The breaking of the 1919 strike cost the district treasury the sum of $27,000 for which Farrington refused to give an account until forced to do so by the international convention. At this time Lewis and Farrington were enemies, so the International Executive Board appointed a committee to inquire into the spending of the $27,000 and this committee recommended after making an investigation that Farrington be compelled to show what he did with the money.

The Farrington denied having added a single man to the payroll on account of the 1919 strike, secretary-treasurer Nesbit admitted to the executive board in Indianapolis, that "I think we had on the payroll at one time between four and six hundred men who were going around denying statements these other men were making and persuading men to stay at work."

When the itemized report was finally dragged from Farrington, it was shown that the Peabody Coal company boss, Jack Brown, received $230.50, in payment for slugging the Collinsville committee on the streets of Springfield in front of Farrington's hotel.

That slugger Jack Brown continued on intimate terms with Farrington and Fishwick, vice-president of District 12, is shown by a letter and note for $150.00, dated Sept. 1, 1922, which coincides with the time district officers were nominated for the ensuing two year term.

Farrington's about-face in the case of Alexander Howat is one of the most disgraceful incidents in his career for Howat was well known to the coal miners in general and to the Illinois miners in particular. While Howat was in jail for defying the notorious Kansas industrial Court Law, the most useful ally of the Kansas coal operators who were fighting Howat was John L. Lewis who had Howat and district officials expelled for fighting Governor Allen. Farrington was fighting Lewis at this time and took advantage of the Howat case to make things harder for his foe. His afterwards proved that he never had any interest in the Howat fight for the sake of principle.

It is interesting in view of the relations between Lewis and John L. Lewis today, to read what the former had to say of the latter as recently as the year 1922. At a special convention of District 2, Oklahoma, held in Muskogee, on May 15, 1922, Farrington defended Howat and made a most bitter attack on John L. Lewis. Space prohibits more than a few choice excerpts from this speech. President Wilkinson of the Oklahoma district, charged Farrington with being a disrupter, a charge so frequently levelled today by the labor fakers against the progressives in all the unions. Here is Farrington's reply: "My friends I confess here now, before these that I John L. Lewis is the International Union, of United Mine Workers of America, then the charge made by Wilkinson is true!"

Again Farrington said: "I am not saying a disrupter is destroying the Union, but am trying to destroy John L. Lewis, the man who is doing more to destroy the United Mine Workers of America, than any other men I know of . . . and he will not have my support/as long as he is using the power of his position to crucify man who won't jump thru the hoop every time he snaps his fingers and tells them to do it."

Fargot His Pledge.

Farrington no doubt had forgotten this pledge when he aided Lewis at the 1924 convention in Indianapolis in crucifying Howat even the every delegate from District 12, except the payroll brigade were solidly behind the Kansas miner. Farrington was appointed by Lewis, chairman of the scale committee. Even at that Howat bet he could not sink so low as to go back on him after his many promises, but he did.

The retraction made by Farrington of statements he made against J. L. Lewis in 1919, was issued by John L. Lewis to show that Farrington's word did not mean anything. Referring to this, Farrington said that he knew the retraction was not true, but that his original statements were true, and that he signed the retraction for particular reasons.

Farrington and Lester.

During the 1922 strike, several strikebreakers lost their lives in Williamson county. These cases were employed by William J. Lester, who secured a permit from Farrington to remove dirt off his strip mine. Lester was not satisfied with digging dirt; he began digging coal and the cabs armed to the teeth defied the miners and went around the county insulting people. What happened to them is history.

John L. Lewis, president of the U. M. W. of A., charged Farrington with having received a round sum of money from Lester for the permit. He made other charges against Farrington according to a statement by board member Dobbins to Farrington. The result of these charges was an interesting correspondence between Lewis and Farrington. Only the substance of this correspondence can be given here.

Under date of Nov. 2, 1922, Farrington wrote to Lewis, stating that he was informed by board member Dobbins, that Lewis informed the executive board of things in Illinois were corrupt and that a compact had been entered into between Farrington and Fishwick and William J. Lester for the operation of the latter's strip mine during the strike. Lewis also charged according to Farrington's letter that the go-between in the deal was Kansas industrial Court Law, the most useful ally of the Kansas coal operators who were fighting Howat was John L. Lewis who had Howat and district officials expelled for fighting Governor Allen. Farrington was fighting Lewis at this time and took advantage of the Howat case to make things harder for his foe. His afterwards proved that he never had any interest in the Howat fight for the sake of principle.

Lester for the operation of the latter's strip mine during the strike. Lewis also charged according to Farrington's letter that the go-between in the deal was Robert M. Medill, director of the department of mines and minerals in Illinois, and that the money was split three ways.

In reply Lewis states "that Mr. Dobbins" is somewhat inaccurate" and expressed his willingness to discuss the matter at issue personally with Farrington.

Serious Charges.

This evasive reply nettled the latter who replied at great length, winding up by saying that Lewis "had descended to the level of a louse." Among the charges made by Farrington against Lewis, which he qualified to proved himself are:

First: That Lewis got money from the Kansas operators for his fight against Alexander Howat.

Second: That Lewis had agreed with the coal operators for a reduction in wages and that in order to escape responsibility, he decided to call a strike, which should continue until the unorganized of the union called for a settlement even at a reduction in wages.

Third: That Lewis and others collected $100,000 from the $750,000 and that three members of the directorate of that bank are operating non-union mines in the Pennsylvania fields and that the $100,000 which Lewis got has never heard of was kept by Lewis and his associates on the understanding that the support of the union would be withdrawn from the striking miners in the non-union coal fields of Pennsylvania.

Farrington concludes:

"Furthermore, considering the fact that you waited until October before levying a special assessment, which could not be collected until the month of November, and this in face of the fact that the striking mine workers in Pennsylvania had been sending out pitahia nation-wide appeals for financial assistance even since the general strike was settled during the month of August, and taking into account the fact that Wall Street Banks are not noted for their union sympathies, the average individual would conclude (taking circumstantial evidence into consideration), that there must be some truth in the story and that you were deliberately conspiring to starve these men into submission."

The two labor fakers realized that they were not in a position to continue this game of exposing each other longer so they decided to bury the hatchet.

The personal feud between Frank Farrington and John L. Lewis was a source of danger to the reign of the reactionaries in the United Mine Workers of America. Their intermediaries, both agreed to fight the radicals and conveniantly forget the nasty things they had been saying about each other.

Farrington suddenly discovered that the progressives were enemies of the union despite e letter he wrote under date of May 8, 1923, complimenting the progressives on the work they were doing in cleaning up the corruption in the union. In that letter he also praised Alexander Howat as a loyal union man, saying that his association with the Progressive Miners' Committee was because he saw in that effort "the only way he can secure justice for himself and the Kansas mine workers."

Yet sixteen days after Farrington wrote this letter we find him writing to John L. Lewis proposing a conference to smooth out the differences between them so that both could put up a united front against the so-called enemies of the union. Farrington's long letter brought a reply from Lewis and the two got together. When these fail out it's not so bad, for honest people, but when crooks get together those who have watches had better keep a tight hold on them.

The result of the deal between the two fakers was that both stopped calling each other fancy names and settled down to cleaning upon the progressive movement inside the union. Farrington was willing that Lewis should have Howat's head, and Lewis lost all interest in compelling Farrington to account for the $2,000,000 Herrin assessment and his many gross violations of the union law.

On June second of the same year Farrington wrote a letter to a member of the union in which he washed his hands off Howat and declared that Alex had "joined forces with the enemies of the union," and at the Indianapolis convention of the U. M. W. of A. in January, 1924, Farrington joined with Lewis in refusing Howat a hearing, tho the convention by a two-thirds vote went on record for the Kansas mine leader.

Tumulty's Statement to Membership

gressive of the Springfield district and one of the most consistent enemies of Farrington and the coal operator leadership of the Illinois miners, appealed to the coal diggers of District 12 for support in the elections which will be held next December.

The statement reads in full:

"In announcing myself as a candidate for the office of president of District No. 12, United Mine Workers of America, I do this with the knowledge of the great responsibility that is attached to this office.

"If I am elected to the office of district president I will oppose any program submitted by the coal operators of Illinois that requests one cent of a reduction of wages off the Illinois mine rates.

Opposes Unjust Methods.

"I will oppose in every way I know how the unjust methods of settling disputed cases based upon Joint Board decisions rendered in any period other than the life of the contract. I will work to have all disputed cases settled upon the merits of the case, and all decisions to expire on the same day as the contract.

"That the mining industry of Illinois is in need of more intelligent management is to say the least, and I am in favor of nationalization of the coal mines with democratic management as a means of elimination of the great waste in this basic industry.

"I prefer the living radicalism in the miners' union to the dry rot that is now prevalent in our organization, and I am opposed to the expulsion policy of our present administration, and will work to have every man now expelled restored to full membership in our organization.

Operators' Business.

"I believe that the questions such as superpower, cheap fuel, lower freight rates and the elimination of the surplus mines and miners are a concern of the coal operators and not of the miners, for our solution lies in the organizing of the unorganized. The above questions are of a political nature and not economic, and to cope with this deplorable condition I am in favor of a labor party with its base and receiving its moral and financial support from all branches of the trades union movement.

Organize Unorganized.

"I am in favor of District No. 12 employing all means at its command (with the co-operation of the International union) to organize mines outside the boundary lines of District No. 12 as a means of keeping pace with the moving industry in the coal fields of Illinois.

"When it is taken into consideration that there is only one-third of the coal miners of this country in our union and that our membership is decreasing as every hand, it should be a warning to everyone that our union is in danger. So let the slogan of the organized miners from now on be: 'Save the Union!' Organize the unorganized until every man working in and around the coal mines of the United States of America are enrolled under the banner of the United Mine Workers of America."

Jumps From Car; Killed.

CANTON, Ill., Sept. 8.—Hindering heat from the exhaust for flames beneath the car and believing the machine afire, Mrs. Charles Asbell, 52, suffered fatal injuries today when she leaped from the automobile in which she was riding. She died soon after she had been taken to a hospital.

Demand End of School Board Blacklist Upon Civil Liberties Union

NEW YORK, Sept. 8. — The American Civil Liberties Union asks Franklin P. Graves, state commissioner of education, to reverse the decision of the New York city board of education barring the union from holding a free speech meeting in Stuyvesant High School. The union asks reversal "on the ground of substantial damage to our reputation and to the service we are rendering to the American people by protecting minority and individual rights."

It charges that the board of education maintains a blacklist of organizations and declares that citizens of New York City have a fundamental right to hold meetings in their own school buildings where their objects and personnel are reputable.

MELLON TRUST IN ALUMINUM SHOWN BY SUIT

Double - Crossed Rival Sues for $45,000,000

NEW YORK, Sept. 8. — George D. Haskell, president of the Bensch Machine and Tool company, has entered a suit against the Aluminum Company of America, in which Andrew Mellon, secretary of the U. S. Treasury and others of the Mellon family and financial group hold dominating control, for damages in the sum of $45,000,000 under the Sherman anti-trust law.

Duke Double-Crossed Him.

Haskell charges that he had confided certain plans for aluminum manufacture, in competition with the Mellon trust, to the late James B. Duke, who double-crossed him by conspiring with the Mellon trust to shut out Haskell from carrying out his plans.

Duke, it is charged, was in 1924, constructing a $40,000,000 power plant on the Saguenay river in Quebec. Haskell entered into negotiations with Duke in bargaining for the use of part of the 600,000 horse power to be generated by the plant, in order to use it in a competitive manufacturing scheme against the American Aluminum company. Haskell confided his plans to Duke.

Air-Tight Trust.

"Thereupon," the complaint says, "the defendant company, entered into a combination and conspiracy to monopolize the aluminum trade and commerce of the United States and foreign countries and induced Mr. Duke actively to join the Aluminum Company of America."

Haskell charges that the Mellon aluminum trust has grabbed practically all the deposits of bauxite ore, from which aluminum is made, in both the United States and foreign countries and controls a virtual world monopoly in both crude and finished aluminum.

NEW MASSES HAS POSTGATE STORY ON MINE STRIKE

By SENDER GARLIN.

If there still remains the slightest doubt that the workers involved in the much-muddled recent general strike were shamelessly betrayed, the "Diary of the British Strike," by Raymond W. Postgate, which appears in the current number of The New Masses ought to dispel it.

The author, who is at present the assistant editor of Lansbury's Labor Weekly and the author of several books on labor economics, presents a lucid, concise and illuminating picture from May 1, when it became evident that the strike was practically a certainty to May 14 when the "leaders" of the movement which had frightened them by its immensity, came sheepishly to Baldwin to announce the surrander.

Council, Not Movement.

Postgate insists that it was the council, and not the movement, which failed. Permitting its fears to overwhelm it, that body of timid parliamentarians called off the strike unconditionally and temporarily, at least, wrecked the unity and courage of the workers.

Says the writer: "Nothing was done for the miners. No effort was made to help the theusands who are in prison anffering spiteful sentences for carrying out the council's orders. All —Right and Left—of the council are in it."

For the first time the inside story of the leaders' surrender is given. One is appalled at the impudence and cowardice of the men who were charged with the success of the powerful weapon of the British strikers.

The Surrender.

"The council," relates Postgate, "brought the Samuel memorandum to the miners, expecting an ecstatic welcome . . . At this time there was some sort of an undertaking that the government would accept the memorandum, if the miners did—not otherwise. Baldwin delayed, altered it and the memorandum, of course, was void. Soma naturel pique followed, and the council, meeting for only half an hour, decided there was no point in continuing the struggle, and, with incredible levity, called the strike off. A deputation went to the Downing street to convey the message to the premier. Baldwin sent down to say, 'He did not desire to converse with them.' The delegation replied that they had not come to converse, only to announce their surrender. Then they were admitted. And that was the end.

"The Brass Knuckles Santa Claus," by Robert Dunn, is a vivid account of the company unionism of the New York interhorough, with its yellow-dog agreements, revealed by the recent strike of the subway workers. Dunn applies his shrewd, incisive method to the situation and the "American Labor Movement" comes in for some comments that are extremely enlightening.

AMERICAN WORKER CORRESPONDENT,

Worker Correspondents in Yalta, U. S. S. R.

Note.—Here is one of the first contributions in the exchange of correspondence between the workers-writers of the Pravda, Russian Communist daily at Moscow, and The DAILY WORKER. It is from Yalta, in Soviet Crimea. Contributions of American worker correspondents are published in the Soviet press. Detailed announcement in the current issue of the American Worker Correspondent just off the press.

By L. GENDIN,

Member of Bureau of the Worker Correspondant Circle Provinciai instituta.

THE worker correspondents in Yalta first became organized in the autumn of 1924. Prior to this date about 10 wall newspapers existed thruout the whole district in the large enterprises. There were also individual workers' correspondents of various printed papers, but there was absolutely no common center, and the work was very unsystematic owing to the youth and inexperience of the whole movement. There was no accurate record. The approximate estimate was 60 to 70 worker correspondents (with a few peasant correspondents).

Creation of Town Bureau.

November, 1924, the first attempt was made to get together. A general town bureau of worker correspondents was formed. It endeavored to cover the whole district. This was difficult and gave less results. The following figures were given in the report of the Second District Worker Correspondents' Conference (November, 1925) as to the condition of the organization after a year's work:

Wall Newspapers—21 (this figure is considerably lower than the actual number).

Worker and Farmer Correspondent Circles—9 (with an active membership of 70 to 80).

Total number of worker and village correspondents about 200.

The number of bodies of our correspondents appearing in the local press (Simferopol and Sevastopol) is 90 to 100 a month. The percentage inserted is 35 to 40 per cent. Another 20 to 25 per cent is utilized by the editors in other ways.

The idea itself, hitherto not widely known to the broad masses of workers and trade union members, quickly became popular. The wall newspapers grew both in quantity and quality. In order to qualify members for editorial boards a college was started. In one club a "Worker Correspondants' Corner" was formed.

Abolition of Town Bureau.

At the Second Worker and Peasant Correspondent Conference, in connection with the adoption of new organizational forms thruout the whole union, it was decided to liquidate the general town bureau and transfer the center of gravity to worker correspondent circles connected with the wall newspapers. These were to be under the guidance of our press, by means of letters of instruction to the circles.

But it shonld be said that at first, after tha naw organization, work began to decline and the worker and village correspondent organization began to be weakened and split up. The circles received no answers to their frequant appeals to the papers. There was no guidence whatsoever.

In general Yalta has spectal difficulties for the development of the worker and farmer correspondants' movement. It has not its own printed newspaper which in itself hinders the development of worker correspondents, but whet is still worse, there is also a struggle for circulation on the part of two printed newspapers each competing has first place (Simferopol and Sevastopol).

This struggla also implicates the worker correspondants, even to the extent of dividing them into "hours" and the "others" and demoralising tha whole movement.

Fortnetely, during the last few months this question has become considerably less acute. A special instructor was appointed by the district committee of the All-Soviat Union Communist Party for worker and farmar correspondent work.

New circles were organised, the old ones strengthened, and the workers' correspondent movement regained zest.

Present Position.

At the present time the position of the organization (on a district scale) is as follows:

Wall newspapers—60 to 70 (30 investigated and studied).

Worker correspondents—about 300.

Farmer correspondents—70.

Worker-Farmer correspondent circles—22 (with about 100 activa members).

The circles meet regularly and study according to a definite program. They also receive periodical literature. Methodical guidance is conducted thru the seminary for the editorial boards and active workers (study circles twice a month).

There is also a monthly general town meeting of workar correspondents and periodical instruction of circles by an instructor.

There is also a remarkable increase of young correspondents, and their newspapers (no figuras available).

Now mein attanion is being davoted to ensuring that questions immediately concerning the construction of our country are fully responded to in time.

For instance, the campaign "for economy" is now being conducted was brought up at the general town conference. This question was treated in the circle where raports were given by the directors of the enterprises in which the circles are at work. The wall newspapers devote a good deal of space to dafects in production.

At the present time energetic preparations are being made for the celebration of "Press Day."

The worker and farmer correspondent movement of our district has now entered from the stage of instability and uncertainty. The wall newspapers are commencing fully to picture the life and ways of our production and have rejected general themes.

Despite certain fluidity amongst the masses of worker and farmer correspondents, a strong nucleus has been moulded which has grown up with the movement and become incorporated in it.

The correspondent movement is molding comrades before our very eyes, turning them into activa social workers, vigilantly examining all phenomana of our life. The worker correspondents are developing at work which is one of the most valuable factors of the movement.

International Connections.

We must talk of our international connections separately.

We commenced this work at the end of 1924. To our first letter which we sent to the Central Control Committee of Communist International sent to a German paper, we et once received six replies from various parts of Germany.

The general town bureau of worker correspondents drew various clubs of the town and district into correspondence, having given them various addresses. Besides this a few members of tha bureau was appointed to guide this work. Besides correspondence with individual comrades, we demanded thru them to get into touch with various organisations, tha this was not always successful. For instance, we succeeded in linking up [illegible] men's group of the Communist Party of Germany in Weisbaden. Our twofold attempt to get into contact with the Mannheim workers' paper ended in failure.

Besides letters we sometimes sent notes to the foreign press on themes provided by the Agitprop of the Executive Committee of the Communist International.

There is no accurate account of work done, as many comrades in the district on receiving an address write directly to their correspondents and send them our foreign section of the Agitprop of the Executive Council of the Communist International.

The approximate figures are as follows:

Correspondents (foreign) 10, of whom 5 write regularly. According to countries they are distributed—7 in Germany and 1 each in Great Britain, America and Holland.

We also send comradas photographs of our celabrations, conferances, and also literature, while we receive from them large quantities of books, postcards, newspaper cuttings, albums.

In changing over to the new forms of work, worker, correspondents' circles, we are endeavoring to hand this correspondence over to the circles. At the present time three circles are conducting work quite satisfactorily.

There is no doubt that the worker correspondent circles can develop this work still more. But there are many difficulties to be overcome. In order [illegible]

[illegible] ity, the various circles should be attached to foreign newspapers, but here already mentioned that our attempts at this have so far been without result.

It is a question of general centralisation and guidance undoubtedly here in the locality also. Experience has shown that in the localities also, thara must be some kind of center uniting the work. Formerly, our general town bureau was such a center. When it was abolished—in order not to abandon the work—it was a member of the bureau appointed to the foreign section of the Agitprop of the Executive Council of the Communist International.

The great interest which this correspondence evokes both in our country and abroad demands that the present amateurishness of our work be overcome. The Yalta workers' correspondent movement, therefore, thoroly approves the decision of the conference of delegates of the Sixth Plenum of the Executive Council of the Communist International, and the workers' correspondents of Yalta to work out this question carafully and concentrate the guidance of international connections in the hands of the Agitprop of the Executive Council of the Communist International. Before we were aware that such a conference would be convened, we requested the "Worker and Farmer Correspondent" to bring this question up on the agenda of the Third All-Union Congress.

Britain Has Cause to Worry

Thanks to the right wing labor leaders, Downing Street is reasonably assured that the miners' strike which has been so damaging to the country's commercial life will not develop into a serious political crisis for the government. What in ordinary times would keep government officials awake nights is now left to the mercies of the labor fakers who can be depended on to club the miners into surrender if they possibly can.

Internationally the prospects are black for the empire. A London dispatch tells us that Downing Street is alarmed over the growing influence of the Soviet Union in the Orient and at its success in extending neutrality pacts with countries bordering on the U. S. S. R.

Great Britain tried to isolate the Soviet Union by drawing a cordon of hostile puppet states along her western border from Finland to the Black Sea. But the Soviet Union has made a breach in the western wall and in the east Great Britain is decidedly on the defensive.

Yesterday's dispatches indicate that Britain has intervened in China with arms, on a considerable scale. It is also interesting to learn that in the first serious clash with the Cantonese the British were repulsed with heavy losses. Wu Pei Fu, the British tool, has suffered several defeats and his armies are on the point of surrendering en masse.

When the Cantonese succeed in making contact with the national armies under General Feng, the unification of China will be in sight as the only other serious obstacle to unity is General Chang Tso-Lin, the Japanese puppet. The armies of the people will be in a position to dispose of Chang when Wu Pei-Fu's military power is destroyed. All this is bad news for Britain.

The revenues derived from China by the British have been enormous. It all probability they will move heaven and earth to retain some footing there. It looks now as if they would not be successful. Neither the United States nor Japan cares to pull any British chestnuts out of the Chinese fire. The United States least of any.

The fall of British influence in China will have far-reaching political consequences in the Orient and particularly in those two countries where British power is so vulnerable: India and Egypt. Of course, Britain blames all her misfortunes on the Soviet Union. It is true that Soviet policy is one of peace and aid to the struggling subject and semi-subject peoples of the world and it happens that British policy is quite the opposite. Naturally there are clashes. The people involved have little difficulty in recognizing a friend in the Soviet Union and an implacable foe in the government of the robber empire.

The Careful Stepper

Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, declared in a Labor Day speech that "the trade unions accept the charge that they are a step-at-a-time movement. This is the law of social development, as against the proposal of short cuts that invariably bring bitter disillusion to those who accept the alluring doctrine."

Is it the law of social development? Morrison stated a half-truth, which is the most vicious kind of a lie. It is true that evolution is a gradual process but every so often, human society finds the pace too slow. Then there is a grand burst and revolution is on. A Frank Morrison, who looks at the world thru rose-colored glasses, does not relish those grand smash-ups. But they come.

If Morrison takes a look into his history he will note the fact that all outstanding social changes were ushered in by revolution. This may be regrettable but it appears to be inevitable.

The trouble with the "step-at-a-time" policy is that it serves the present bosses of society. There can be no guaranteed improvement of the conditions of the working class under capitalism. Only when the workers become the masters of their own fate will they have security and the right to map out the future. The step-at-a-time policy has proven its futility in Europe. It has left the workers saddled with capitalist militarism, long hours of labor and a low standard of living. As the capitalist system progressively decays in Europe we find the capitalists insisting on their luxuries at the expense of the workers. This means that the capitalists live on their former grand scale while they reduce the miserable living standards of the producers.

We have on the other hand the example of the Soviet Union. There the workers seized power while the seizing was good, and despite the most appalling difficulties they have raised the workers' standard higher than what obtained during the czarist regime. They have succeeded in restoring industry to its pre-war standard and agriculture above the pre-war level. They have done this without any considerable help from abroad. In fact even since the capitalist powers decided to call off their war dogs they have been busy intriguing the Soviet Union.

Against the step-at-a-time policy of the social-democrats of Europe we set up the revolutionary policy of the Communists. Let the facts speak for themselves. The standard of living of the workers and peasants in the Soviet Union is rising. That of the workers in the rest of Europe is descending. This pudding talks.

General Lincoln C. Andrews, assistant secretary in charge of prohibition enforcement, is again about to resign. The general returned recently from England and boasted of having negotiated a rum treaty with the British government. There was nothing to that, but the general got some publicity by soaking his pancakes in champagne on board the ship that brought him back from Europe.

If the foreign war debts to the United States were cancelled international bankers could see vistons of greater profits from loans to foreign interests. We bet dollars to glotys that those generous bankers will not agitate for the cancellation of the half billion Russian debt.

ADD 10,000 NEW MEMBERS, LABOR DEFENSE PLAN

Elizabeth Gurley Flynn to Tour Country

"Ten thousand new members by the first of the year!" was the slogan adopted at the first meeting of the national committee of International Labor Defense following its successful second annual conference just concluded here.

Detailed plans for an intensive organization drive which speakers of national reputation will tour the length and breadth of the country and a great amount of popular propaganda literature be issued were adopted at this meeting. Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, the newly-elected chairman of the I. L. D. is to make a tour of the country from coast to coast immediately after election day and the response from various sections of the country to the proposed tour is indicative of the popularity that will attend it.

Cannon to Tour.

In addition, James P. Cannon, re-elected secretary of the organization, will follow Miss Flynn to tighten up the organizational lines and to consult and advise with local sections on the broadening and improvement of the activity. Membership meetings will be held in most of the large cities for this purpose.

The enthusiasm of the delegates who attended the conference is one of the guarantees of a new spirit of work and activity in the ranks of the organization. Membership meetings of I. L. D. are already being planned in numerous cities so that the conference delegates may be able to report back to their constituencies and lay plans locally for the carrying into effect of the decisions adopted at the national gathering. In addition, many cities will organize their own conferences on a local scale to draw up a program of work in consonance with the national conference decisions.

Other Campaigns.

Proposals for various other campaigns were discussed at the meeting of the national committee and a new executive committee elected to carry them out. The new executive committee includes all those on the committee last year, with some additions. The full committee now stands as follows: Edward Carsworth, Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, James P. Cannon, Fred Mann, Ralph Chaplin, George Maurer, Rose Karsner, D. J. Bentall, John Edmondson, Harrison George, Henry Corbishley, Charles Gray and C. E. Ruthenberg. Miss Flynn is now chairman, with E. C. Wentworth re-elected vice-chairman and James P. Cannon secretary.

Prevent Milstein from Appointing Tellers in Fur Workers' Election

By a Worker Correspondent.

At Tuesday's meeting of the executive board of the Fur Workers' Union the Progressives were able to head off an attempt by Milstein and his reactionary machine to throw all but his own candidates off the ballot.

The meeting was attended by the members of the board, the present incumbents in office, and the nominees who should go on the ballot as a result of the nominations meeting held last week after being once broken up by Milstein's gang.

Milstein's program was to have the executive board deny J. Sonnenschein, nominee for recording secretary, and Robert Goldstein, nominee for vice-president, a place on the ballot, because of technical objections.

But the best part of his scheme was to do away with the procedure of elections found satisfactory in recent years, and which consists of having tellers to count the votes appointed at a meeting of the members. Milstein proposed to have his machine, thru the executive board, appoint the tellers, and not to have any membership meeting. This plan to steal the election outright was successfully defeated.

Chairman Goldberg of Local 45 forced Milstein to abide by the constitution of the union, but the latter retaliated by breaking up the meeting. The election is next Tuesday.

COAL MINERS IN OHIO ARE FACING STARVATION, SAYS GOV. DONAHEY

(Special to The Daily Worker)

COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 8.—Visualizing "virtual starvation of the unfortunate miners and their families during the cold months which confront us," and pointing out that work or aims must be given coal miners now idle, Governer Vic Donahey today issued a proclamation asking Ohio coal users to "Buy Ohio Coal Now."

Women and Children Aid Miners in W. Va. Coal Strike

As the photos show, women and children are playing important parts in the long drawn-out strike of the miners of West Virginia for closed shop and decent working conditions. Above, women at work in one of the gardens of a barracks village near Fairmont. Below, men, women and children walking from their barracks to the picket line outside the mines.

SPAIN SEETHES WITH REBELLION AGAINST DICTATOR; COMMUNISTS POINT TO SOCIALIST TREACHERY

By a Spanish Worker.

MADRID (By Mail).—Immediately on discovery of the recent plot of the army officers, Primo de Rivera's government made public declarations in the controlled press to the effect that severe punishment would be meted out to the leaders of the movement.

Some days later, the feeling of the military dictatorship was entirely different, and Primo de Rivera influenced the military judge who tried the case, so far as to give an air of lesser importance to it; and, according to this plan, General Aguilera, the chief of the revolutionary movement, was imprisoned for only 20 days, while civilian leaders were also soon at liberty.

Only the Communists were excepted. At present only six officers of the army and four intellectual republicans are kept in jail.

Military Rebellion Increases.

The rebellion is continuously increasing and the hostility against Primo de Rivera is more acute every day. A big part of the army stands by the old policy that never accepted the military dictatorship. The artillery on account of professional questions is even more serious if the increasing number of republican officers is considered.

Since the beginning of the century the army has always been a part of any political struggle. Conspiracies against the government are planned and openly organized in the court yards of regimental quarters. And the present government, which is not strong enough to stop them, is very much upset at the new republican feeling that is invading the army.

Socialists and Government.

The "neutral" position taken by the socialist party from the very first day of Primo de Rivera's coup d'etat, is maintaining the military dictatorship. This friendly attitude is being recompensed by the government. Consequently, in the last plot, militants of the political party were imprisoned, democrats, republicans, anarchists and Communists—but the socialists. The socialists were excepted and not one member of their party was distrusted.

The Spanish working class points out sharply this treason of the social democrats. Not only the proletarian is hostile to the socialists, the intellectuals, democrats and all the Spanish middle class are constantly accusing the socialist party of being in connection with the dictatorship.

Socialist Party Doomed.

This will mean the immediate condemnation of the Spanish socialist party as soon as Primo de Rivera's government should end. The socialists will not be able to endure the criticism of their present reactionism. On the other hand they confront a Communist Party each day growing stronger in spite of the present persecution. The working class clearly sees that the Communists have fought and will always fight in the front line.

The Economic Crisis.

The military rebellion coincides with a very difficult and general economic situation that comprises the whole country. As the peseta falls in value and the government does not know what the solution is of the problem. Primo de Rivera constantly makes public declarations of prosperity to gain the confidence of the capitalists.

But everybody knows that a severe crisis exists in the industrial districts. Forty per cent of the metal workers and thirty per cent of the textile workers are unemployed in Barcelona. The crisis in Vizcaye is the severest ever known.

The colonization of the country by foreign firms makes the problem still more serious. A great competition is going on between the big American and English capitalist groups.

MUSICIANS MAY CALL NATIONAL STRIKE IN SUPPORT OF CHICAGO

cago Federation of Musicians, whose several conferences with theatre owners' representatives have ended in deadlocks.

Theatre Crowds Silm.

A spokesman for the union told The DAILY WORKER at Musicians' Union headquarters, 175 W. Washington St., that "despite the statements appearing in the daily press, the movie theaters, especially in the loop, are not doing good business. The attendance is very slim indeed and the theaters are suffering losses despite their very slight reduction in prices."

A Tour of the Loop Theaters Verified This.

The spirit of the union men, hundreds of whom were jammed into the large hall in which the Chicago Federation of Labor meets in the same building as the union offices, was of a high order and they were confident that the owners would be brot to time. Several members assured The DAILY WORKER the theaters were losing money and that patrons were extremely dissatisfied with the musicless programs being offered in the 400 attack movie houses.

Union officials believe it will be unnecessary to resort to picketing since the strike has received widespread publicity and the absence of the music in the theaters is a sufficient reminder of the fact that the musicians are making demands.

Mr. Petrillo reiterated today the stand of the union on the question of the duration of contract and the wage of at least four musicians in the smaller houses, both questions at issue between the men and the owners. He said that in 1920 the houses raised the price of admission 50 per cent with the assurance that more music would be supplied with the programs. Now, he said, they wish to dispense with some of the musicians without a commensurate reduction of admission prices, which showed the insincerity of the owners' actions.

Other allied theatrical unions had nothing further to say regarding the probability of their coming out with the musicians. An official of the stagehands said Tuesday that they were ready to go out if called if the musicians requested it.

Tomsky Points To Lesson.

MOSCOW, Sept. 8. — Barred from visiting the British Trade Union Congress by the decree of the British government, Michael Tomsky, head of the Soviet Labor Union delegation which has thus been denied entrance to England, declared that the British government is seeking every means to isolate the miners of Britain from those who have proven to be their greatest friends, the Russian workers.

Had not the General Council issued orders calling off the General Strike, says Tomsky, Great Britain might already have had "no government of lords and mine owners to refuse admission to the Soviet delegates, but a workmen's government to give a cordial welcome to their fellow workers from the Soviet Union."

Tomsky adds that it is now plain that the General Council made a great mistake by proclaiming that the strike was purely economic and not political

HILLMAN SUSPENDS TWO PROGRESSIVE MEMBERS OF ROCHESTER A. C. W.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Sept. 8.—Several executive board members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union appeared here suddenly from New York City and without due notice to the membership called a special meeting at which the selective nature of the gathering was apparent at first glance.

President Sidney Hillman delivered a speech in which he attacked the progressive members of the union and declared members Team and Sugarman suspended from the union. These two members have been leaders of the progressive forces in the Rochester locals of the union. They were both active members of the Amalgamatad far many years and were naithar tried ner given a chance to defend themselves.

It is understood that the large locals numbers 200 and 227 of Rochester are to be reorganized by the general executive board.

fore loor, but the patronage from two senators should go a long way to stone for the loss of the governorship to Fred L. Zimmerman, who defeated Attorney General Hermen L. Ekern, on the LaFollette slate. Zimmerman made his campaign slogan the defeat of the "Madison ring," a ringing name for the present Blaine-LaFollette leadership.

Break Helped Lenroot.

Undoubtedly Zimmerman's break with the LaFollette family helped Lenroot make such a good showing. Rumors have been flying around that Philip LaFollette would run for governor in the finals against Zimmerman but others are of the opinion that the Blaine-LaFollette forces will negotiate a peace agreement with the gubernatorial nominee and patch up the wreckage.

Lenroot's defeat is a serious blow to the administration and to the world court and prohibition causes.

Zimmerman Beats Ekern.

According to vote tabulations in 1,754 precincts out of a total of 3,798, Blaine got 142,967 and Lenroot, 132,206. It was not believed that the senator would be able to overcome this lead.

Zimmerman's total from 1,340 precincts was 96,634 with 80,102 for Ekern.

To Attack Vare and Smith.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8. — The democrats are to lose no time in challenging the right of Wm. S. Vare of Pennsylvania, and Col. Frank L. Smith of Illinois, to sit as members of the senate following their elections in November.

This was made certain today by the announcement of Senator Ashurst, democrat of Arizona, that he will challenge their right even to take the oath of office, thus the fight to oust Vare and Smith will begin on the opening day of the seventieth congress.

Hunt Wins in Arizona.

PHOENIX, Ariz., Sept. 8.—Gov. G. W. P. Hunt, democratic gubernatorial candidate who campaigned on an anti-boulder dam platform, apparently has won his sixth consecutive nomination today.

INCREASE SHIPMENTS OF SCAB COAL

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

JACKSON D. CARLISLE of Chicago is no more than anybody else would be after having his head almost completely separated from his body by a sharp instrument, with suspicious fixed on an axe. Our interest centers on Carlisle because of his connections with various adventures that did not have the welfare of anybody in particular, except Carlisle in mind. One of these was the reactionary Orozco revolt in Mexico in 1912 against the Madero government.

ONE of Carlisle's accomplishments in that revolt was attaching boxes of dynamite to the cowcatcher of a locomotive, opening the throttle and running it into the ranks of the Madero troops, many of whom were slaughtered by the ensuing explosion. Now, Carlisle's deserting friends would not be at all surprised to learn that Carlisle got the axe from some one who did not appreciate his services to civilization. The fellow who said that the wages of sin is death said a mouthful tho all people except christian scientists die sooner or later.

WAS Frank Farrington justified in accepting a position from a coal company at five times the salary paid him by the Illinois Miners' Union? All progressive trade unionists will say "No!" The reactionaries will say nothing, not wishing to put anything on paper that could be quoted against them when they cash in. Farrington is no more of a political corpse for having accepted a salary from the Peabody Coal company than William H. Wilson, in accepting a paid job in the Wilson cabinet. Yet Wilson is supported for senator in Pennsylvania on the democrat ticket by the so-called labor press that will not dare excoriate Farrington.

FARRINGTON has done all the harm he could to the Illinois miners while he was their district president. In all probability his salary is much in the nature of a compensation for past services to the Peabody Coal company as for what he may be able to do for them in the future. It would be well for the coal miners of the United States if John L. Lewis got as some operator's payroll and stopped drawing a large salary from the international union.

THE Coolidge backers for another term insist that the man who claimed that he broke the Boston police strike is responsible for the prosperity that obtains in this country at the present time. Needless to say, the workers who produce the wealth receive only a minority fraction of it. Coolidge has no more to do with it than the ashes of King Tut, but his presence in the White House secures capital that in case the workers insist on getting a bigger slice of this prosperity, the injunction will be kept busy and the armed forces, if necessary.

QUEEN MARIE of Roumania will not be able to get here as soon as she expected, owing to the inability of the steamship companies to provide her with a royal suite. Marie will not travel otherwise. All the royal suites were engaged by sausage magnates and screen princesses and what had the queen of Roumania on them? Nothing! One of these suites costs $5,000 for a one-way trip. This means that the queen will drop $10,000 for the two-way jaunt.

ROUMANIA is rich in mineral wealth, but is hampered by a reactionary and grafting government. Its aristocracy is about the most useless aggregation of parasites in Europe. Marie is coming here on a fishing expedition. She is a good collector and has a daughter for sale. If she can get rid of the daughter on the American market, before queens get to hustling each other on Michigan Avenue, she should be able to

REPORTED SPEECH BY JOSEPH STALIN REPUDIATING WORLD REVOLUTION IS BRANDED MENDACIOUS FALSEHOOD

ABOUT the middle of August the International News Service (Hearst) carried what purported to be the report of a speech by Joseph Stalin, secretary of the Communist Party of the Union of Soviet Republics, at the plenary session of the Central Committee of that party. This speech was also reprinted by the New Leader, the New York socialist organ, on August 14.

In this speech Stalin is made to say, among other things, the following:

"This person (again pointing at Zinoviev) thru his unguarded, idiotic utterances has brought about a situation making it impossible for our foreign bureau to come to any measure of agreement or understanding with the outside world, without whose credit or manufactured goods Russia cannot exist much longer.

"CapitalIzing his early association with our beloved leader he has kept world public opinion in constant and perpetual fear of Russia. He alone is responsible for the failure of a treaty with England. His idiotic acts and talks alienated even the sympathies of those in America against what they termed 'world revolution.'

"Enough of that talk! Enough of that idiotic slogan! Enough of that senseless letter writing to every idiot in foreign countries who pictures himself as a man who can lead millions to rebellion against capitalism.

"That person (still pointing his finger at Zinoviev) has alienated the sympathy of even every socialist against us thruout the world.

"He has made our regime an anthema to English socialism.

"He has made us the laughing stock of the world. And what for?

"We knew Russia, and because we knew the Russian mind our revolution was successful.

"But do we know the mind of the American proletarian?

"Did we know the mind of the English working man?

"We did not.

"But thanks to that person (pointing at Zinoviev) we have learned considerable of the attitude of the working class in every industrial country. And that attitude is against us."

* * * *

EVERYONE having the slightest knowledge of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and its leader, knew that this speech was a fabrication and that Stalin could not have made such a speech, because Stalin and the whole leadership of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union are earnest supporters of the Communist international and of the viewpoint that the final triumph of the workers' revolution in the Soviet Union can only come thru the triumph of the world proletarian revolution.

The official repudiation and branding of the above speech as an invention of some newspaper correspondent is now in the hands of the Central Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party, in the form of the following telegram from John Pepper, chief of the agitation and propaganda department of the Communist International:

Workers (Communist) Party of America, Chicago, Ill.

Report Stalin's speech in New Leader, Aug. 14th, is absolute fabrication.—PEPPER.

THIS example of mendacity in perverting events in the Soviet Union should be a warning to all workers to look with suspicion upon similar reports of conditions in the Soviet Union.

The workers' and peasants' government of the Soviet Union is step by step overcoming the difficulties of reconstruction of its economic system and building up a new social order after years of imperialist war, proletarian revolution and counter-revolution. The standard of life of the workers and peasants is rising. They are free from the oppression and exploitation of capitalism. They are creating a new social life. Capitalism is gone forever so far as the Soviet Union is concerned and the socialist economy is developing in its place.

THE Communist Party of the Soviet Union, in spite of the differences which have arisen regarding internal policy, is a unit in the fight to build a socialist agronomic system and for the world proletarian revolution. The Soviet government is stronger than ever and has the loyal enthusiastic support of the great masses of workers and peasants.

The capitalist and socialist enemies of the Soviet Union may wish that conditions in the Soviet Union were otherwise, but the facts are that the progress of the Soviet Union in creating a workers' society continue to be the great inspiration of the workers and farmers the world over to take up the revolutionary struggle against capitalism and to establish their own workers' and farmers' government to end the rule of capitalist exploitation and oppression.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Sept. 9.—Daniel Lowe, white, alias "Red" Lowe, a boss stevedore, was charged with criminally assaulting three pretty Negro girls and a white girl, in indictments returned last week by the Duval county grand jury. Judge Daniel A. Simmons was on the bench in circuit court when the grand jury made its report.

MUSIC STRIKE CONTINUES AS LEADERS TALK

Still Deadlocked Over New Agreement

At a late hour Thursday afternoon representatives of the striking musicians and the movie exhibitors' association were in conference at the Sherman Hotel attempting to reach an agreement on the remaining points at dispute between the two contestants, deadlocked now since last Sunday night.

Still Talking.

The 3,000 members of Local 10 of the Chicago Federation of Musicians were represented by James C. Petrillo, local president, and John C. Gamble, international vice-president here, representing the international office of the union. The afternoon conference began at 2 p. m. after an all Wednesday night conference that broke up at 4 a. m. with no agreement in sight.

The theaters continued to run without music and the attendance continued to decrease as movie patrons discovered that musicless shows are not

FEED THE STRIKE CHILDREN!

NEW YORK, Sept. 9 (FP)—"On my return from America have found hideous suffering," cables Ellen Wilkinson, M. P., member of the British labor delegation which came to the United States for relief to the striking British miners.

"Food kitchens closing down for lack of funds. Children unable to attend school for meals because they have no clothes or boots. Serious hunger in areas where guardians have stopped all relief. Need immediate and desperate."

Miners and Wives Fight Bravely on Despite Hunger

Here is a recent scene in the coal fields of Wales showing miners and their wives, hungry no doubt, but in a spirited mood on their way to demonstrate before the town hall of Mansfield to demand larger grants of food from the Poor Law Guardians who have been withholding aid in an effort to break the morale of the strikers.

DAUGHERTY AND LEGION PATRIOT IN GRAFT TRIAL

Charged with Accepting Gigantic Bribe

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—What promises to be one of the most sensational trials in American history opened here a few days ago when former attorney ganeral, Henry M. Daugherty, and former alien property custodian, Thomas W. Miller, founder of the American Legion, were charged with having accepted a bribe of $441,000 in return for facilitating the return of German property seized under the trading with the enamy act after this country daolared war on Germany.

Array of Counsel

The two defendants have an imposing array of counsel headed by Max Stour and William Rand. Judge Mack is presiding over the trial.

A jury was speedily selected.

Labor is intensely interested in Daugherty because of his anti-labor record and little less in Miller because he was one of the organizers of the strike-breaking American Legion.

Both defendants are liable to a sentence of two years each and a fine of $10,000.

Defrauding Charge.

The two men, members of the Harding administration, are charged with "defrauding the government of their unprejudiced and unbiased services" thru the return of $7,000,000 in assets to the American Metals Company, a German-owned concern, for a consideration of $441,000 in cash and Liberty bonds.

Miller Appointed By Harding.

Thru this act Col. Miller was appointed by President Harding as alien property custodian. His job was to seize and hold any property in the United States owned by enemy aliens, and to act as its trustee until it should be disposed of by congress.

The act also provided that should any seizure be made by mistake the president then had the power to return the property to its owner. This power the president transferred to Daugherty.

St. Louis to Hold Tag Day for Relief of Passaic Strike

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 9. — The Chicago office of the General Relief Committee of Textile Strikers, thru the field organizer Rebecca Grecht, has addressed an appeal to the St. Louis Central Trades and Labor Union calling upon them to elect a committee for Passaic textile strike relief. The appeal urges that this committee be authorized to make a drive among the local unions in St. Louis for donations, and also to arrange a ball or other affair.

The Central Labor Unions meets this coming Sunday, when it is expected to take action on the appeal. Favorable action by this body will give a decided impetus to relief work in St. Louis.

Meanwhile arrangements have been made by sympathizers of the Passaic strikers for a tag day to be held this coming Saturday, Sept. 11th. All organizations are urged to participate.

Volunteers for the tag day should report to the following stations any time on Saturday.

WHITE TERROR BUTCHER KILLS CUBAN WORKERS

Tale of Horrors Told of Imperialist Rule

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Sept. 9—Another leader of the last Cuban railway strike has been killed. The conservative Cuban Herald, El Sol, the Daily Marina Journal—Havana newspapers—and letters from Cuban workers to their friends in New York tell the story of this latest victim of fascist methods under President Gerardo Machado, who is supported by American capital. Balbomero Dumenico, treasurer of the railway union, was shot dead on his doorstap as he tried to enter his house at 8 o'clock the evening of Aug. 22.

True to His Class.

Dumenico was nationally known in the Cuban labor movement and well liked. He leaves a wife and four mall children without support in heir home at Cienfuegos. Seventeen workers were killed during the railroad strike for their part in it.

Papers printing accounts of the fascist terrorism against the workers, whether labor or liberal papers, are suppressed and their editors imprisoned. The Educacion Obrera is the latest to be hit. Manuel Landrove, secretary of the harbor workers' union, and others have been imprisoned for an article criticizing the government.

White Terror.

Two recent letters from Cuban workers read:

"The finding of dead bodies of active union men is a daily occurrence both in the city and in the village.

"The gunboat Maximo Gomez is anchored in the Havana harbor and is used as a floating jail to hold the arrested until the arrival of the trans-Atlantic liners which will take them away to unknown destinations as deportees. It is a well known fact that some of these unfortunates are secretly thrown into the water at night.

"By order of the dictator Machado, all union men known to be ac-

STRIKEBREAKER FUEL SENT FROM PHILADELPHIA

New York May Also Be Added to Scab Ports

By GORDON CASCADEN
(Special to The Daily Worker)

NORFOLK, Va., Sept. 9. — Here are two outstanding developments in the news about the dispatch of coal from North America to smash the British miners' strike:

1. Possible shipment of coal from Philadelphia and New York to Britain.

2. Breaking of all world's records for shipment of coal from the United states overseas, by Hampton Roads during August.

Day and night the world's three largest coal dumping piers, all of them located here, are working.

But that does not satisfy Stanley Baldwin, prime minister of the British empire and generalissimo of capital's forces in this war to crush British labor.

"More Speed," is Order.

"Rush more ships to Britain and hasten loading in American ports," is the ultimatum received by British agents here.

For this reason plans are in the making to add Philadelphia and, possibly, New York to Hampton Roads and Baltimore as "scab" coal exporting ports.

Central Pennsylvania's bituminous coal fields may have a chance to get in the game thru feeding coal to coal-carrying ships in Philadelphia and New York.

This would let them share in the new prosperity with the New River and Pocahontas area, now supplying Hampton Roads and Baltimore. It would also benefit coal carrying railroads running from Pennsylvania fields.

Work Day and Night.

But Hampton Roads need not worry about these plans, its merchants, growing rotten on profits made thru purchases of longshoremen and others working night and day to load scab coal on ships, may continue to gloat over their profits.

Hampton Roads has again smashed all records for shipment of coal overseas, according to figures for the month of August issued today.

Even this month's own previous record, made in July, has been passed, Norfolk and Newport News, twin ports of Hampton Roads, getting a place in the black pages of the future history of "scabbery" as the greatest marine center for shipment of coal to break the British miners' strike.

Near 2,000,000 Tons A Month.

The three sets of coal terminals here, under spur of demand resulting from the British miners' strike against beet conditions, shipped 2,782,818 tons, worth approximately $14,000,000, in thirty-one days.

The new record was made with little to spare, however, for July dumpings were but 7,500 tons below those of August.

But July was an unusual month. This port, in its long history of commerce in coal, never saved for more than 2,000,000 tons in a single month before this year, with the exception of one month. That month was during the war period when European nations were busy killing one another in the "world war for democracy," instead of digging coal.

Dumpings during August were 974,324 tons, or nearly fifty per cent greater than during August of last year.

Tired But Prosperous.

Over worked participants in this great effort to break the British miners' strike, quite naturally, are tired physically. They have good reason. Railroad crews on all the divisions between here and the mines are overworked. Longshoremen here are laboring day and night. Business men, benefiting from the prosperity of the "community," are busy supervising present activities and making plans for investment of their extraordinary profits.

But tired as may be all those engaged in shipment of this scab coal

Barn Robbers Indicted.

Seven true bills, four charging assault with intent to kill and three charging robbery with a gun, were returned by a grand jury here today against Frances Quinn, Gladys Moody and Ernest Delaverge, sole surviving participants in the spectacular attempted robbery of the Courtlead car barns here a short time ago. Three other participants were killed by police.

PRESIDENT ASKS ENGINEERS HELP BRITISH STRIKE

Urges American Labor Equal Russian Gift

(Special to The Daily Worker)

CLEVELAND, O., Sept. 9.—A direct appeal to the workers of America to support the striking miners of Great Britain has been made over his signature by Acting President L. E. Gilfling, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, in the organization journal for September. In addition to this individual letters have been sent by the international headquarters to each of the 88,000 members of the brotherhood, urging them to donate to the relief of the British miners' families.

Superb Heroism.

President Grifling says in his signed article:

"In all trade union history there is not a finer example of loyalty to their union nor to one another than is shown by these hard-pressed British workers. With superb heroism they are sticking out until they secure economic justice, even tho the power of the British tory government is arrayed against them."

Executives Resolve.

The message of President Grifling recalls the fact that the recent meeting in Washington of the Associated Railway Union executives heard from the delegation of British miners, then touring the United States a story of extreme hardships in the mine fields, and that the executives' meeting went on record to make an appeal for contributions.

The international unions among the railroad organizations have not as yet contributed directly, but several internationals connected with the A. F. of L. have given a thousand dollars or so to the miners' cause.

Follow Russian Example.

Grifling's message calls attention to the gifts of the Russian workers in these words:

"The labor movements of France, Belgium, Germany, Russia and other European countries are contributing with equal generosity, one national union having already collected and sent in over two and one-half million dollars for the miners' relief fund.

And he adds in his appeal for contributions a wish that the American workers may do as well: "I am confident that the workers of America and the members of this brotherhood in particular will be equally responsive to the dictates of our common humanity and the fraternal bond that unites us with our brother workers of all lands."

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR ISSUES SECOND APPEAL FOR AID TO BE SENT TO BRITISH MINERS

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—All international and national unions, state and local central labor bodies, and local trade unions are asked, by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor in a second appeal for aid for the starving families of the British mine strikers, to give generously—"give to the limit of your ability."

Issue New Appeal.

"The Executive Council," says the new circular, "at its meeting held in Montreal, August 24-30, reviewed the distressing situation prevailing among the mine workers and their families in Great Britain where a strike has existed for the past 12 weeks. As a result of this review it was decided to issue another appeal to the membership of the Federation and their friends to make voluntary financial contributions for the purpose of supplying food and clothing to the striking miners of Great Britain and their families dependent upon them.

Intense Suffering.

"This strike of the miners in Great Britain has reached the point where suffering among the miners' families is intense. The industrial struggle has been carried on week after week until hunger and distress are being keenly felt. The miners are resisting a reduction in the meager wages they heretofore were receiving. They are heroically fighting against a lowering of their living standards. The action of the British mine owners in attempting to force this reduction is a challenge to the mine workers of Great Britain.

Give Help Quickly.

"The mine workers of Great Britain have appealed to the working people of America to help them in their hour of need. Recently a delegation representing the British Trade Union Congress and the Miners' Federation of Great Britain visited America calling upon the membership of organized labor and their friends to supply financial help to the strikers. This delegation related stories of sacrifice, suffering and distress which were of a most touching and pathetic nature. They pleaded for help. They asked that help be extended and that it be extended now.

"Do Not Delay."

"The executive council, therefore, in transmitting this supplementary appeal is repeating the message of this delegation. We earnestly and sincerely urge you to make such voluntary contributions as circumstances will permit. Give to the limit of your ability. Send in your money immediately. Do not delay. Let the sympathetic and generous heart of the organized labor movement of America respond quickly to the appeal which the hungry men, women and children who are the sufferers in the miners' strike make to us.

"Send all contributions to Frank Morrison, A. F. of L. Bldg., Washington, D. C."

MOTHER BLOOR SPEAKS FOR PASSAIC RELIEF ON STREET IN BUFFALO

BUFFALO, Sept. 9. — On Saturday evening, Sept. 11, at 8 o'clock an open air demonstration will be held here at the corner of Main and Mohawk for the Passaic Strikers' Relief.

James Campbell of the Molders' Union and secretary of the Buffalo conference for Passaic relief will be the chairman. There will be addresses by Ella Reeves Bloor, the field organizer of the General Relief Committee and by two of the strikers.

In Rochester, Field Organizer Bloor has already secured a number of delegates to attend a relief conference to be held at the Amalgamated Hall, Sept. 17, at 8 o'clock.

Mother Bloor with her corps of strikers is visiting unions all this week and next. After the Rochester conference she will take the strikers to Montreal to visit the Canadian Labor Conference which starts on Sept. 20. On their return they will stop at a meeting at Toronto.

SAM GOMPERS ON THE MEXICAN QUESTION, 1924

What Will Green Say at Detroit Meet?

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9. — Samuel Gompers, in his speech of greeting to the delegates of the Mexican Regional Confederation of Labor who visited the convention of the American Federation of Labor at El Paso on Nov. 17, 1924, hailed the present regime in Mexico as the work of the labor movement.

The Federated Press, in view of discussion as to whether the A. F. of L. should abandon its affiliation with Mexican labor, reproduces, in the week of Labor Day of 1926, a part of that greeting:

Good Will and Fraternity.

"Men and women of labor of Mexico," he began, "thrice welcome to the convention of the American Federation of Labor. Ten years ago no such united gathering as this could take place between the workers' representatives of Mexico and those of the United States.

"Time, circumstance and experience have demonstrated to us that if you and we and those whom we represent shall maintain the high ideals of organized labor of our respective countries, nothing but fraternal good will and mutual interest will serve the people of both republics.

Stirred by Feeling.

"In the by-gone days adventurers and profit-mongers have taken advantage of situations to stir up ill-feeling on both sides of the line. We believe, and time has verified this belief into a conviction, that if the men and women of toil in Mexico, and the men and women of toil in the United States, were organized and manifested good-will toward each other, the profit-mongers would be driven back and good-will established among the peoples and the nations which we have the honor to represent.

"Mexico! Obregon, Calles, Trevino and Morones united to make Mexico.

"In the name of the men and women who toil in our country, the spirit of the men and women of this convention interpreting the hopes and ideals of American workers, I bid you and your associates welcome to this convention, and wish for you all success in the attainment and achievement of the hopes and ideals of Mexican toilers and Mexican statesmen and patriots, that we may live to help in the peace, not only of our two countries, but in the peace of the whole world!"

Went to Mexico.

Following that convention, which was marked by great enthusiasm for the cause of the Mexican workers, President Gompers and the executive council, with many other delegates, traveled to Mexico City as guests of the government, to witness the inauguration of President Calles and to attend the meeting of the Pan-American Federation of Labor. He stood between Gen. Obregon, the retiring chief executive, and Calles his successor and friend, on the balcony of the national palace on the night of the inauguration, sharing with them the honors of that historic event. Within a few days his last illness came upon him.

ANTI-FASCISTI IN CONVENTION CHEER GITLOW

Green Offers Support of A. F. of L.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—With seven hundred delegates present from all parts of the country, the opening session of the Anti-Fascisti Alliance's convention in Cooper Union Sunday cheered itself hoarse when speakers denounced Mussolini for his bloody rule.

Benjamin Gitlow, representing the Workers (Communist) Party of America was greeted with enthusiasm as he offered the anti-Fascist organization the hearty support of Communists.

"We are actively engaged in a struggle against Fascismo in the United States, in Italy and in every other country where it manifests itself," said Gitlow. "It came into existence after the heroic struggle in which the Italian workers were betrayed. They were seizing factories, raising the Red flag and gaining control of the army and navy. The movement was betrayed and reaction came in with Mussolini and Fascismo. It is a brutal, military and savage regime. The eight-hour day has been abandoned in Italy, strikes are illegal and militant workers are assassinated.

"No wonder the capitalistic government of the United States, headed by a strike-breaker, President Coolidge—does everything possible to aid Mussolini. It is no wonder that Gary helps him, for Gary lives by keeping in subjection the steel slaves who labor in the steel mills of this country. The workers in all countries are united in the movement against Fascismo, and those in Italy will overthrow Mussolini and seize the factories and the government. Every movement on the part of the workers here is brutally suppressed by the capitalistic government of the United States."

The 700 delegates from all parts of the country cheered mention by Gitlow of Soviet Russia, and there was added tumult when the orchestra started playing the Internationale.

Dr. Charles Pama, secretary of the United States board of pension surgeons and captain of the medical corps reserve denied that he was either a socialist or a Communist but denounced Mussolini as a "cowardly scoundrel" and said he was in power only because the opposition was not united.

Monday evening session was held at the Rand school. A telegram was received and read there from President Green of the American Federation of Labor, assuring the convention that the A. F. of L. stands "with you in opposition to Fascism and all that the word implies." Green said "Fascism has succeeded in destroying independent democratic trades unions in Italy, free speech, free press, and democracy in government."

Telegrams were sent President Coolidge, asking for the victims of the Fascist oppression the right of asylum enjoyed here of old, and to Judge Webster Thayer, the trial judge in the case of Sacco and Vanzetti, demanding a new trial. Sessions continue in the Rand school.

Solid With Mexican Labor.

At the meeting in the Rand School the conference heard Roberto Haberman, representing the Regional Confederation of Labor of Mexico, the largest organization in the country, and the Mexican Minister of Mines, Commerce, Labor and Industry. Haberman pledged the support of 2,000,000 organized workers of Mexico to the fight against the fascisti, and recounted the history of a similar battle which has raged for a century in Mexico and is now being won by the forces of progress.

Rome and Mussolini.

He showed the close relationship in theory and effect between the movement led by the Catholic hierarchy of Mexico to take from the peasants their land and to peonage, "which is worse than slavery, for slaves cost money and have to be looked after."

"Rome is the greatest enemy of Mexican labor from the point of view of the fascisti and the hierarchy," said Haberman.

The conference adopted a resolution to send a telegram to Plutarco Calles of Mexico to assure him of its solidarity with him in the struggle against the papacy.

L. L. G. W. in Campaign.

Morris Sieman, president of the International Ladies' Garment Workers pledged the aid of his organization in the anti-fascist movement, "not only with sympathy but with every other support that can lead the great fight for liberty to victory."

A resolution was adopted asking Italians in the United States not to employ Italian governmental agencies in sending funds to relatives in the fatherland. Telegrams pledging the alliance's "solidarity and support" were sent the Passaic textile strikers, the striking English miners, the Corlier degli Italiani of Paris, which is the organ of former Premier Nitti, and the People d'Italia, a San Francisco anti-fascist daily.

Show Agreement Existed to Hide the Anthracite Surrender From Miners

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL

DURING the world war the heavy censorship, combined with the fact that even so-called "independent writers" were engulfed in the tidal wave of jingoism, prevented the truth about the struggle being told, except as it appeared in the proscribed revolutionary press. When the blood bath ended with the armistice between the contending capitalist nations, ambitious authors, politicians and other spokesmen of the established order began issuing their books under the general high-sounding title, "Now It Can Be Told."

The same process unfolds itself, gradually but inevitably, in the war between the mine workers and the mine owners, especially in the anthracite fields of Pennsylvania. There is this difference, however. One of the spokesmen for the hard coal barons now declares that the mine owners actually had an agreement with the miners' officials to suppress and hide the actual facts about the traitor settlement that was put over on the strikers at Scranton, Pa., Wednesday, Feb. 17, 1926. It was as if the German kaiser and the British king had gotten together to frame a peace to safeguard their own power, behind the backs and against the interests of the peoples of these two countries.

The mine owners' spokesman declares:

"Not much was said in the newspapers at the time of the settlement of the anthracite strike . . . as to the extent of labor's defeat in this conflict. To make as little talk as possible, out of respect to labor, was a part of the agreement, and all parties to the agreement acted accordingly.

"Since then, however, the settlement has become fully public and the defeat which the labor interests suffered has been gradually recognized."

In order to carry out his part of this compact with the mine owners, President John L. Lewis crushed all opposition in the Scranton Tri-District Convention called to ratify the agreement.

When Delegate Ed Scharfenberg arose alone, among the hundreds of delegates, to challenge the surrender to the mine owners and to expose the nature of the pact with the bosses, President Lewis, as chairman, ordered his expulsion from the convention. Not one delegate dared resume the fight.

At that time The DAILY WORKER exposed the foul nature of the base surrender. In its issue of Monday, Feb. 15, it ran a three-column black herder entirely around its first page, and the headline told the story in three words, "MINERS' BLACK FRIDAY." There was cause for mourning. At that time The DAILY WORKER declared that the settlement has become fully public and the defeat which the labor interests suffered has been gradually recognized." The coal miners have learned the truth out of their own bitter experiences. The tide of opposition to President Lewis and his surrender is rising.

One indication of the growing opposition to Lewis is now seen in the fact that William J. Brennan, former president of Anthracite District, No. One, United Mine Workers of America, has announced himself as candidate for secretary-treasurer of the international union in the struggle against the Lewis regime. The first paragraph in Brennan's program is a repudiation of the anthracite agreement, with special opposition to sections three and four.

It was the proud boast of the Lewis machine, which includes the present secretary-treasurer, Thomas Kennedy, who helped put over the anthracite agreement, that arbitration had not been agreed to. Yet the worst kind of arbitration is provided for in section three, that Brennan especially attacks.

This section sets forth that issues in controversy shall be referred to a board of two men "with full power and without reservation or restrictions." Neither one of these two men is to be "connected with the United Mine Workers of America," unless this can be agreed to, and the mine owners certainly will not agree. The miners are merely to name three men and the mine owners three men. The miners select one man from the owners' list and the owners one man from the miners' list. It is certain that the coal barons will get the man from among the three on the miners list who is the most favorable to them, who can be most easily influenced to support their cause, or lean in their direction. If Lewis can be guilty of the anthracite surrender, then it will not be difficult for the mine owners to find "their man" among three names that the Lewis administration would offer them to select from. On the other hand the three names that the mine owners will offer can be depended on to be 100 per cent for the coal barons. If a third man is drawn in, he is selected by these two already picked. The chances are, therefore, all on the side of his being another mine owners' man. No more vicious method of arbitration was ever conceived.

It is to this triumvirate, packed on the side of the mine owners, that future disputes as to wages must be submitted, althe President Lewis has assured the miners that their wages cannot be reduced during the five years' life of the anthracite contract. This is only another deception. The miners have already had their eye-opening experiences with the Jacksonville agreement covering the soft coal fields, under which the mine owners have as usual forgetten all about the "sacred right of contract" and slashed wages wherever the mine workers have failed to offer resistance.

All this should help convince the coal diggers everywhere thruout the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers of America that President Lewis, who is now up for re-election, is doing the dirty work of the employers inside the union, just as Frank Farrington, the suspended president of District No. 12 (Illinois), after doing all the damage he could inside the union, contracted to join the employers ranks and fight the miners from the outside for $25,000 per year.

Farrington was put on the skids and his exit from the union was a hurried one, President Lewis comes up for re-election in December. The miners should make sure that Lewis follows Farrington into the discard, at least is so far as the miners' union is concerned.

Government Continues to Force Concessions

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PAUL SMITH'S, N. Y., Sept. 9.—The United States government will continue its "hands off" policy in Mexico, President Coolidge definitely announced today, following a long conference with Ambassador James R. Sheffield.

The president indicated that diplomatic relations between the two governments are very harmonious.

The Mexican government has already made many recessions in the matter of the land laws, it was officially stated, and while some problems remain to be settled there is every probability that they will be adjusted amicably.

as enjoyable as orchestrated performances.

Still a Chance for Spread.

There is still a chance of other theatrical crafts coming out in sympathetic strike and other theaters, outside of Chicago, going without orchestras in support of the local fight.

Points at Issue Same.

The points at issue remain the same. The question of the duration of the contract and the number of musicians to be used in smaller theaters. The men are of the opinion that the owners will very soon have to come to time. If they are losing rather good weekly salaries, the dwindled gate receipts are far in excess of this and are losing heavily for the exhibitors.

Detroit Operators Out.

DETROIT, Mich., Sept. 9.—Fourteen leading theaters were without motion pictures today as a result of the inability of owners and operators to reach a wage agreement in connection with the operation of four houses. The walk-out of the operators was revealed when the houses failed to show pictures at noon, as scheduled.

Stage Workers Gain Increased Pay.

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—Wage increases of 20 to 40 per cent have been won by the 2,200 New York stage hands in legitimate theaters, vaudeville, burlesque and movie houses and in stage construction shops. Theatrical Protective Union, Local 1, made the two-year agreement. Heads of carpentry, electrical and property departments in legitimate theaters get $10 a week increase. "Grips"—clearers and operators manipulating scenery—get $4 more per performance and rehearsal, overtime and broken time, increases of 25 to 50 cents an hour. Shop employes and journeymen get $2 a day more. Apprentices and car leaders $2 more. In vaudeville, burlesque and picture houses department heads get $7 a week and 25 cents additional per hour of overtime.

Boston Musicians Win Wage Demands.

BOSTON, Sept. 9.—Union musicians of Boston are getting $72 a week for 14 performances in vaudeville and moving picture theaters, $94 in feature picture and legitimate houses, $60 for 12 performances in burlesque shows and $64 for eight performances in musical shows. Wage increases are about 15 per cent over previous scales. The agreement is for two years.

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—Settlement of the pending strike of musicians in the Orpheum Circuit theaters in San Francisco and the west was achieved by long distance telephone. Joseph N. # LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' LOCAL IN CHICAGO OPPOSES NEW PIECE WORK FEATURES; WANTS SECURITY

Local 5 (Chicago) of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union has adopted amendments to the recommendations of President Sigman. There was discussion of proposed comment and changes at two meetings, and then at a special meeting called to decide the matter a set of recommendations were adopted which the members of Local 5 hope the rest of the union will also consider and adopt. They are as follows:

In looking thru the recommendations of President Sigman, we find that he discussed generalities only, and no immediate improvements in conditions. Some of the proposals, such as: 40 hours per week, and guaranteed length of employment are surely acceptable to all, but the change of system to a minimum scale and the proposed adjustment of prices, spell in practical operation piece work—or standard of production, with some features in it that will be worse than under ordinary piece work.

We therefore wish to make the following recommendations for immediate operation:

1. To enforce that the employer does not make any individual complaints to the worker on production.

No Wage Cut.

2. All workers whose prices were decreased since week work was established should receive an increase equal to the price they received when week work was established including the 16 increase in 1924.

3. Workers coming in to new jobs, shall receive the same price, which is standard for all shops, and the employer cannot "lay him off" on account of the price. The paragraph in the agreement in this instance calling for one week tenure of employment and that during this week the employer has a right to lay off the worker without review, shall be interpreted to mean, "as far as the skill of work" and not the standard of the price.

Watch Sub-contractors.

4. That the office be instructed to immediately go into conference with the jobbers and with the employers, having contractors or sub-contractors, for the purpose of having them sign a "jobbers' agreement," in which they must guarantee the union conditions in the shops of the contractors and sub-contractors, and also assure with a penalty levied on them, against its violation, by having non-union contractors working for them. In case the jobbers refuse to go into agreement with the union, the union contractors must be instructed not to take out any work from them.

Forty-Hour Week.

We recommend the following proposals to take into conference with the employers:

1. Forty-hour, five-days a week work.

2. Guarantee for 36 weeks per year employment with a minimum income of $2,000 per year. Each employer shall pay a fixed sum weekly, during the busy season to guarantee the payments of the difference in the event of not having forty weeks employment per year.

3. The employers shall increase their payments to the "Unemployment Insurance Fund" to five per cent of their payroll, and the workers shall not pay any.

Equal Division.

4. The fund shall be conducted in the headquarters of the union and under the supervision of the joint board. There shall be equal division of work in each shop on duplicates as well as stock.

5. The head cutter shall not do any stock or duplicate cutting during the dull season.

6. The books of the employers and jobbers may be investigated at any time by the union or an accountant assigned by them, for the purpose of finding out to whom the work is sent out.

SPANISH REVOLT ESCAPING FROM CENSOR'S GRIP

Primo Di Rivera Loses Confidence of Army

BULLETIN

MADRID, Sept. 9. — Reduction of the number of artillery generals from eighteen to ten was ordered today in a royal decree, issued as the result of the revolt of artillery officers.

This order is understood to be a compromise measure, General de Rivera having desired the dissolution of the artillery corps entirely while the king was opposed to such a drastic step. Peace in view, the king intends to resume his "vacation" at San Sebastian.

The artillery will remain under the control of the regional captain generals for purposes of discipline. Thus it appears that eight artillery generals will lose their rank and the artillery will be taken from the direct command of artillery officers, while 150 artillery officers will be court-martialed.

MADRID, Sept. 9.—With an iron clad censorship resting over the entire country, with official assurances that the revolt against Primo de Rivera has surrendered, has been shot to pieces, has compromised, and has ended itself in other ways, there continue to be rumors of vast dissatisfaction in all parts of the army, and it is certain that artillery regiments are in open mutiny and that they are aided by the navy.

Madrid is full of troops, most of them infantry, supposedly more reliable from the government's point of view, and somewhat antagonistic to the military castes in the artillery, which are now in revolt against Dictator Primo de Rivera. But these peasant infantry units have many of them gone thru the hell of Morocco and have no love for those who sent them there. They are not absolutely loyal.

In this strange atmosphere of suspicion, rumor and official denials that sometimes admit more than they deny, it has been decided to take a plebiscite on Sept. 11, 12 and 13 for or against the convocation of a national assembly. Primo de Rivera and his party will, of course, oppose the return to constitutional procedure, while the business interests and the working class are each opposed to military feudalism and Primo de Rivera.

Committees are to be created thruout Spain in each city to consist of a president appointed by the mayor, and three members of the Patriotic Union Party, with other delegates from other bodies to be designated later. This machinery of committees will try to drum up a great parade for Primo de Rivera to be left in charge of the country with dictatorial rights.

Martial Law.

Martial law was established when the first outbreak took place in the artillery barracks of Barcelona. An attempt has been discovered to kidnap King Alfonso and force him to abdicate. Bands of rebels in fleet motor cars were to rush down upon him in his summer capital of San Sebastian as soon as the fighting began at Barcelona and Cadiz. Alfonso escaped by taking a train to Madrid before the conspirators could get started.

The ultra country is irritated over the harsh rule of Rivera, who seized power on Sept. 12, 1923, by a military coup d'etat, based largely on dissatisfaction with the losing war in Morocco. He has since offended the officer groups who brought him to his high position by taking from them the right to control promotions.

Revolts Common Now.

MADRID, Sept. 9.—Prime Minister de Rivera has issued another statement that he has the situation well in hand. "Conditions are improving every minute," said the general, "court martials have already started."

A report is current that the king has interceded in the interest of peace, following a conferance held on the highway with high artillery officers who stopped the automobile. After receiving promises that virtually amount to immunity from all serious consequences from the mutiny the artillery regiments at Segovia have surrendered.

Fear of Overthrowal of Monarchy Checks Rivera's Iron Fist

MADRID, Sept. 9.—The undercurrent of conflict between dictator Primo de Rivera and King Alfonso has resulted in the king forcing De Rivera to modify the punishment to be inflicted upon the mutinous military officers who took part in the most recent uprising against the dictator.

The council of ministers had a stormy session, in which the king opposed De Rivera's policy of the mailed fist against the officer juntas, in order to allay the increasing republican sentiment among the soldiery.

It is understood that the king has an agreement with the army officers whereby the government is to abstain from any severe punishment for the officers that took part in the uprising, and in recompense the king consents to the officers not to become a part of the movement to abolish the monarchy. There are 1,200 artillery officers subject to [illegible] part in the affair.

GOLDSTEIN DECLINES NOMINATION IN LETTER TO FURRIERS' LOCAL; "ISSUE IS POLICY, NOT OFFICE"

Robert Goldstein, a progressive member of the Furriers' Local No. 45 (Chicago) who was nominated for business representative at the last meeting of the union, has issued an open letter to the members of the organization informing them of his resignation as a candidate, stating that he supports Israelson who is also candidate against the present incumbent Millstein. In his letter to the union he calls upon the members to support Israelson and the entire progressive slate, and outlines the policies upon which the opposition asks the support of the members.

The letter follows.

Goldstein Declines.

Chicago, Ill., Sept. 3, 1926.

To the Officers and Members of the Furriers' Local 45.

Brothers and Sisters: Having received the nomination for business representative of our local at the last meeting, I, the undersigned, desire to withdraw my candidacy for that office.

In declining, I wish to state my reasons for doing so, inasmuch as Brother I. Israelson is a nominee for this position on a progressive platform I call upon all the members of the furriers' local to support him and all the progressive candidates. I believe that the present leadership is not capable of running the affairs of our union to the satisfaction of the membership, and a change in administration is absolutely necessary at this time.

Milstein Uses Police.

The members of Local 45 are against the policies pursued by the present business agent, who is attempting to rule the organization by the aid of gangsters and the Chicago police department. I am in favor of a policy which will eliminate gangsterism from our union, so that the membership will have all opportunity to express themselves on all questions coming before the organization and the labor movement in general. I am opposed to the recent star-chamber settlement of the strike and believe the membership is entitled to a thorough discussion of the agreement.

I am in favor of wiping off our books all the charges now held against progressive members of our local who have dared to protest against the onesman rule of the present business agent, Brother Milstein. I know that these charges have no foundation and have only been made against these brothers in order to prevent the opposition from participation in the elections and thus again leave the union in the hands of Milstein and his hand-picked executive board.

Matter of Policy.

I wish to emphasize that the present struggle in Local 45 must not degenerate into a fight between individuals or a scramble for official positions. The progressive forces are fighting for definite fundamental changes in policy, and have my full support. In declining as a candidate for business representative I desire to call to the attention of the local that I have accepted as candidate for vice-president.

It seems that objections were raised against me for the office of vice-president and not for business representative, which to any one with ordinary intelligence looks ridiculous. I trust that [illegible] for the best interests of the union, and will [illegible] place any obstacles in the way of candidates who hold different views than those of the administration, or we may as well pick a dictator to shape all our policies and stop holding meetings. Instead of policies of surrender to the bosses, I believe the rank and file of our membership who in the past have shown their willingness and ability to fight the bosses, should be mobilized as one solid army in the fight for higher wages and better conditions. Our New York members have shown us a splendid example of how to conduct a successful struggle against the employers, and with the proper leadership the Chicago furriers will be able to do likewise and establish one hundred per cent union control over the shops.

Fraternally yours,
Robert Goldstein.

GERTRUDE EDERLE is partial to juicy cuts of beefsteak and yet she swam the English channel. A Los Angeles contributor will grind his celery with extra ferocity when he reads this observation. Here is what he writes us: "Tavarish O'Flaherty is again at his favorite pastime. Killing vegetarians . . . . If the horrors of the cattle-cars and the bloody shambles of the stockyards appeal to him more than orchards and orange groves, he is entitled to his taste."

BERNARD SHAW is a vegetarian and can well afford the luxury. His aversion to shedding the blood of animals did not prevent him from supporting his king and country in the late war and coining profits thru war bonds out of the blood of German, British, French and soldiers of other nations. Orange groves and orchards are beautiful. So are calves and milch cows. The dung of the stockyards is not pleasant to the smell but neither is the fertilizer that pushes up the celery in the garden. I compromised with my vegetarian friends recently by instructing all readers of The DAILY WORKER to eat green leafy vegetables with their meat. This is what I get for meeting them half way. The olive leaf is now withdrawn.

PEOPLE never seem to know when they are well off. Take those Chinese for instance. Who will deny say that British, French, Japanese and American capitalists did not order the country with the object of making this a better place to live in for the Chinese masses. Even to the extent of giving them Jesus Christ in lieu of Con Fucius. Sentimental American liberals told us that the Chinese were adorable people, addicted to pacifism and making love under the stars. Now that they have taken to shooting, the liberals will not be so crazy about them but the Chinese seem to be making progress.

CHICAGO DAILY FREIHEIT DRIVE RAISES $2,075

Eight Thousand More Starts Publication

An enthusiastic meeting of the Jewish members of the Workers Party was held in Freiheit Hall, Chicago, to initiate the drive for a Chicago daily edition of the militant New York daily Freiheit.

A. Ravitch, manager of the Chicago edition, acted as chairman, and introduced Max Bedacht of the Workers Party, as the first speaker. Comrade Bedacht stated that the necessity of a Chicago daily in the Jewish language was manifest.

He mentioned how important it is that the workers here have to have their own Workers Party paper, day after day, dealing with the working conditions most of interest to them, and exposing out the schemes of their enemies and the activities of their friends. He appealed to every Jewish comrade to do everything that is possible to help build the circulation of a Daily Freiheit, right in Chicago.

First Edition on Time.

The plan of campaign was explained by another speaker, R. Zalsman, manager of the New York Daily Freiheit. He told of the successes of the paper in New York, and prophesied equal progress for the Chicago edition.

Comrade Ravitch stated that he was certain from the response already received that when the great meeting that is being planned for Ashland Auditorium on October 9, is held, and the Jewish workers of Chicago celebrate there the launching of their Chicago daily, the first edition of the paper will be in hand for distribution among the crowd.

In the name of the Workers Party Jewish Fraction, Comrade Ravitch urged the members present and all who might have come to the meeting to adopt the recommendations of the city committee of the fraction and contribute each of them a week's wages towards the much needed daily. Some of the members paid at once in full, and others paid part. More is coming in.

Famous Speakers Coming.

The meeting, planned for October 9 will have before it such prominent speakers as Comrads Ruthenberg, secretary of the Workers Party, M. Epstein, editor of the New York Freiheit, Ben Gold, manager of the New York Joint Board of the Fur Workers' Union, and others.

There will also be on that occasion a big concert, with the Freiheit Singing Society and the best concert artists. There will be a play by the Dramatic Section of the Freiheit Singing Society, called "Am Ast of the Volga." Children's Chorus also will sing. A brass band is engaged, and there will be other features on the program. It will be a real demonstration, and it looks at this time, says Manager Ravitch, as tho the hall would be packed from stage to door, because for all this there is being charged only fifty cents admission; sympathizers are already rushing for tickets.

Large Sum Raised.

As a result of the enthusiasm of the Chicago workers, Comrade Zalsman, New York manager, has been able to report to the executive board that there has already been raised $2,075 in cash, and the campaign is just starting. There will be needed about $5,000 more.

The editorial board for the Chicago Freiheit will be complete by Oct. 9, and will be so constituted as to cover all workers' activities, all unions, the Workmen's Circle, workmen's clubs, etc.

To Fight Forwards.

Comrade Ravitch points out the necessity of the Jewish workers in Chicago having their own daily to combat the daily attacks on the progressives made thru the columns of the Yellow Daily Forwards.

Every member of the Workers Party who can read Jewish, and every worker who sympathizes with the efforts to found a daily paper in Chicago in the Jewish language, is invited and urged to get in touch with the Chicago manager of the Freiheit, Comrade A. Ravitch, at 3209 Roosevelt Road. He has certificates and tickets, sufficient in number for every one, and every party member and every friend is expected to get busy and do his part.

MANY of the party nuclei have just awakened to the importance of their collecting and remitting the United Labor Ticket Assessment. Altho the time for final settlement was set for August 31, payments for 400 members have reached the National Office since that time.

Remittance from 500 nuclei secretaries representing about 4,000 additional members would put the collection of the assessment in good shape.

WHY CAN'T IT BE DONE? THAT IS THE QUESTION EVERY SECRETARY WHO HAS RECEIVED STAMPS AND NEITHER SOLD THEM, REMITTED FOR THEM OR RETURNED THEM SHOULD ANSWER.

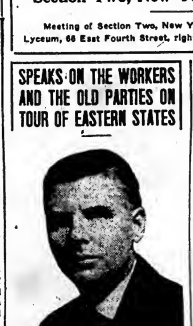
SPEAKS ON THE WORKERS AND THE OLD PARTIES ON TOUR OF EASTERN STATES



J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.
Candidate of the Workers (Communist) Party for U. S. Senator from Illinois.

DAILY WORKER DRIVE GETS 2 NEW DISTRICTS

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Sept. 9. — The special DAILY WORKER drive now carried on in District Five of the Workers Party has attracted attention in other districts. Comrade Alex Ball, acting district organizer of the Philadelphia district, writes to District Five:

"Have read your article in the Daily in which you outline the conditions for the new DAILY WORKER drive in your district. I will take up the matter tonight with the Polcom and am quite sure that we will join you in an All-Pennsylvania Drive for the Daily. Please rush any suggestions you may have."

That is quite encouraging. It will be remembered that in the National DAILY WORKER drive Philadelphia district was way down the line. The district is now showing considerable improvement in its work generally, and there can be no doubt that a Daily drive started there at this time will meet with success.

And while Philly is anxious to get in line for the Daily Worker, sunny Florida issues a challenge to District Five to raise at least one sub for every 5 secured by Pittsburgh district during the special drive. Florida has but a few members in Miami, and their challenge is a bold one. The Miami comrades surely have ambition. The comrades in Pittsburgh district wish them success and are anxious to see what Miami can do to beat Pittsburgh.

Whether the other districts will proceed with the campaign or not is yet to be seen. But Pittsburgh district is going ahead and is determined to show results.

PROTEST THE MURDER OF CUBAN WORKERS BY BUTCHER MACHADO!

The workers of Cuba, a supposedly "independant" nation lying in the shadow of United States imperialism, are suffering the most horrible tyranny. Rarely in the old world or the new have such atrocities been committed against the workers as are being carried out by the fascist government of President Machado, a butchar and tool for the American bankers, who have $1,250,000,000 invested in the island "republic."

To back up their property interests, the Washington government keeps a U. S. army "advisor" to Machado in Havana. General Enoch Crowder gives the orders of American imperialism which murders with Machada's hand tha best and bravest of Cuban trada unionists. The DAILY WORKER gives below the statement of the Communist Party of Cuba and its appeal to the workers of all countries for protest!

The Terror in Cuba

Statement of Protest Issued by the Communist Party of Cuba

THE new government of General Machado, already known for its tyrannical declarations and its faithful lackeyism to Wall Street, has entered on a new period of dictatorship.

To the imprisonments of last years, which were obviously carried thru with cynical disregard for court evidence and which only helped to hurt the prestige of the government itself as well as American imperialism, has succeeded the systematic application of strong armed methods against the workers and poor peasants. Workers have been and are systematically intimidated. Strikes are brutally repressed. All sorts of pressure is resorted to to destroy the labor unions and force the workers into accepting leaders who have sold out to fascism. Not content with this, the government has resorted to undisguised murder. In the approved Matteotti style.

COMRADE VERANO, organizer of the railroad workers, was shot in the back by national guardsmen while walking in the street in company with his wife and children, a few days after he had been discharged from prison, where a framed-up charge had placed him. Comrade Cusart was assassinated in the shadow of the prison. More than fifty unfortunate peasants who rebelled against the Machado sugar trust system of forco wages, were foully slaughtered by the soldiery.

Comrade Grau of the railroad workers, was murdered by a policeman while about to report for work at the railroad station. Among the long list of other victims there stand out: Salvador Lopez, active trade union fighter of Cienfuegos; Domingo, treasurer of the railroad brotherhood; and Alfredo Lopez, secretary of the Havana Federation of Labor. Whose sensational disappearance has shocked the entire labor movement.

THIS Comrade Lopez stood out among the organized Cuban masses as one of the most indefatigable and and courageous militants in the ranks of the working class. He was known to have left his home to go to the headquarters of the Federation of Labor but he never arrived. Nothing has been heard from him since.

The entire working class of Cuba, even the railroad workers—among whose leaders were included some of the most active spies of the government—lies groaning under the iron heel of an ominous dictatorship, without possibility of defending itself with the right of strike de facto, without the most elementary rights of assembly. There is no such thing as freedom of speech; nay, not even freedom of thought! Legal prosecution is a vulgar farce. The mask of democracy has been thrown aside and loud boasting is being heard of the new dictatorship by the tools of the "Mussolini of the Caribbean"—a Mussolini without talents and one who is himself a tool.

THE entire country, not recovered yet from the series of massacres, illegal detentions and kidnappings, have been raise its voice in protest. The mercenary press, half of it sold and half of it gagged, remains silent. Public opinion is reduced to whispered criticism in family circles. The working class still struggling to be born, and without revolutionary traditions or education, appears as one defenseless.

Almost as we write, four more workers have been wrenched from their hearthstones by the tyrant Machado and his assistant executioner, the Cuban Hotspur, Zayas Bazan. Habeas corpus has been denied them. They are to be railroaded to long terms in prison or perhaps to exile.

A mantle of terror and crime covers the whole country. The phrase with which the secretary of the interior closed his last interview with the unfortunate Alfredo Lopez, repeats itself like a credo of death:

"For foreigners deportation, for Cubans, death."

The working class of Cuba asks support and solidarity from its comrades of all other countries.

Down with the imperialist-controlled tyranny!

Central Committee of the Communist Party of Cuban.

CORRECTION.

From the headlines of an article in The DAILY WORKER of August 27 (relating to the Painters' Strike in Cleveland) the inference might be drawn the painters of Cleveland were sold out for a money consideration. Such is not the general belief of the Cleveland painters.

It was not the intention of the writer of the article to insinuate that money played any part in the termination of the strike, but to point out in plain English that the Cleveland painters were betrayed in the strike settlement."

GARMENT UNION SENDS SPECIAL FUND TO STRIKE

Chicago Shop Chairmen Continue Drive

The first two thousand dollars of the fund being raised by special assessment of five dollars a member of the International Ladies' Garment Workers in Chicago for the New York cloakmakers' strike has been sent to them, says J. Levin, manager of the joint board and more will go this week. Money is coming in very well from the shops.

It is not only in New York that the I. L. G. W. U. is making strenuous efforts to improve conditions. An effective organization drive is under way in Chicago to make the non-union dress shops into union shops.

A shop chairmen's meeting held Sept. 7 received pledges of support for the campaign of unionization. It also decided to call a series of shop meetings in which to propagate the idea of the continued unionization of the industry. The slogans under which the drive is conducted are:

"Improve your conditions by organizing the unorganized!" and "One hundred percent organization, one hundred percent union!"

WITH THE YOUNG WORKERS

CONDUCTED BY THE YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE

MORO STUDENTS PROTEST BACON BILL; DEMAND INDEPENDENCE

MANILA, P. I.—The Moro students at the Central Luson Agricultural School in Munos, Nueva Ecija, have sent a petition to Senate President Quezon vigorously protesting against the Bacon bill threatening to dismember the Philippine archipelago by separating Mindanao, Sulu and Palawan from the rest of the Islands. The petition was received by the senate president, bearing the signatnre of 32 Moro students in thas school.

Tha students expressed in their petition what they feel about separation from the rest of tha group. They declared that to separata them from their christian brothers would be worse than to cast them into the mouth of a hungry lion, because it would mean dependency and everlasting slavery. Their old people expressed to them their conviction, they said, that the present government established in Moroland "is a hundred times much better than the military government way back in the early American occupation of the Philippines. To change the present system of government in Moroland and to separate us from our christian brothers would not do us any good, for it would mean disaster to our future and deprivation of our rights. We, of the younger generation, are entirely opposed to it."

These Moro students emphasized the fact that the present condition of the Moros was not petitioned and that they were given the opportunities for material, educational and moral improvement. They expressed their gratefulness to the christian Filipinos for these opportunities. "We want to maintain our relationship with our christian brothers and live or die with them for the sake of our national solidarity and our common destiny. What we need is that the American people should give us the privilege of a nation to be free and independent. To segregate us would be a backward step."

In addition to this, the Moro students in Munos are asking the government to give them more compensation so that they can continue their studies "especially we people, who are financially unable to further our studies." They want to continue their educational pursuit so that they may be able to undertake the share in the material development of their respective provinces in particular and the country in general.

Youth Meet Protests New War Dangers

The New York Young Workers League will celebrate the 12th annual international Youth day with a big mass meeting and concert in Central Opera House on Friday, Sept. 10th. Comrade Lovestone, member of the C. E. C. of the Workers (Communist) Party, Sam Darcy, national secretary of the Y. W. L., Ben Gold, manager of the Joint Board of the Furriers' Union besides other prominent speakers will address the meeting.

This year's celebration will be made into a big mass youth demonstration against militarism and future wars. The war department is intensifying its militaristic propaganda in the shops and factories. There has been an increase in the attendance at the summer training camps. Appropriations for war purposes has been steadily increasing. New deadly poisons, new machines of destruction are invented daily. The youth has been psychologized and mobilised to fight the wars of capitalism.

The Young Workers League of America is rallying the young workers and students for a militant struggle against these preparations of war. In New York the league is arranging a series of open air meetings thruout the city. A big open air demonstration will take place on Wednesday, Sept 8th at Union Square Park at 6 p. m. after work. The league will wind up the week of Sept. 3-10 by a mass meeting in Central Opera House.

1000 WORKER CORRESPONDENTS BY JANUARY 15 1927

FIRST PRIZE WINNER.

HUTCHESON "INVESTIGATING" NEW YORK CARPENTERS' LOCAL BECAUSE IT WENT PROGRESSIVE

(By a Carpenter Correspondent.)

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—At a regular meeting held by Carpenters' Local Union No. 3099 recently, a letter from General President William L. Hutcheson was introduced. In it Hutcheson requested the local to submit its books for examination. A motion was passed that the local comply with the request.

It seemed it was a surprise to General Executive member Thomas Guerin who was present at the meeting, to take possession of the books without resistance; so much so that he granted the local two weeks in which to deliver them.

On August 17, Guerin, together with another man by the name of Hutcheson, and a brother of the general president, visited Local No. 3099 again and took the books away to be "examined" by the above mentioned Hutcheson. No one knows who this Hutcheson is, beyond his family connections, whether he is a member of the Brotherhood, or simply hired as an outsider to take an interest in the books of this local. One thing is certain, he is not elected on the general staff.

Means Suspension.

The carpenters' general constitution provides that the general president has the right to examine the books of any local and there would be nothing said about it around here, but the members have discovered from experience that under Hutcheson rule to "submit books for examination" means suspension for the local. In most cases the decision is already made, and the "examination" is only a mockery to justify the action. And what can you expect when your accuser and judge are the same person?

Until some three years ago, this local was dominated mainly by two officials: Financial Secretary Richard Morton and Business Agent John Berenny, both of them strong supporters of Hutcheson, and the district council. Anyone who opposed them or their policy was persecuted and prosecuted.

Thru the co-operation of President Boost these reactionary officials were able to raise their own salaries at will and conduct meetings in a way to please themselves. Appeals by the membership to the general president were dismissed and they felt safe as long as they supported the "machine."

But they could not last forever. The members, seeing that they could not expect justice from their higher officials and that the local unions were merely playthings in the hands of the general office and the district council, naturally, came to the conclusion that there must be a change in them both. In the last election for general president, Hutcheson got from this local only 44 votes while his progressive opponent received 400.

This was already a thorn in the eye of Hutcheson, but he had not sufficient reason to prosecute the local. But then another thing happened. The local elected W. Likhis as delegate to represent it in the district council the only man in that council who has enough courage to expose the crookedness of the administration.

More Progressives Win.

This same man was nominated in the last D. C. elections for second vice-president on the progressive ticket. The machine succeeded in defeating him, but the throne of the district council was shaken, and this must be avenged. Furthermore, on Jan., 1926, President Boost was defeated, and in December, 1925, Business Agent Berenny was thrown out. In June, 1926, Financial Secretary Morton lost his job.

This was the climax. Seeing their soft jobs and fat salaries are lost and having no legal means to get them back, they dug up old records and found that this local has need money for progressive measures in labor movements.

Morton and Berenny were present when the money was "illegally" appropriated, but the they denounce the local now for its action, they did not than when they held office in raising their voices in opposition.

Prizes for Worker Correspondence

Prizes for the best worker correspondence stories sent in during the week ending Sept. 4, are announced as follows:

FIRST PRIZE

The First Prize is a volume of "King Coal," by Upton Sinclair. It goes to a Carpenter Correspondent, who wrote the article, "Hutchesen Investigating New York Carpenters' Local Because It Went Progressive." This story is timely, and written in proper form, with the most important facts first, and the rest following in a connected chronological order.

SECOND PRIZE

The Second Prize is a volume of "Left Wing Unionism," by D. J. Saposs. It is won by "Andy," who wrote the article on the fake safety schemes of the Braddock steel mills, entitled "Braddock Steel Mills Resort to Stealthy Trick to Deprive Hurt Worker of Compensation.'

THIRD PRIZE

The Third Prize is a copy of "Bare and Shadows," by Ralph Chaplin. It is given to Anne I. Paiois, for an article entitled "Portland Taxi Strike Overcomes One Company, Man Organizes Own Line."

The only reason this story did not get higher rank is because the chief event is so old. Six weeks is too long ago to make good news. But the correspondent brings out the facts very well. If the article had been written just when the new taxi company was organized, it would have been better, and still better if this new fact were placed at the beginning of the story.

THIRD PRIZE WINNER.

Portland Taxi Strike Overcomes 1 Company; Men Organize Own Line

(By Anna I. Paiois, Worker Carrespondent.)

PORTLAND, Oregon, Sept. 9.—The taxicab drivers' strike has been going on for more than six weeks now, and one of the companies. The Red Top Co., is ready to settle. However, as the managers of the Black and White, and the Yellow Cab Co. still refuse to yield, there will be a continuation of the strike.

The Black & White, and the Yellow Cab companies think they can win by being persistent and by hiring scabs. In many of the daily papers advertisements have been published that more taxicab drivers are needed and that wages are good. Of course, they want scabs, but the articles in the papers do not say so.

One point, however, is to the advantage of the strikers. They have established a taxicab company of their own, called the Union Taxicab Co. All the drivers are union members. The fare charged is the same as that on the other lines, that is, twenty-five cents for the first third of a mile and ten cents each for the following thirds. Besides this, the company is able to pay a living wage to the drivers.

SECOND PRIZE WINNER

BRADDOCK STEEL MILLS RESORT TO STEALTHY TRICK TO DEPRIVE HURT WORKER OF COMPENSATION

By ANDY, Worker Correspondent.

BRADDOCK, Pa.—Braddock, the canter of the steel csardom of Carnegie, is a town where 99 per cent of the population are workers, mostly employed by the Carnegie steel works.

Wages are 40 cents an hour on the average and the conditions under which workers work are something unexplainable (look in the Bible for definition of hell and multiply it by ten, then you will nearly grasp the situation.)

No union or workers' organization of any sort exists in here. This leaves the boss completely at the mercy of the company and fits 1001 flunkey bosses.

The company has a lot of safety committees (don't laugh, please, when I said safety), saving funds, etc.

The whole thing means 0 plus 0 equals 0, as far as the workers' benefit is concerned. Workers are aware of this fact. Yet they are helpless for they have no union of their own.

Here is a story of "Safety":

A worker working with a gang doing general labor was ordered by his boss to lift a heavy casting that lay under the rein and carry it in. The worker knew the weight of the casting, so he asked for more help.

The boss commented "either carry the casting in or yourself out." After a moment's hesitation, the 40-cents-an-hour serf tried to obey. As he lifted the casting he received an awful rupture.

The boss and the "Safety" committee convinced the worker he should stay on the job and go light work and that there was no use going to the hospital for in a short time he would be O. K.

Many, many cases of this sort happen here daily and they get well right away, the boss added.

The condition of this worker developed from bad to worse; he asked to be sent to the hospital. The boss promised to "look into it," that a committee would meet and he would fix him.

The committee never met.

The victim did not get to go to the hospital.

A year passed . . .

A moving skeleton, helpless at the mercy of cruel pains. Slowly he opens the office door to make an appeal to be treated right.

A pass is given to him by the fat-faced boss with the following remarks:

"Here is your pass out. Get the hell out and stay to hell out. You god damn lazy thing, you don't want to work."

The worker is pushed out of the plant.

Now he is in the hospital with little hope to get well. Friends pay his bills. An attempt to sue the company was found to be too late, for a year had passed since the accident, and the law could not do anything for the victim.

WORKER CORRESPONDENT GROUP IN STEEL TRUST MILLS WILL SEND NEWS

GARY, Ind., Sept. 9.—A group of worker correspondents was organized here on Labor Day to write the news about conditions in the steel trust plants and other industries for The DAILY WORKER and the party press generally. The group also plans to put up a living newspaper.

Among those present were members of the Gary Workers' Co-operative Society and they promised to participate actively in the work. An editor of the American Worker Correspondent was at the meeting and described methods of conducting the work. The members of the group will begin their task at once.

LATEST "WORKER CORRESPONDENT," MAGAZINE OF THOSE WHO FIGHT, TEACHES WORKER HOW TO WRITE

"Give the editor the facts," says the leading article in the August number of the American Worker Correspondent, a monthly magazine "by and for the workers in the factories, the mines, the mills and on the land" who "write as they fight." If they follow the slogan blazoned on the title page.

The entire issue is devoted to practical suggestions and convincing arguments intended to encourage the American proletariat itself, every toiling individual of it, to become the writer on the staff of the workers' press.

Press Needs News.

Labor papers are notoriously under manned. Capitalist newspapers and magazines can afford to hire an expensive network of correspondents and editors to run down such portions of the truth as they care to present their readers. They can do this because they represent the owning class and are emboldened by the interests who take extortionate profits from the toil of the workers. Labor papers have not the means for all this; they must rely largely on voluntary contributions of news and other articles.

The workers themselves are denied a voice thru the columns of the bosses' papers, and too often do not avail themselves of their right and privilege to "tell the world" thru their own class papers about the situation in which they labor and are exploited.

Expose the Facts.

"Exposure of the conditions within the mills, exposure of the stools and tools of the master who are working within or without the mills, and in the unions. This is the task of the worker correspondent." So says William J. White in the above mentioned leading article. He tells of one case in which a young worker correspondent was able to trap a labor fakir in the act of talking class war treason to the men whose votes put him in his office.

Factory Papers Useful.

Jay Lovestone has an article on the successes and importance of factory papers edited by shop nuclei of the Workers Party. As he quotes one Ford factory worker, "They sure have the boss riled."

M. A. Stoler, member of the editorial committee, describes interestingly the technical process of making a newspaper, with special reference to The DAILY WORKER.

Pictures Help.

Nez Bedacht tells of the importance attached to actual photographs of working and living conditions and incidents during strikes. Ho describes a discussion on this matter at a conference in Moscow in which editors of the Pravda participated. American workers are urged to get busy with their cameras.

J. Louis Engdahl calls attention to an announcement published in The DAILY WORKER and in the worker correspondents' magazine, that the press of the Union of Soviet Republics wishes to exchange workers' articles with the labor press of America. So far the American workers have not responded as they should.

All class conscious workers in American factories should get hold of the August issue of the American Worker Correspondent and read there in Engdahl's article the suggestions for preparation of such articles, and then follow them. Some of their stories will appear in Pravda, Moscow daily, which reaches millions of readers.

The American Worker Correspondent is a monthly magazine, published by the worker correspondents of The DAILY WORKER, at 1113 West Washington Blvd., Chicago, under the editorship of Nancy Markoff and M. A. Stolar. Subscription rates fifty cents a year, single copies five cents, in bundles three cents.

INTERNATIONAL LABOR DEFENSE CALLS WORKER CORRESPONDENCE VERY VITAL PART OF MOVEMENT

The following resolution was adopted by the Second Conference of International Labor Defense, meeting in Chicago, Sept. 4-6:

The Second Conference of the International Labor Defense recognizes the importance of the worker correspondents' movement in developing the will and the ability of the workers everywhere to write about their own problems for their own press.

The conference realizes the tremendous aid that a far-reaching and effective worker correspondents' movement can be in the work of defense, in giving publicity from the mines, the mills and the shops not only thru the periodical press, but also thru shop papers and local propaganda activities —living newspapers, wall papers, bulletins, etc., etc.—practically all of which is under the direction and carried on by worker correspondents.

It is therefore recommanded:

First: That the Labor Defender contain each month at least one page of worker correspondence made up of material sent in by worker writers on subjects relating to the activities of the international Labor Defense.

Second: That appropriate material sent in by worker correspondents be sent out to the labor press by the I. L. D. press service.

Third: That all I. L. D. branches be directed to appoint worker correspondents, the names, addresses, and activities of whom should be registered in the national office the I. L. D.

Fourth: That the Conference endorses the American Worker Correspondent, the monthly official organ of the American worker correspondents' movement and urges all worker correspondents to subscribe for it.

"Say it with your pen in the worker correspondent page of The DAILY WORKER."

Rail Companies Name Pennsy and Erie Men for Arbitration Meet

NEW YORK CITY, Sept. 9.—John G. Walther, vice-president of the New York Central and chairman of the conference committee of managers of the eastern railroads, has announced that the committee has appointed R. V. Massey, general manager of the Pennsylvania lines and W. A. Baldwin, vice-president of the Erie railroad, as representatives of the companies in the arbitration board to meet the representatives of the unions which have asked the new Watson-Parker "mediation board" for a wage raise.

The unions agreed on arbitration when the mediation board, appointed by Coolidge, failed to get any agreement on the wage demand. The union representatives will be D. L. Cease of Cleveland, editor of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen Journal, and E. F. Curtiss of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, general secretary of the Order of Railway Conductors.

The members of the mediation board are quite elated at having tricked the unions into arbitration, something the unions have usually shied away from, finding it better to deal directly with the companies. The fifth member of the arbitration board will be chosen by the four present ones, or failing that, by the mediation board.

Western Electric Uses 40,000 in Kearney Shop; Only 4,000 Are Adults

By a Worker Correspondent.

KEARNEY, N. J., Sept. 9. — The Western Electric Co. here is running full force with 40,000 workers, about 90 per cent boys and girls and only 10 per cent adults.

When someone applys for a job at this plant he must reply to about 100 questions which include his life's biography, and if everything is O. K. then he gets a job. Before he actually starts working he must pass a thoro physical examination by a physician and a nurse.

They Get 30 Cents.

The workers are paid from 30 cents to the highest price of 78 cents per hour. This is the wage of the young workers, I do not know that of the adult workers.

The work is nine hours per day, in order to speed-up the administration gives out a "bonus" to the workers.

The girls in order to get more bonuses eat about 5 minutes during lunch period and then go back to work thus making a couple of cents more. We get a half an hour for lunch. We work on an average of 53 hours per week.

Must Work Overtime.

The firm pays time-and-a-half for overtime during week days, excluding Saturdays. Workers are forced to work overtime. If a worker refuses to work overtime he gets fired or is laid off for a week. You are not allowed to converse with your shopmate during working hours.

The formen always rushes the workers to speed up more on the work. He is a regular slave driver. If you are late one minute you are docked fifteen minutes. If you come late about 5 times you are fired.

Many workers kick about the terrible conditions but they lack the courage to organize and demend their rights.

Issues House Journal.

This company issues a newspaper weekly which dopes the minds of the workers by giving them praise for the company. It also includes a sport division. This firm has a club for the workers; most of those that belong to the clnb are adults.

SUE BOX MAKERS FOR DENOUNCING BOSS' THREATS

Enjoin Union from Any Organizing at All

By a Worker Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Sept. 9. — The Paper Box Mekers' Union of Greater New York is made defendant in an unusual injunction case. The Specialty Paper Box Co., 41-63 Porter St., Brooklyn, is seeking a permanent injunction having been granted a temporary one by James A. Dunne, Justice of the supreme court of the state of New York, enjoining and restraining the union among other things, "from enlisting, using and persuading any of the plaintiff to join the defendant union."

The grounds given for the court decision are that by distributing circulars inviting the workers to attend union organization meetings, the union "might coerce and prevent employees of the plaintiff from coming to work and thereby depleting the number of employees; that all of these facts (?) and circumstances taken together tend to demoralize the present employees and to bring about a disruption and destruction of the plaintiff's lawful business."

Boss Hates Circular.

To the injunction papers is appended a copy of one of the union's circulars and as grounds for obtaining the injunction against organizing the workers, the following excerpts of the circular are quoted in the "legal" document, "Join the union, paper box workers, and stick to it." "A worker without a union is like a dog without a home," "Don't let the boss frighten you."

Use Falsehoods.

It is falsely alleged that a statement to the effect that "A strike will soon be called" was issued by the union. At present there are no strikes being conducted by the Paper Box Makers' Union, nor is there any intention on the part of the union to call such strikes. There is, however, in progress an organization campaign, being conducted with the aim of inducing the unorganized paper box workers, who are among the lowest paid and most overworked wage-earnors in New York, to join the union, in order to obtain the 44-hour week and a minimum scale of wages.

Reduce Initiation.

The circular to which the employers took so much dislike contains a note to the effect that the union's regular fifty dollar initiation fee is only two dollars during the campaign. It denounces the attempt of the employers to intimidate the workers and make them stay away from the organization meeting, saying:

"If you come to the meeting and join the union, what can happen to you? Think! Will you be hanged the next day? Will you be shot at sunrise? Can your boss send you to the chair for it? All he can do is to fire you. You can always get a boss; you have no job now, for you can be told to get——— out any day. What you have is a boss. The most you can lose is this boss."

Open Shop Boss Arrested.

NEW YORK, Sept. 9 — William B. Ruhin, manufacturer of paper boxes at 35 Meserole Ave., Brooklyn, was placed under arrest here charged with assaulting George E. Powers, an organizer of the Paper Box Makers' Union of New York.

Powers was near the shop which employs 150 workers, with a committee of union paper box workers, at closing time, distributing circulars advertising a mass organization meeting for open shop workers to be held that evening, when Ruhin, the boss made an unprovoked assault upon him, and thereupon was arrested charged with disorderly conduct.

Passes Bouquet Around; Farrington Gets One

WASHINGTON — (FP) — Tom Tippett, educational director of Sub-District 8, of the Illinois Mine Workers (District 12, United Mine Workers of America), contributes an article to the September issue of the American Federationist, giving the history of two years' development of workers' education in his field. One of the newer methods he emphasizes is the labor drama, which has become one of the most effective means of conveying the lesson of the workers' struggle for emancipation.

He credits the district and sub-district officials and The Illinois Miner, organ of the district, with hearty cooperation in this educational work.

If You Want to Get Fat Keep Away from Red Ideas, Says Davis

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 9—A warning against Communism as a road to wealth and well-being for the worker was sounded here today by James J. Davis, secretary of labor, in an address to a state fair crowd. Davis painted a bright picture of present and future conditions of labor in this country and declared that "nowhere at any time had labor enjoyed so many advantages. Davis is doing fine. He draws a salary from the department of labor and a commission on every sucker who joins the Royal Order of Moose.

Armour Made Bootleg Rye But Is Exonerated Because It Was Unsold

By a vote of 15 to 1, the directors of the Chicago Board of Trade, today exonerated the Armour Grain company of charges that it had mixed rye screenings into a shipment of No. 2 contract rye. A score of witnesses were heard. Government officials took no hand in the case, deciding to abide by the Board of Trade decision. The board found Armour guilty of the screening but the exoneration verdict was found because they hadn't sold the rye.

"Hands Off China!"

Seven British naval officers were killed in China by soldiers under the direction of a Wu Pei Fu leader, and Britain, instead of acting in her accustomed way when her agents in foreign lands are interfered with, laid the fatality to "brigands" instead of to China or any of the warring factions.

There is more than one reason. One is that England is not in a position to tackle China alone and her diplomats have not yet succeeded in roping in the United States and Japan on a united front military campaign against China.

Wu Pei Fu is on the British payroll and it is one of the most ironical instances in ancient, modern or current history that the bullets that killed the British naval men were purchased with funds supplied by the British government. This is another reason.

When Lee Stack, British sirdar in Egypt, was killed in retaliation for the reign of terror he initiated there, the British government insisted on several Egyptian heads and a heavy indemnity. The Egyptians paid because they could not help it. They paid in heads and in money.

The situation has changed since then to Britain's disadvantage. British influence and prestige in China were never at a lower ebb. The most wide-flung imperialist power has one foot on a political banana peel and another one in an economic grave. At home, a strike is shaking the industrial structure to its foundations and a punitive expedition against China with the object of setting up the British puppet Fu in Peking would be regarded with a jaundiced eye by the British working class. It is doubtful if the "labor" privy councilors and the other right wing hootlickers of monarchy and capitalism would be equal to the task of working up working-class enthusiasm for a war against the liberation movement in China.

Japan has her own iron in the Chinese furnace and Chang-Tso-Lin is the Mikado's smithy.

Uncle Sam covets the Chinese market and is not crazy about becoming the goat of disappointed John Bull.

The one cementing factor in the whole situation that would bring those imperialist brigands together is fear of the influence of Soviet Russia which has gained in the Orient in inverse ratio to the decline of imperialist influence.

Capitalist editorial hacks and tin-can-headed liberals see no difference between the foreign policy of the Soviet Union and that of the czar. We refer those gentlemen to the Chinese masses. They know.

It is safe to say that the Chinese situation is charged with T. N. T. The Chinese liberation movement stands in a fair way of being successful in disposing of the military tools of foreign capitalism, Wu Pei Fu, Chang-Tso-Lin and lesser generals. Should the Cantonese and Feng's armies be able to form a junction and establish themselves at Peking, a government could be established with a sufficiently reliable foundation to weather the stormy days that must inevitably intervene before a stable government can be expected.

With a mighty and friendly neighbor stretching from the Chinese frontier to the Baltic and from Archangel to the Black Sea, and with friendly states to the southwest, friends of Chinese freedom and human freedom in general have every reason to be optimistic.

One word of warning to the American working class!

The Chicago Tribune, the most powerful daily newspaper in America, at least from the point of view of circulation and territory covered, in its issue of September 9, called for intervention in China to block Soviet influence. We do not mean to infer that the Tribune plea will bear immediate fruit. But the American workers must be on their guard and every man and woman who wishes to see a mighty people free themselves from the stranglehold of imperialism should raise the slogan: "Hands off China!"

Patriotism and Graft

Harry M. Daugherty, one of the most notorious ex-attorney generals that ever held a seat in an American cabinet, one of the "Ohio gang," patriot by profession and grafter by trade, is now sitting in the dock, while twelve American citizens, no doubt a "jury of his peers," listen to the evidence presented with the object of showing that Daugherty and a former alien properly custodian divided $441,000 between them, which was their compensation for facilitating the transfer of the American Metal company to the lawful owners.

Daugherty was once one of America's most sterling patriots. He was the moving spirit behind the infamous injunction that helped smash the Pullman strike. It was under his regime that the raid against the Communist convention was pulled off by stoolpigeons of the perjurer William J. Burns in 1922. To give a complete list of Daugherty's crimes against the working class would take up too much space. Fortunately, no other tuchun of capitalism in recent American history is better hated by the American workers, and if they do not enjoy his present discomfiture, christianity must have dragged the guts out of them.

Daugherty's confederate in graft is Colonel Thomas W. Miller. Now, let us enumerate some of Miller's sacrifices on the altar of patriotism.

Miller is a founder of the American Legion, a member of its national executive council from the outset and recently elected for two years; head of Fidac, the international federation of war combatants, and a member of the Battle Monuments Commission of which John J. Pershing is the head.

Here is a man who deserved well of his country. At least so thot the colonel. And he went to it. An even split ont of $441,000 is not to be sneezed at.

If the wages of sin is death, the wages of the kind of patriotism that capitalism's flunkeys profess, is graft. The more graft that is to be expected at the end of their patriotic rainbow the more vociferously they express their pure-souled and altruistic devotion to their country.

Daugherty and Miller in the dock are no more venal in principle than their prosecutors. The latter did not yet have the opportunity Daugherty and Miller had, or else they did not get caught. Capitalism and corruption are as inseparable as a pole-cat and his smell.

As the old Greek philosopher put it, our capitalist politicians are ready either to defend their country or defraud it.

BRITISH SWALLOW DEFEAT AS FIGHT BETWEEN FRIENDS

Center War Actions on Canton Government

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SHANGHAI, Sept. 9. — Three British officers and four marines killed and two officers and thirteen marines wounded is the score the Chinese under General Yang Sen, a subordinate of the reactionary Wu Pei-fu, took when the British tried to recover two British ships the Chinese had seized at Wanhsien, far up the Yangtze and 400 miles west of Hankow.

Just Between Friends.

Cables from the British foreign office say that the British government regard the affair as "an act of local brigandage" and will make no formal complaint to the Peking government. This is due to the fact that the clash was with the reactionary troops of Wu, who shares power with Chang Tso-lin at Peking.

How many Chinese were killed by the British when the gunboats bombarded Wanhsien without regard for the population being non-combatants, is not yet reported and may never be known.

Wu Completely Smashed.

Meanwhile, Wu Pei-fu, with his army whipped and mostly gone over to the Cantonese forces, is retreating northward almost alone from Hankow, now thoroughly controlled by the Cantonese. Wu may find a cold welcome from his ally Chang Tso-lin, who is none too friendly and may not wish any general without an army for an ally in the future.

The flagship Hawkins bearing Vice-Admiral Alexander Sinclair, commander of the British naval forces in China, is reported rushing to Hankow from Weihaiwei.

British Back New Militarist.

Other British war action is believed to be behind Marshal Sun Chuan-fang, Chinese militarist dominating Shanghai and much of the lower Yangtze Sun has threatened to attack the Cantonese under General Chang Kai-shek unless they retired toward Canton within twenty-four hours.

Sun is now the imperialists' best bet in Central China, but the Cantonese had already warned him that he is the one to do the withdrawing, and to get out of Kiangsi province or suffer an attack.

The Cantonese also demanded that the British withdraw their recently placed troops and warships from Canton's wharves, where the British are again starting violence against the strike pickets. The British consul-general insultingly replies with a demand for an explanation why Great Britain is treated "as if it were at war."

The Kuomintang at Canton has resolved to intensify the strike and boycott of the British to Hangkong.

MOSCOW, Sept. 9. — The press reports that General Feng Yu-hsiang, commander of the Kuominchun army, is ending his visit to the Soviet Union and is returning to China.

WHAT PRICE RUBBER?

The Facts About the Thompson Mission.

STATEMENT OF THE ALL-AMERICA ANTI-IMPERIALIST LEAGUE.

COL. CARMI A. THOMPSON, the business man-politician whom President Coolidge selected as his personal representative to investigate conditions in the Philippine Islands, will soon be back in the United States ready to make the report that was already written for him when he started on his heralded journey to the Far East.

The Thompson Mission is no idle pleasure trip. For weeks, and even months, the newspapers have been full of it. Why is it that we find ourselves reading so much about the distant Philippines? Important developments are taking place which American workers and farmers cannot afford to ignore. Indeed, the masses of the American people in general will find their interests directly affected.

When the Thompson Mission was appointed last April some naive Filipinos assumed it was going to investigate the brutalities of Gov.-Gen. Wood's regime. Nothing of the sort happened. The president's representative has not really investigated anything. This is apparent from the speeches made by him to Filipinos who flocked around him to demand independence from U. S. imperialist rule. These speeches are exactly the same as those he made in the United States before leaving.

Praises Reserves; Forgets Independence.

Col. Thompson has had much to say of the tremendous iron, coal and other resources of the Philippines—especially rubber.

He has had not a word to say of Philippine independence, altho the correspondent of the Chicago Tribune wrote back to his paper on Aug. 20, that "the longing for independence is the most distinct impression received by Col. Thompson and his party."

In the midst of the Thompson tour Gov.-Gen. Wood vetoed for the second time a bill passed by both houses of the Filipino legislature calling for a referendum vote of the Filipino people on the question of independence.

The Moro Melodrama.

Meantime, some theatrical demonstrations have been staged at Jolo and other places in "Moroland" for the purpose of giving the impression that the Moros hate the rest of the Filipinos and love American imperialism. Moroland embraces all of the vast acreage suitable for rubber-growing. Newspapermen on the ground declared unanimously that the Moro "anti-Filipino" demonstrations were planned by appointees of Gov.-Gen. Wood. The whole business is plainly to pave the way for separation of the valuable Moro provinces from the rest of the Philippines under rigid dictatorship of American officials appointed from Washington. This is in line with the provisions of the Bacon Bill now before congress.

What is really at the bottom of all this maneuvering in the Philippines? The American masses, who, together with the natives of far-off lands, are always eventually forced upon to pay in toil and blood for the dazzling foreign adventures of the American ruling class, must understand what is going on. Every serious foe of imperialism—whether he be worker, farmer, student, or even small business man—must consider the situation with misgivings.

The Urge to Empire.

American capital has made huge profits in foreign investment under colonial conditions. Thanks to big business and speed-up production in the United States, Wall Street has more capital cacer for export than ever before. Also new markets are wanted, and new sources of raw materials for American industry.

The Philippines, which take in 1,500,000 acres of the finest rubber-growing land in the world, loom up as a natural field for intense exploitation.

The Philippine Islands are only 650 miles from the mainland of China. Sudden attention to the Philippines foreshadows imperialist maneuvers in China itself, one of the greatest potential treasure houses of the world. If there is a war between the United States and Japan it will not be due to "the immigration problem," as we are told by clever propaganda. It will be because of the struggle for imperialist domination in China.

America in the Philippines is a rifle pointed directly at the heart of the Orient.

Rubber Makes a Difference.

The Philippines have been an American colony since 1898. Rubber, and the general advance of American imperialism, have now made the islands a key position of empire. Everywhere one sees signs that Wall Street and Washington are preparing to exploit their Pacific colony up to the hilt.

But this implies the implantation of an out-and-out colonial system along classic lines. The cheapest of cheap labor must be created (which will, incidentally, have the effect of forcing down labor standards at home). The Filipino laws which limit landholdings to 2,500 acres each and thus protect small farmers, must be changed to make way for big U. S. corporation-owned plantations and estates. (Firestone asks for 500,000 acres!) Filipino resources must be put at the disposal of Wall Street. The Filipino legislature must be deprived of all power; the remaining liberties of the Filipino people must be destroyed. American imperialist rule must be tightened and perpetuated.

Wall Street Demands.

It is therefore not strange to hear American capitalists declaring on all sides that they cannot invest their ambitious dollars in the Philippines without being guaranteed colonial conditions there. The Jones Law, passed by Congress in 1916, promised independence to the Philippines. It is now demanded that the Jones Law be repealed.

Now we can understand President Coolidge's famous "Homa letter," declaring that the Filipinos are "not ready for independence." Now we can understand the president's last message to congress, urging more powers for the American governor-general in the Philippines. We can understand the Kiess bills and the Bacon bill which will come up before the next session of congress. And we can understand why Carmi Thompson was sent to the Philippines.

Why Thompson Travels.

The purpose of the Thompson Mission is plain.

First of all it is to lay the basis for repeal of the Jones law or its conversion into a dead letter.

Secondly, it is to destroy the Filipino legislature as an effective instrument and to arm the governor-general with new powers. This is expected to result in laws favorable to American capital. It is also expected to lead to the crushing of the Filipino independence movement.

Finally, the purpose of the Thompson Mission is to pave the way for passage of the "rubber-heited" Bacon bill designed to subdivide the Philippine nation and create a new Ulster in the Philippines.

Not Wall Street's Business.

We do not deny that the Moros (400,000 out of a population of 11,500,000) are entitled to special consideration. Their present status was fixed by the United States congress. It should be changed so as to give them full voting rights in the Philippine commonwealth, with a system of local autonomy. What the Bacon bill proposes is their segregation under the absolute rule of an American director as appointed from Washington. In any case the status of "Moroland" is the business of the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands and not of the United States.

American labor, the necessary enemy of Wall Street in the United States, has nothing to gain from American imperialism. For the great masses of the American people, continued domination of the Philippine Islands means only new dangers, new sacrifices, new hardships. Abraham Lincoln once said: "No nation that enslaves another can be itself free!"

Hands Across the Pacific.

American labor must rally around itself all anti-imperialist elements and take the lead in carrying forward this mighty principle.

We must stretch out our hands to the Filipinos struggling for liberty and prepare to fight shoulder to shoulder with them.

We must pierce the hypocritical pretensions of democracy masking Wall Street rule and imperialism.

We must expose the slaughter and program of outrage that is summed up in the Thompson Mission.

In the face of imperialist moves to tighten the net of oppression about the Philippine Islands let us thunder out the demand:

Immediate, complete and absolute independence for the Philippines!

The Filipinos want their independence. American labor must demand it.

We propose the calling of a nation-wide conference to be participated in by all those standing for Filipino independence.

ALL-AMERICA ANTI-IMPERIALIST LEAGUE,
(United States Section.)
Manuel Gomez, Secretary.

When Crash of Antique Coaches Brought Death

Here are several scenes of the two wooden coaches on a Northwestern Railroad Labor Day train that were splintered to bits by an oncoming locomotive travelling at slow speed. The railroad officials have blamed the engineer of the colliding engine, but the coroners' jury has decided that the ancient wooden coaches are more responsible for the five deaths and more than fifty injuries that the disaster took as toll.

White Terror Butcher Kills Cuban Workers

tive are expelled from the country."

Killed by Hundreds.

"What happens here, dear friend, is horrible. Today the daily press and the police 'discovered' an imaginary plot to assassinate Machado and Zayas Bazan, and as a result of this 'discovery,' union men are jailed by the hundreds. The citizens are interned in the military barracks, while the foreigners and some naturalized citizens are deported, or held on the warships for deportation or god knows what.

"Two days ago, an active union man, of the brotherhood of railroad workers, was mortally wounded, in the dark, as he was entering his home at night. Death is expected at any moment.

More Assassinations.

"Since the disappearance of Lopes (secretary Havana federation of labor, whose story was previously told by Federated Press), two more active union men from Camaguey and one from Santi Spiritus have disappeared, their disappearances being surrounded by the same circumstances and mystery as that of Lopes.

"The August 11 issue of 'La Semana' an independent paper was forbidden circulation and picked off the newsstands for the crime of publishing some cartoons condemning the horrible executions of working men. Any one seen with a copy is placed under arrest."

Hang Sixty Workers.

Sixty Canary Islands farm laborers were hung, literally lynched, after the disappearance of a Camaguey army colonel hacienda owner who never paid his workers. The men were forced to sign a note saying they were tired of living and were committing suicide.

A grim fact that the Cuban workers make much of is that president Machado was a butcher until he became president and has the middle finger of one hand missing as a result.

CHAPTER II.

THE STRUGGLE OVER OUR GENEALOGICAL TREE.

All these attempts have a common object—to save man's privileged position in Nature, to widen as much as possible the gulf between him and the rest of the mammals, and to conceal his real origin. It is the familiar tendency of the parvenu, which we so often notice in the aristocratic sons of energetic men who have won a high position by their own exertions. This sort of vanity is acceptable enough to the ruling powers and the churches, because it tends to support their own fossilised pretensions to a "divine image" in man and a special "divine grace" in princes. The zoologist or anthropologist who studies our genealogy in a strictly scientific spirit takes no more notice of these tendencies than of the Almanach de Gotha. He seeks to discover the naked truth, as it is yielded by the great results of modern science, in which there is no longer any doubt that man is really a descendant of the ape-like, that is to say, of a long extinct anthropoid ape. As has been pointed out over and over again by distinguished supporters of this opinion, the proofs of it are exceptionally clear and simple—much clearer and simpler than they are in regard to many other mammals. Thus, for instance, the origin of the elephants, of the armadillos, the sirena, or the whales, is a much more difficult problem than the origin of man.

When Huxley published his powerful essay on "Man's Place in Nature" in 1863, he gave it a frontispiece showing the skeletons of man and the four living anthropoid apes, the Asiatic orang and gibbon, and the African chimpanzee and gorilla. Place it in the present work differs from this in giving two young specimens of the orang and the chimpanzee, and retaining their size to correspond with the other three skeletons. Careful comparison of these five skeletons shows that they are not only very like each other generally, but are identical in the structure, arrangement, and connection of all the parts. The same 26 bones compose the skeleton in man and in the four tailless anthropoid apes, our nearest relatives. The same 200 muscles serve to move the various parts of the skeleton. The same hair covers the skin; the same mammiary glands provide food for the young. The same four-chambered heart acts as the central pump of the circulation, the same 32 teeth are found in our jaws, the same reproductive organs maintain the species, the same groups of neurons or ganglionic cells compose the wondrous structure of the brain, and accomplish that highest function of the planet which we call the mind. We still believe to be an immortal entity. Huxley has thoroly established this profound truth, and by further comparison with the lower apes and lemurs he came to formulate his important pithecometra principle "Whatever organ we take, the differences between man and the anthropoid apes are slighter than the corresponding differences between the latter and the lower apes." If we make a superficial comparison of our skeletons of the anthropomorpha, we certainly notice a few salient differences in the size of the various parts, but these are purely quantitative, and are due to differences in growth, which in turn are caused by adaptation to different environments. There are, as is well known, similar differences between human beings; their arms are sometimes long, sometimes short; the forehead may be high or low, the hair thick or thin, and so on.

These anatomic proofs of the pithecoid theory are most happily supplemented and confirmed by certain recent brilliant discoveries in physiology. Chief among these are the famous experiments of Dr. Hans Friedenthal at Berlin. He showed that the human blood acts poisonously on and decomposes the blood of the lower apes and other mammals, but has not that effect on the blood of the anthropoid apes.*

From previous transfusion experiments it had been learned that the affinity of mammals is connected to a certain extent with their chemical blood-relationship. If the living blood of two nearly related animals of the same family, such as the dog and fox, or the rabbit and the hare, is mixed together, the living bloodcells of each species remain uninfluenced. But if we mix the blood of the dog and the rabbit, or the fox and the hare, a struggle for life immediately takes place between the two kinds of bloodcells. The watery fluid or serum destroys the bloodcells of the rodent, and vice versa. It is the same with specimens of the blood of the various primates. The blood of the lowar apes and lemurs, which are close to the common root of the primate stem, has a destructive effect on the blood of the anthropoid apes and man, and vice versa. On the other hand, the human blood has no injurious effect when it is mixed with that of the anthropoid apes.

THREATEN ATTACK ON CHINA

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

RALPH EASLEY, secretary of the National Civic Federation, delivered a eulogy of the executive council of the A. F. of L. at a recent meeting of the department of industrial relations of the federation. Too the constitution of the United Mine Workers of America prohibits a member of the union from membership in the civic federation, Easley praised the work of William Green, head of the A. F. of L. and member of the U. M. W. of A. When a known enemy of labor praises the work of labor leaders it is time for the workers to watch out.

EASLEY was just as' bitter in his attack on the Communists as he was fulsome in his praise of the bureaucrats. He declared that both the Passaic strike and the needle trades strike were directed from Moscow and congratulated the labor leaders on opposing Soviet recognition. He praised labor banks, insurance companies, the U. S. G. Emciency Plan and the suggestion of the A. F. of L. council, that labor, capital and the agrarian interests should hold a round table conference and discuss the best means to encourage industry and block government interference. Thus the lion lies down with the lamb with the lion on the outside.

REACTIONARY as the A. F. of L. council is the Knights of Columbus are not satisfied with it because it has refused to come out boldly for American intervention and repudiate the position of former A. F. of L. conventions on the American question. So the knights have exhumed David Goldstein who forsook the religious totem of his ancestors for the bleak pots of Rome. The A. F. of L. have their own reasons for not wishing to break with Mexico and even the catholic labor leaders are not willing to risk a religious civil war in their unions, even for the organ grinder on the Tiber.

THE capitalist god was kind to the G. O. P. when President Harding died. Had he lived another year the grand old party would be as healthy as a mangy sheep. On the front pages of the papers we read of the indictment of Daugherty and Miller, for accepting bribes from people who were out to defraud the government. We read of other republican beneficiaries having committed suicide. And again of Doheny and Fall who are still awaiting indictments, one for having leased naval oil lands for a song and the other for having accepted $100,000 and a beard of cattle for his trouble. Harding was a nice fellow. But al Cis a more reliable capitalist servant.

GERMANY is now in the league of nations and the funniest news lid dit connected with the incident is the announcement that Americans were turned ont of the Hotel Metropole in Geneva to make room for the Germans who were known as "Huns" a few years ago. Time times change. It would be good amusement to watch the stoolpigeons who were persecuting anybody caught eating sauerkraut during the war, grinding their teeth with rage et the sight of German delegates gotting coddled by their former enemies.

BALTIMORE AT PEAK OF SCAB COAL SHIPPING

344 Ships in August; Mostly for Coal

By GORDON CASGADEN.
(Special to The Daily Worker)

BALTIMORE, Md., Sept. 10.—Baltimore, like Hampton Roads, the other great center for shipment of coal to break the British miners' strike, established a new port record during August.

During the month just closed it exported 854,000 tons of coal, a substantial gain over July.

Smash World Record.

Norfolk and Newport News, twin ports of Hampton Roads, which smashed the world's record for monthly coal shipments, exported 3,317,013 tons, tha grand total of the two ports being 3,317,013 tons during August.

At least half of this amount went to the British Isles, the seat of labor's present fight against organized capital. Italy and other continental countries, as well as South American and other nations which, in normal times, get most of their coal from Great Britain, also received large quantities of American coal.

More coal was shipped from here during August than during the twelve months of 1925, when 64 ships carried 290,000 tons from Baltimore.

344 Ships in One Month.

Three hundred and forty-four vessels arrived in this port during August, a record number. This is four more ships than during the previous month. Ships of United States registry decreased from 182 in July to 171 in August.

Of ships from other countries those flying the British flag led, 88 being from that country, Italy and Norway divided second place with 22 vessels each. Among other countries represented were Spain, with 8 vessels; Japan, 7; Holland, 6, and Germany, 5 vessels.

Two hundred and eleven ships left for foreign ports, approximately half of the transoceanic voyages being made with coal to force Britain's miners into serfdom.

Scab Coal Cargo Pays.

Those coal-carrying ships get high charter prices in the maritime rush. The average voyage from here is considered from Chesapeake Bay to Oran or Algiers. The average rate is $4.10 for each ton carried. Vessels are loading from 4,000 to 9,000 tons, or an approximate average of 6,500 tons each.

Many of the vessels getting this rate have been laid up for years in European ports. The S. O. S. call of Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin of the British empire, commandant of capital's forces in this ruthless war on the little children, women and men of the mining districts of the British Isles, brought them into action.

Bring Old Ships into Service.

Many European tramp steamers were saved from the scrap pile, where lack of cargoes had consigned them, marine mon declare.

Import American Scab Linotypers to Break Strike on Tokyo Paper

(Special to The Daily Worker)

TOKYO, Sept. 10.—The Japan Advertiser, an American daily, is importing scabs to run its linotypes. The Japanese operators have conducted several strikes recently, most of which they won, as solidarity is good among men in the east able to set type in the English language. The newspaper employed fifteen linotypers.

Without notification to its men, the company brought over five white rats from the United States to work on its machines, and they took the places of eight Japanese, who were discharged. The other seven Japanese operators struck also, but by working overtime, the white scabs were able to get out the paper.

The imported labor came to Japan in violation of the immigration laws, but altho the discharged men have appealed to the foreign office of the imperial Japanese government, no action towards deportation has been taken.

POLICE ATTACK PASSAIC MILL PICKETS AGAIN

Twelve Strikers Beaten by Coppers

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Sept. 10.—Twelve Passaic textile strikers reported to headquarters of the new Passaic local of the United Textile Workers Union that they had been beaten by police when they refused to break up a picket line they had thrown about the office of the Botany mill.

The strikers had received permission from the safety commission to picket the Botany mills and were going about their picketing in a peaceful manner, as usual. This is the first instance of police violence against the strikers since the formation of the new union.

Big Demenstration.

A permit has been issued for the big parade thru Passaic Saturday, which is to celebrate the affiliation of the textile workers with the American Federation of Labor thru the formation of Local 1603 of the United Textile Workers' Union.

President Green of the A. F. of L. will be the speaker at a mass meeting to follow the parade in First Ward Park. Senator Walsh of Montana may also speak.

Textile Union to Stage Big Demonstration

By Federated Press.

NEW YORK, Sept. 10. —(FP)— Eight thousand Passaic strikers have joined the United Textile Workers' Union already, Thomas F. McMahon, U. T. W. president, announces. It is expected that more of the striking wool textile workers, who numbered 15,000 at the peak, will join the union shortly. A tremendous demonstration is to occur in celebration of the workers' entrance into the union.

Get Picket Right.

Gustav Desk, head of the new Passaic textile union, and George Hayes of the U. T. W., conferred with Passaic commissioner of safety Abram Preiskel and won his admission of their right to picket all gates of all struck mills, particularly those of Botany Mills which had been barred to them.

Cloakmakers Keep Up Fight.

New York cloakmakers are continuing the strike for the 40-hour week, increased minimum wage scales and limitation of contractors with jobbers' responsibility. Eyes are turned toward Gov. Al. Smith who insisted that he would ask the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union to reconsider its rejection of the arbitration proposals made. Conferences with the inside manufacturers failed of successful outcome. The union demands that all employing factors, the jobbers especially who control most of the industry, must be brought into conference.

Electricians Strike.

Electrical workers on the new Paramount and Brooklyn municipal buildings as well as smaller structures are striking until contractors supply them

GERMAN TAKES WITNESS STAND IN GRAFT TRIAL

Tells How Money Got to Harry Daugherty

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Sept. 10.— In calm, business-like tones, Richard Merton, German capitalist, today related in federal court details of the alleged $391,000 Liberty bond "pay-off" in the transaction whereby he was able to obtain the return to German interests of $7,000,000 from the United States alien property custodian which had been seized during the war as German property.

Harry M. Daugherty, former attorney general in the Harding administration and Thomas W. Miller, alien property custodian during that period, are being tried before Judge Mack, charged with conspiring against the government in connection with their participation in this deal.

Where Coin Was Passed.

Merton testified amid deadly silence in the courtroom that he turned this Liberty bond "divvy" over to the late John T. King, Connecticut politician in the lobby of the banking house of Goldman, Sachs and Co. in New York City.

Merton, a well-knit, business like man of about fifty was brought from Germany by Emory R. Buckner, United States attorney, to disclose details of the alleged scheme.

Merton testified he went to the brokerage house and got the bonds in two batches $195,000 in second 4½'s and $196,000 in 4¼'s.

End of Relationship.

"I met King in the building," he testified. "After I gave him the bonds I said good-bye to him, and that was the end of our relationship in connection with this matter."

United States Attorney Emory Buckner, who is prosecuting the government's case, then introduced into evidence the receipt Merton said he gave the brokerage company for the bonds.

The receipt was signed by Merton, and read:

"Received by the order of the Societo Suisse $391,000."

The Societe Suisse was one of the companies abroad that Merton was representing in his special trip to this country to effect the return of seized alien property.

Asked for Retainer.

Next in importance to Merton's explanation of the "divvy" was his statement earlier in the day that he had been asked by King for a "retainer" of $50,000 and that he gave it. He had told King, he said, that he had employed a lawyer but King informed him a lawyer was not necessary.

He said he paid King by check; that the check was drawn on the Chase National bank and that it was made payable to King.

Merton was entirely unmoved as he related details of the alleged deal "for the return of the seized foreign property." He frequently looked straight at the former attorney general as he testified.

Taxi Drivers Strike Against Pay Slash in Wealthy Boston Suburb

BROOKLINE, Mass., Sept. 10.—Drivers of Red Cab and Tan Co. machines are striking in this wealthy and fashionable Boston suburb against an attempt to reduce their pay. The men were getting $25 a week, but have been offered a guarantee of $3 a day, plus 25 per cent commission on all cab earnings over $10. This rednces pay to $21 a week, if the men work seven days steadily.

The highest wage received by any driver under the new scheme in the first week's tryout was $22.69, the cabmen declared, and they could not support their families on that. The men ask a flat wage of $28 per week and 55 cents an hour rate for an 11-hour day, seven-day week.

Get $100,000 From Train.

Mail pouches containing currency said to total $100,000 or more were stolen today from a Grand Trunk railway train at Evergreen Park, Chicago anburb, by two bandits who escaped in an automobile.

Daugherty Accused of Taking Huge Bribe in Conspiracy Trial

Harry M. Daugherty, attorney-general in the Harding "oil" cabinet and prominent actor in the "Teapot Dome" scandal, figures again in the news. He is seen here about to buy a paper to see what the journals have to say about the last charge against him: that he took a bribe of almost half million dollars for facilitating the return of property to dispossessed Germans.

WORKERS PARTY IN CONNECTICUT STATE ELECTION

Offers to Join in United Ticket

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Sept. 10. — Delegates from Workers Party branches thruout Connecticut composed a nomination convention held at the Labor Lyceum here which placed a ticket in the state election in the name of the Workers' Party. The convention was well attended and in addition to choosing a state ticket offered to withdraw from the race providing the State Federation of Labor which is to meet soon places a united labor ticket in the field.

The party nominated the following state ticket: William McKenzie of Stamford, for governor; Edwin Mranko of Bridgeport, for lieutenant-governor; Harry Wilson of Hartford for treasurer; John Gombo of Bridgeport, for comptroller, and Jane H. Feldman of Bridgeport, for secretary of state. A nominating committee was also appointed to arrange for senatorial nominations.

Petitions Out.

Petitions have been issued and will be circulated thruout the state to place the nominees officially on the ballot in accordance with state law.

Resolutions of support to the British coal strike and demands that the United States keep hands off the Mexican and Chinese situations were passed as also a resolution calling the attention of the workers of Connecticut that the Socialist Party convention had turned down the offer of the Workers' Party to join in a state labor convention to put a united labor ticket in the field thus betraying the interests of the workers.

For A Labor Party.

"The Workers' Party is willing to subordinate its own name to the needs of the labor party and stands ready to withdraw its candidates at any time in support of a united labor ticket," says the resolution challenging the state federation of labor to enter the field with an independent ticket.

The platform adopted by the convention included planks for the recognition of the Soviet Union; abolition of the use of police in labor disputes; and eight-hour law; state ownership of public utilities; repeal of legislation against striking and picketing, and other demands included in the congressional platform of the Workers' Party nationally.

JENSEN'S VOTE JUGGLING WAITS FOR HUTCHESON

Carpenters' President Is Now in England

By ARNE SWABECK.

President William Hutcheson of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America is now attending the Trade Union Congress of Great Britain as one of the delegates from the American Federation of Labor. The second delegate, Frank Farrington, appears to be too busy fulfilling his contract with the Peabody Coal company and is kicked out of office in the Miners' Union, anyway.

While President Hutcheson is in England there is little possibility of the appeal from the vote juggling in the Chicago District Council elections being acted upon by the general executive board.

Jensen and Hutcheson Together.

At last year's international election of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters, two opposition movements appeared and the Hutcheson machine won ont a good hit ahend. This year at the Chicago Carpenters' District Council elections a united opposition entered its ticket and the district council president, Harry Jensen, was defeated. However, as an adept pupil of Hutcheson he managed to declare

IMPERIALISTS ALARMED OVER CANTON ARMIES

Robber Powers Massing Their Naval Forces

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10.—The state department has indicated that the United States may join hands with Great Britain and Japan in armed intervention to check the spread of the Chinese armies of the Canton government which are fighting for national liberation. The U. S. has a squadron in Asiatic waters and may use this in warfare upon the movement for national liberation.

U. S. Boats Inland.

Reports that two American marines on the destroyers Stewart and Pope have been wounded by firing at Hankow, may be used as the excuse to enter into armed intervention along with the British. The department does not explain why American war vessels should be 600 miles inland from the Chinese coast.

Much depends upon what Japan, America's keenest rival in the far east, may do toward a joint war of intervention.

Japan Evasive.

TOKIO, Sept. 10. — Government spokesmen say that Japan will not "at present" intervene in China "except to protect its nationals." It is significantly added, however, that if the Cantonese forces continue to advance northward, Japan's policy "cannot be predicted."

Imperialists Alarmed.

SHANGHAI, Sept. 10.—The swift developments of the victory of the Cantonese in the Hankow region have created consternation in the imperialist foreign settlements here and in Peking, since it is felt that unless the rival imperialist powers do not join at once in some war against the nationalist liberation movement, all may be driven ont of the positions they have long used to exploit the Chinese people.

This is the unifying force which may bring the United States, Japan, and France into line with Great Britain, in armed intervention to crush the swiftly rising power of the Canton government. The force against such unification is the intense rivalry among those imperialists.

Angry at French.

The British are indignant at the French a French gunboat having stood by without assisting at Wanhsien, far up the Yangtze, while the

A. F. of L. Convention May Discuss Entry of U. S. Into the League

WASHINGTON, Sept 10. —(FP)— Discussion of the wisdom of American entry into the league of nations is guaranteed revival by the fact that Germany is now a member of the league and of its council. Resolutions urging that American labor raise the fight for American membership in the league are anticipated when the American Federation of Labor meets in convention Oct. 4 in Detroit.

Every since Samuel Gompers went to Paris in 1919 to assist President Wilson in his agitation for the creation of a league, the A. F. of L. has stood by the principle of a world association of nations. At its last convention it rejected a resolution demanding that the United States stay ont of the world court. It, ordered its executive council to study the whole question of maintenance of a world tribunal to make and maintain peace, and to report this year.

...S COAL ...ERS CALL FOR CONVENTION

...Jacksonville Pact Was Broken, They Charge

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Sept. 10. — Local Union 705 of the U. M. W. of A. Peltier, Ill., unanimously passed a resolution which was forwarded to the district executive board of the Illinois Miners' Union in care of Walter Nesbit, secretary-treasurer, requesting the calling of a special district convention in accordance with the provisions of the constitution.

The demand for a special convention comes as the result of the disclosure, that Frank Farrington, president of the Union signed a contract with the Peabody Coal company at a salary of $25,000 a year, for a three-year period.

Broke Jacksonville Pact.

The resolution declares that Frank Farrington and vice-president Harry Fishwick, candidate for president to succeed Farrington, represented the Illinois Miners' Union in signing up the Jacksonville agreement which carried the provision that "there shall be no change in prices or conditions during the life of said contract," yet those officials, the resolution declares, "signed up numerous contracts with coal companies in Illinois ignoring the message basis of the Jacksonville agreement with the consent of the district executive board."

Call for Referendum.

In the event of the district executive board failing to give the O'Fallon local a satisfactory reply in fourteen days, the resolution authorizes the local to circularize the local unions so as to get the necessary 5 per cent of signatures for a referendum vote of the district.

Since the Farrington exposure the morale of the progressive elements in the Illinois Miners' Union is on the upgrade. Hitherto the slightest attempt on their part to express themselves was met by a campaign of fierce persecution on Farrington's part, ably seconded by blacklisting by Farrington's coal operators.

Miners Feel Strong. .

Now, in view of the changed situation, the coal diggers feel themselves in a position to undertake a serious campaign to eliminate the Farrington group from the leadership of the Illinois Miners' Union. It is reported that one of Farrington's tools, who has posed as a progressive, is going around looking for somebody connected with the progressive opposition to run for the presidency in an effort to split Tumulty's support.

CURRENT EVENTS

By T. J. O'Flaherty.

HOW capitalist campaign managers raise campaign funds and find the contributors is told in a series of fiction stories running in a Chicago daily. A reads well. The narrator tells of a scheme to separate a newly rich business man from $50,000. The sucker was invited to dine with the president, the latter failing in with the plans. Mrs. President took cognizance of Mr. Sucker's wife who in return voted satisfaction. The president informed the sucker that he was glad such a worthy person was inclined to participate more actively in public affairs and observed that he had a few ambassadorships waiting for such characters. The rest was easy. Getting $50,000 from Mr. Sucker was like selling hootch to a prohibition agent.

THEN a woman problem suddenly loomed on the troubled political horizon. In a certain state where the voters are dicks, a prominent society lady developed an itch to sit in the seats of the mighty in Washington. So she imbued her followers with a crusading spirit and soon had them thinking that on their shoulders rested the duty of blowing a spiritual breeze into the fetid atmosphere of G. O. P. headquarters. The political Amazons marched on Washington and had the managers worrying for a while.

BUT a precocious publicity agent snapped out a few suggestions and by the time the ladies had finished a spicy luncheon in the private apartment of the campaign manager, had accepted the attentions of various senatorial leaders, stood up under a barrage of flattery and were shown the works at campaign headquarters, they were entirely satisfied, some more so, that Mrs. Bull (not her real name) who was given all the work she could handle and had a good time for herself making the other women run errands and in general make fools of themselves while the state campaign manager directed the campaign. And mark you these wise ladies were ardent suffragettes!

WHO shot McSwiggin?" is a question that remains unanswered and for good reasons according to Sergeant Anthony McSwigan, father of the murdered assistant district secretary. McSwiggan, Sr., declares that all the investigations were fake performances, that the murderers of McSwiggen are known to the authorities, but the latter will not move as the criminals are in politics with the prosecuting authorities.

MUSIC STRIKE ENDS; SIGN 3-YEAR CONTRACT

Officials of the musicians' union came to an agreement with the exhibitors' association after an all-Thursday night session and practically all day Friday. President Coolidge intervened that Clark's newspapers always stood for "high ideals in the social and political life of the nation."

Clark's death was also commented in frequent editorials supporting the open shop, and in the periodical appearance of the open shop page, listing the big Connecticut manufacturers who operated without unions.

The agreement follows many hours of futile negotiations which John C. Gamble, international vice-president of the musicians participated on behalf of President Joe Weber.

All that remains before the musicians return is for the agreement to be ratified by a general meeting scheduled to be held Friday night.

Four-Men Orchestras.

The theater owners agreed to retain four-men orchestras in the smaller houses, a seriously disputed point during the negotiations. The strike had been in progress since early last Monday morning and left the movie shows and vaudeville houses entirely without music save mechanical devices.

Fighting in Nicaragua Fills Hospitals with Partisans of Chamorro

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, Sept. 10.—Heavy fighting is reported from the vicinity of Chinandega. The government has mobilized all possible force, and the outcome is still doubtful. The hospital here is crowded with wounded, who are being tended by the Red Cross and the Green Cross.

The Chamorro government claims minor victories at Estelli and at El Sauce. More rebel bands are reported operating in the interior.

...CONGRESS MOVES TO RIGHT

Leaders Defeat Two Progressive Moves

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Sept. 10.—The Trade Union Congress in session at Swansea this week has been the scene of conflict between the forces of progress and reformism, with the result so far that the right wing leadership has won some victories after sharp clashes with the left wing delegates, particularly the miners and machinists, or "engineers" as they are termed in England.

Unite Against Critics.

The general council leaders, both of the right and so-called "left," had united against allowing any discussion of their conduct in the general strike and the betrayal when on the point of victory. A delegate of the engineers' union precipitated a sharp struggle that led to a near physical clash, when he moved that the committee investigate the conduct of the strike by the general council, which he denounced as having proven cowards by their order calling the strike off. His motion was defeated.

Again the left wing fought for its proposal that the general council have greater power in the direction and control of any struggle, power to levy assessments on all or part of the affiliated organizations, and power to call a gradual, partial or complete strike stoppage of all or any part of the affiliated bodies.

Forego General Strike Weapon.

This proposal was fought most bitterly by the members of the general council itself, who gave the impression that they would not consent to another general strike and inferred they were sorry they called the last one, thereby throwing struggle in this manner, they excused their reluctance on the ground of sectional interests of their particular unions, taking the same attitude as the hitherto despised Ramsay MacDonald.

C. T. Cramp of the Railwaymen bitterly attacked the proposal for more power to the general council of which he is a member, and in so doing expressed the real opposition to the general strike in principle. He declared a "mouldy and ancient conception, that all our difficulties can be solved by the general strike." He added that his union was opposed to giving the council more power on the ground that "We've had some," thus expressing regret at the general strike instead of the betrayal of it.

Cramp Wants No Struggle.

He evaded the point that power is not necessarily to be used for betrayal and that centralization of power is absolutely essential for successful struggle.

John R. Clynes of the General Workers' Union and Ernest Bevin of the Transport and General Workers' Union also opposed the motion, and the resolution and its amendment were voted down.

The miners' delegates attacked J. Bromley, when he posed as a defender of the resolution supporting the miners, shouting their protests at him as a hypocrite who was actually opposed to the miners' strike.

Council Takes Refuge in Dignity.

A cable from Michael Tomsky, chairman of the delegation of the Russian unions which was barred by the government from landing in England, was distributed among the delegates and created a stir from its sharp criticism of the leadership of J. H. Thomas during the general strike. Thomas was charged with being the main instigator of the defeat of the fighting workers of Britain, for whom victory was in sight when their weak-kneed leaders called off the strike.

The general council took refuge behind its dignity and declared they would not even reply to such alleged "presumptuous criticism." Tomsky's cable stressed the necessity of a closer co-operation between British and Russian workers in the international committee for a better support to the striking miners than had been given in the past.

Portland Organizes a Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Conference

PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 10.—International Labor Defense was the initiator of a local labor conference for aid to Sacco and Vanzetti at which were present delegates from labor unions and fraternal organizations.

Proposing to hold a mass meeting to raise funds to help the two Italian frame-up victims, the conference elected a committee to visit the Labor Temple Association to request the use of the hall gratis for this purpose. The committee was told it would be necessary to pay the regular fee of $60. However, the meeting was held, but at another hall. The attendance was good and a generous collection taken for the defense fund.

CHRISTENSEN TO SAY CORRUPTION IS MAIN ISSUE

Progressive Party Man Decides on Slogan

In consultation with his friends and supporters at the Hotel Morrison, Parley Parker Christensen announced his chief slogan in the race for senator from Illinois to be "A return to honesty and economy in public life." He intends to stick closely to the question of eliminating graft and doing away with such evils as the recent slush fund investigations showed, and will not indulge in much argument over what he believes to be matters of lesser importance, such as prohibition and U. S. relationship to the world court.

Against Corruption.

"I will make public conscience if I can," said Christensen, so as to drive out of public life the infamous bipartisan political system in Illinois, whereby Sam Insull, director of utilities, is able to control all senatorial candidates by contributing to their campaign treasuries. "Insull plays a game of 'Heads I win, tails you lose.' From the point of view of the candidates it amounts to buying a job, using Insull's money, and 'He who pays the fiddler, calls the tune.'"

Hits Federal Reserve.

Christensen commented on the fact that the banking system in the United States was such as to give private control of the public currency. The Federal Reserve Banks, he stated, are able to inflate or retract the currency, altho they are private concerns and will be influenced solely by private bankers' consideration.

The bankers have the power to enrich or ruin individual business men, and may in the future, as they have in the past, so juggle the circulating medium as to impoverish the farmers.

Farmer Should Organize.

The farmers, he says, should be organized not only to buy collectively what they need for their farms, but also as to be able to sell collectively what is produced from the land. He would like to arrange production thru co-operation between the farmers and the department of agriculture.

But he returned continually to the main issue as he conceives it, "most reforms await a cleaning up of politics. My duty is to arouse the voters to the seriousness of the situation. At present in Chicago elections are decided by things, and not by ballots."

Christensen started yesterday to Brown, Clinton, Co., to speak at the fair, and will continue on a speech-making tour until about the time of the election.

Bandits' Bell $300,000.

CHAMPAIGN, Sept. 10.—The three Illinois Central railroad jewel robbers, arrested yesterday less than 12 hours after they stepped from a train here with $500,000 worth of stolen jewels, were held under $300,000 bonds each on three charges of robbery with a gun at a 3 a. m. court session.

Mrs. Corson Welcomed.

NEW YORK, Sept. 10.—(fna)—Mrs. Mille Gade Corson, who came to this country for the first time seven years ago, unheralded and unknown, returned today and received the official welcome of the city, as thousands cheered in recognition of her feat as the first mother to swim the English Channel.

Berger's Daily Revamps An Ancient Lie Against the Soviet Government

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

THE oldest trick of the American capitalist press, as in other countries, is not to aid the British coal miners' strike thru encouraging the relief campaign and demanding an embargo on scab coal, but to attempt to discredit the activities of the Communists in the struggle.

This takes the form, in some instances, of a bitter attack on the Soviet government. At first it was the British tory tyranny of Baldwin that assailed Soviet rule because it was claimed that it was financing the coal miners' struggle. Now the Milwaukee Leader, the organ of the socialist congressman, Victor L. Berger, revamps the old lie that was effectively scotched several months ago, that the Soviet government is shipping large quantities of gasoline and oil to the British foes as substitutes for coal.

The official statements from the Soviet Union successfully exposing the monumental falsehood of Baldwin and the socialists were published in The DAILY WORKER long ago. The story is dead. But in spite of the fact that Berger, as congressman, has introduced a resolution in the house of representatives at Washington demanding the recognition of the Union of Soviet Republics, Berger, the editor, outstrips the capitalist press in his efforts to publish lies about the Soviet Union in his daily, especially this lie about the coal oil shipments.

The inference is that Berger's editorial staff takes its cue on the British mine strike situation from the yellow socialist press of Germany that has already surged the British miners to surrender. It was the Vorwaerts, in Berlin, the official organ of the German socialist party, supporter of the Von Hindenburg capitalist republic, that advised the British miners that they could not win, that they should quit fighting.

There is no effort to deny that the socialist-controlled trade unions of the continent, in Germany, France, Belgium and other countries, are permitting the shipment of strike-breaking coal to Great Britain. In stead they seek to excuse it as follows:

"European coal shipments to Britain can never be a decisive factor in ending the conflict, and, as time goes on, they will become relatively less and less important. . ."

Then later:

"That is not to say that it would not be much better, if it were practicable, to prevent the export of any coal to Britain, and any removal of foreign coal within Britain itself."

This is arguing in a circle almost more ably than the writers in the employ of Victor Berger. First the Soviet Union, with its oil fields a thousand miles removed from British shores, in far off Asia, is charged with sending this fuel for strike-breaking purposes to Great Britain. This the Soviet Union is supposed to do with only a small fleet of ships at her disposal.

Then the official press service of the International Federation of (Socialist) Trade Unions, Amsterdam, declares that the shipment of strike-breaking fuel is not decisive anyway.

Well, which is it?

The Russians say that the shipment of scab fuel is decisive and they placed an embargo on this traffic immediately the strike started. Not only that, but they have sent $4,500,000 in relief, raised by Russian workers themselves, not the government, to the British strikers.

The socialists, however, in all the nearby countries, knowing that great fleets of ships are at the disposal of the coal capitalists, serenely watch the growing transportation of black fuel coal to Britain. In this they are no different than the officials of the American Federation of Labor, on this side of the Atlantic Ocean.

On another page today there is published the statement of Adreyev, chairman of the Soviet delegation at the recent Berlin meeting of the Anglo-Russian committee for World Trade Union Unity, in which this statement is found:

"The unhindered transport of strike-breaking coal from abroad to Great Britain, and the transport of this coal to Great Britain itself is a great danger for the struggle. This gives the enemies of the miners, the employers and the government, a powerful weapon in their hands. It is already proved with all clarity that the conservative government in Great Britain directly supports the employers."

The attitude of the German socialists, who inspire the Berger socialists in Milwaukee, Wisc., U. S. A., is no much different from that of the kaiser during the war, who refused to believe that the United States capitalist government could give his enemies any considerable assistance. He thought that he could head off this aid with the sniping of his submarine campaign. Yet American shipping had to come thousands of miles across the water. And it fooled the kaiser.

American coal miners can well appreciate the situation facing the British miners when they know that the coal fields of Germany, France, Belgium, Czecho-Slovakia and Poland are at present closer to the British market than non-union West Virginia and Tennessee coal in competition with Illinois coal in this country.

The attack of the socialists on the Russian workers and the Soviet government is not born of any effort to aid the British mine strike. It is merely the result of a realization of the fact that the masses of workers, in all industries in all countries, realize more and more that the Communist methods of carrying on the class struggle are the only successful ones. The socialist attack on these policies is giving the best aid and comfort possible to the enemies of the workers.

Imperialists Threaten Attack on Chinese

Chinese were defeating the British assault which cost the lives of seven British marines.

The Chinese politicians in Peking, who have supported the imperialist actions of Wu Pei-fu and Chang Tso-lin, are overwhelmed by Wu's defeat at Hankow that they make no move at all.

Hanyang Important.

With Hankow in the hands of the Nationalists, also the city and arsenal of Hanyang, which commands both Wuchang and Hankow with its important artillery emplacements, the gunboats of the imperialist powers are in the same position when they patrol the Yangtse in the Hankow region, 600 miles up the river from Shanghai.

Wu claims that his retreat toward Honan is but temporary and with reinforcements he could return and recapture Hankow, but nobody seems to believe it. Instead, all the major attention now is concentrated on the fight developing to the eastward.

War Over Kiangsi.

Here, Sun Chuan-fang, who claims to rule most of the five provinces around the lower Yangtse, including the province of Kiangsi southwest of Shanghai, has responded to the imperialists with a declaration of war on the Cantonese, who have turned their attention toward driving Sun out of Kiangsi.

The British cruiser Hawkins, flagship of the British fleet in Chinese waters is proceeding to Hankow. It carries seven heavy guns, aimed to be used against the Cantonese. But Prince George of the British royal family now on the Hawkins, will stay safely behind on the coast.

Three thousand new members have been taken into the Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers' Federation, affiliated with the United Textile Workers. About 75% of the new members are from the Philadelphia district, union officers report to the convention now on in that city. The federation convention procedes that of the U. T. W. in New York next week. Hosiery organization ancient exist in all unorganized districts, the union reports. Organizing problems will take up much of the convention time, particularly the suggestion of putting paid business managers into poorly organized districts to build them up.

James Maurer, president Pennsylvania Federation of Labor, pendulum the employers' openshop drive which followed the war. The drive is still vigorous in the west, from which Maurer has just returned.

U. T. W. vice-president James Starr told the 90 delegates from 21 branches of the union in 10 states that their organization had kept hosiery manufacturers closer to the ground and in less danger of overproduction than other sections of the textile industry.

CALL CONGRESS OF SUPPRESSED WORLD PEOPLES

To Meet in Belgium in November

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BERLIN, Sept. 10.—A gigantic step is about to be taken in the world-wide upsurge of the victims of imperialism. This is the first world congress against the suppression of colonial and semi-colonial peoples which will meet at Brussels, Belgium, about the middle of next November.

Provisional Committee.

The call for the congress is issued by the International League Against Colonial Suppression, with headquarters at (cable address) Prorussentrale Berlin German. The provisional committee for the congress includes Henri Barbusse (France), Martin Anderson Nexo (Denmark), Georg Ledebour (Germany) and Prof. Koo Mang Yu (China). This committee asks all nationalists and anti-imperialist organizations as well as those determined to stamp out colonial cruelties and suppression in general, to send delegates to the forthcoming congress. Cables announcing participation have already been received from the Kuomintang Party of China, the Korean Nationalist Party, the Young India Movement and the independence movement of Java, Dutch East Indies.

Lansbury to Report.

The congress at Brussels will take up all of the problems of imperialism, considering in detail specific cases of brutalities in the colonies and suppression of liberties. It will also consider the question of emergence of the colonies and semi-colonies from imperialist rule. Special reports under this latter head will be made by George Lansbury, M. P. of Great Britain, and Edo Fimmen, general secretary of the International Transport Workers' Federation.

Baltimore at Peak of Scab Coal Shipments

came into Baltimore harbor for the first time in twenty years when the steamer Euphorbia anchored in the stream to await her chance at a coal-loading berth to get a cargo for England.

This ship, like many other old-time British tramps, arrived here in ballast to load coal. The Ropner, Watson and Watson and Runciman fleets—all famous a score of years ago in Baltimore—had almost passed from the memory of maritime men here.

But British tory call for strike-breaking ships brought them into commission once more.

Tramp Steamers' Shameful End.

These tramp steamers are tramps only in name. They went into little known places for quick cargoes and high freights and made fine profits.

Then came the freight liners, operated by large shipping companies. They made smaller, steadier profits from regular runs and general cargoes.

So the tramp steamer, soon to pass from the seas like its predecessor, the full-rigged sailing ship, is winding up its glorious career in ignominy—carrying coal to reduce the already extremely low standard of living of millions of British toilers.

GENERAL COUNCIL CANNOT COVER UP, SAYS THE PRAVDA

Compliments Will Not Serve for Deeds

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, Aug. 18 (By Mail).—Today's leading article from the Pravda, "What Do the Workers Expect from the Anglo-Russian Committee" points out that the article of the so-called "left-wingers," Hicks and Purcell, in "Trade Union Unity" is designed to cover up the traces of the treachery of the General Council, which recently approved of the tactics of the British delegation to the Anglo-Russian committee. Purcell and Hicks are making compliments to the Russian workers in order to excuse their own strike-breaking attitude and their attempt to break up the Anglo-Russian committee.

Deeds Wanted—Not Words.

Two years ago the reformists of the British General Council were compelled under the pressure of the workers to assist in the creation of the Anglo-Russian committee. The same pressure of the working masses now forces them to say honeyed words of the Anglo-Russian committee. But we don't want honeyed words; we want, just as the British workers want, deeds. The Anglo-Russian committee cannot be maintained by words, but only by the support of the fighting masses.

We expect the Anglo-Russian committee to commence immediately a campaign of support for the fighting British miners. We expect the committee to announce its opinion concerning the import of strike-breaking coal into Great Britain to break the miners' struggle.

What of Amsterdam?

We expect it to give its opinion concerning the murious interest demanded by certain sections of the Amsterdam International as a condition for granting loans to assist the fighting and starving miners.

We expect the committee to give its opinion of the attempt being prepared by the conservative government to smash the trades unions. The article concludes:

"Either a real policy of class solidarity will be finally carried out or we shall experience a defeat of the British miners and following upon it unavoidably an offensive of capitalism not only in Great Britain, but also in all other countries against the working class.

General Council Responsible.

"The responsibility for such a development would be mostly due to the General Council of the British Trades Union Congress, not by any means to the British workers, who have shown their will to fight. The coming session of the Anglo-Russian committee must give an answer to this question."

BOSSES' METHODS IN STRIKE OF NEW YORK FURRIERS PROVE WORKERS NEED OF LABOR PARTY

By LOUIS SIGELMAN.
(Worker Correspondent)

The fur workers have just gone thru a struggle of 17 weeks, a struggle which was admired by the entire labor movement. The strike was merely for economic demands—to better the living conditions of the workers in the fur industry. However, as soon as the strike started the workers were faced with three kinds of enemies: (1), the bosses; (2), the police, judges and the rest of the state machinery; (3), the right wing, the socialist party and its official organ, the Jewish Daily Forward.

During the strike, the workers realized that the whole state machinery: the police, judges, etc., was mobilized to crush them and break up their picket lines. The gangsters hired by the bosses to slug the strikers, and the bosses, were never arrested but the strikers were when they attempted peaceful picketing. Why is it that the entire government machinery is used against workers whenever they attempt to better their miserable living conditions? It is because the present government is a capitalist government, supported by the bosses and aiding the bosses in the latter's attempt to crush the workers.

Communists Right.

One of the aims of the Communist Party is to help organize all the workers, irrespective of nationality, race or trade, into a Labor Party—a labor party that will demand for the workers the right to strike; a labor party that will fight the right of bosses to use gangsters against strikers; a labor party that will not permit the bosses to use the police and judges against the strikers; a labor party that will be interested in helping and not impeding the right of workers to improve their conditions.

Another lesson that the fur workers learned from the strike is concerning the role of the right wing, the socialist party and its official organ, the Daily Forward. The Forward gave all possible aid to the bosses to break the strike. Representatives of the S. P., including the late Meyer London, had secret conferences with the bosses and went over the head of the workers in an effort to betray the workers. But thanks to the efficiency and sincerity of the Communist leaders, the workers were able to withstand attacks from all sides and were victorious.

Communists Fight.

The fur workers learned as a further lesson in the strike that the most militant and sincere fighters for the interests of the workers are the Communists. It is only the ideal that Benjamin Gold (the leader of the strike) had as a Communist—to fight to the last drop of blood for the workers' interests—that gave him and the rest of the leaders the courage and strength to withstand all attacks and carry the strike to a successful conclusion.

Every fur worker should realize these lessons and join the Communist Party and become a conscious fighter for the class. In doing this, he will help improve the conditions of the workers and will aid in the organization of a mighty Labor Party that will unify all the workers for the purpose of establishing a government that will protect the workers and not the bosses. By joining the Workers (Communist) Party, the advanced fur worker will thus help to overthrow the rule of the bosses and bring about the final emancipation of the working class.

Studebaker Boss Keeps Workers Divided Thru System of Wage Groups

(By a Worker Correspondent.)

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Sept. 10.—Those in department 106 of the Studebaker Motor Co. plant here, engaged on piston lIue group work are making an average of $3.80 for nine hours a day. The group is divided into classes A, B, and C. Women are in class C, and are paid from $2.50 to $3.50 a day. Class A was making last week between $4 and $5 a day. Class B gets $3.50 to $4.15 per day.

The group walked up to Mr. Cleveland, the local slave driver and asked for more wages, but he and his fellow foreman, Mr. Bill Smith told them to go back to work and be contented.

There have been wage cuts in this department. The first time they simply lied to the workers and told them there was no cut.

In addition to that, the men in this group are paid only for the pieces which have already passed inspection, no matter how many were finished. If the company orders cheap, bad steel, the men have to suffer for it. If the stock has not been properly hardened, the men have to suffer for it.

There is a bonus system for the purpose of speeding up the work, so that prices can be better cut. One may get a bonus of as much as $50 or $80 during the year, losing much more than that thru cuts.

The workers are beginning to see these tricks, and also the scheme of dividing them into Class A, B and C in order to prevent them from acting together.

Milwaukee Employers "Let Men Off for Fresh Air"; Wages $25 Month

(By M. ZALISKO, Worker Correspondent.)

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Sept. 10.—The bosses of basic industries in Milwaukee are now nicely on their way in laying men off "letting them off for fresh air," as they say.

Milwaukee streets are filled with unemployed, some are being shipped to work in lumber camps by the government employment agencies at wages of $25 a month, while others are going from shop to shop looking for work, but everywhere they go they hear the same old story again, "No work today; come around tomorrow."

Honesty to Company Ruins Detroit Worker

By a Worker Correspondent.

DETROIT, Sept. 10.—The age-old capitalist proverb about honesty being the best policy has been strikingly refuted in the experience of one worker here. Louis Schnitz was in the employ of the Michigan Central Railroad as a car checker in the yards. He says he was approached by a man named Fronters who offered him $75 to point out cars good to rob.

Schnitz not only refused the bribe but reported the matter to his boss. The Michigan Central had Fronters arrested.

Then Schnitz' landlady became alarmed lest Fronters's followers blow up the place and cricted the car checker and his whole family. Schnitz had to go so many times to testify in court that the railroad discharged him. And now Fronters's friends threaten to shoot him.

JENSEN'S VOTE JUGGLING WAITS FOR HUTCHESON

Carpenters' President Is Now in England

himself elected despite the vote of the membership.

Hutch Struck a Snag.

The beginning of the opposite movement in Chicago dates back to the team work between Hutcheson and Jensen in June, 1924, in forcing upon the Chicago carpenters an agreement in words and effect identical to the Landis aceh award.

Jointly these two also carried on their efforts to crush the opposition to this agreement thru expulsions, but here they struck a snag. The members expelled from Local 181 were reinstated. The local membership was solidly behind the reinstated members.

Because of the building boom existing ever since the war, the contractors have not been in a position to very effectively force the open shop features of the agreement of 1924 upon the union.

The belief that the agreement secured closed shop conditions helped Jensen to carry the election in 1924. But the progressives who then commenced to organize, maintained their organization and carried on their propaganda for real conditions.

A Non-Union Union Agreement.

This year, Jensen renewed the agreement of 1924 with the famous clause 13 relating to stoppage of work or strike being eliminated, but retaining all the other "open shop" clauses. Nothing was put in its place guaranteeing the right to sympathetic strike, which by the way is a part of the constitution of the building trades department. In other words, as the agreement stands, carpenters may even be compelled to work with nonunion men of their own trade.

The progressive group existing since 1924 made its preparations for this year's elections. A new group in opposition to the Henry Jeusen rule appeared just prior to the elections and it became possible for the two groups to unite on the basis of a program of progressive trade demands and also emphasizing the right to freedom of minority expression and opposition to illegal suspensions and expulsions, as well as for the shorter work week and for the organization of all mills with union meterial only to be used on the jobs.

Opposition United.

A joint slate was agreed upon and an active campaign engaged in with the progressive program distributed on the John Hutcheson district.

While several office seekers, pure and simple, naturally became interested in this movement appecting in any way of getting positions, but noticing that only candidates were wanted ready to stand up and fight for a progressive program they soon lost interest in the matter.

This consolidation of all the opposition forces ready to make an honest fight to eliminate the corrupt influences of the Harry Jensen administration threw consternation into the forces of the latter. Harry Jensen went to greet trouble distributing propaganda material applying the red paint thick and heavy, stating that all these progressives were better known as "Communists, Bolsheviks, and Reds" saying that the candidates were hand picked by the reds in a caucus dominated by the reds.

Vanishing Ballots.

This, however, failed completely in its intention to scare away the rank and file members. They seemed to fully understand the correct interpretation of the program submitted by the United progressive caucus. They showed that in their votes cast. The progressive candidate for the District Council was elected by a majority vote, but one local voting strongly for the progressive slate happened to be in arrears with its per capita tax. Its vote was eliminated while the votes cast by Local 1786, also a majority for the progressive slate, mysteriously disappeared.

With little prospects of the appeal being sustained by the general executive board, this leaves the fight at precisely the same point as before the elections. However, with this difference.- An additional example of corruption has been set by the Harry Jensen administration, the rank and file members have received additional evidence, not only of that fact, but also of the need of choosing an administration following a much more progressive program and honestly fighting for the material interests of the union.

Membership Ready For Progress.

The opposition forces have become united around such a progressive program. The rank and file have shown their readiness to respond and with further consolidation of all the opposition forces thru the future activities and with additional clarification to make the unity not only one based on general opposition, but particularly one based on the actual needs of the union, the chances should be much better next time. This is the particular task of the left wing.

RUBBER GROWERS HAVE CONTROL OF COOLIDGE IN CASE OF BACON BILL; ALL ISLANDERS HATE IT

By ALL-AMERICA ANTI-IMPERIALIST LEAGUE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 10.—The reformulated bill providing for a national vote on the question of independence in the Philippines is expected here shortly for presentation to President Coolidge. It has unanimously passed both houses of the Filipino legislature. Coolidge will have six months to deliberate over his action on the bill. It is the view of observers here who are for Filipino independence that Coolidge's favorable attitude toward the rubber interests will undoubtedly lead him to override the wishes of the Filipino people.

Wants Big Estates.

Coolidge, in a conversation at Paul Smith's not long ago, promised Harvey Firestone, Jr., to work for the establishment of proper conditions in the Philippines for rubber growing. Firestone pointed out that one of the first steps would be the changing of the land law permitting the holding of tracts of land larger than 2,500 acres, and that Filipino independence was inimical to the interests of the American rubber growers.

It is also pointed out here that Coolidge has not changed his complete support of Governor-General Wood as expressed in his letter to Speaker Rosas, of the Filipino house of representatives, when he whole-heartedly upheld the general in his suppression of the Filipinos. That he favors the general's present move of vetoing the right of the Filipinos to express their wish on the question of independence is the belief upheld by the long series of reactionary moves against the Filipino independence movement taken by the president.

MANILA, P. I.—The Philippine Herald and other daily papers in Manila carry protests against the frame-up by Governor-General Wood and Carmi Thompson in Mindanao and Jolo to give support to the Bacon bill.

It is charged here that Wood deliberately organised as many of the Moros as he could coerce to demonstrate for secession from the northern group of islands.

But Few Traitors.

The ont of e population of over 1,000,000 he was ebie to rally only 3,000 "demonstrators," cables from the United States show that the Spear ha been giving these occurrances prominence over the vast mass movement for Filipino independence that is organized thruout the entire Ilsands.

It is pointed ont here by members of the legislature the independence movement is so popular in the Philippines that the representatives in the United States congress will now throw their efforts to the Becon bill in order to lusure sufficient rubber lands in the islands, and that the troubles lifted by the Mindanao and Jolo revolts liberately organized to give weight to Representative Bacon's arguments.

RAMAIN, Mindanao, P. I.—Alauya Altono, sultan of Ramain and one of the most prominent Moro figures in Lanao (a district of Mindanao) has voiced his disapproval of the actions of Wood and Thompson in their attempts to stir up trouble on behalf of the Bacon bill.

Sultan Alonio is a firm supporter of independence for Christian as well as Mohammedan Filipinos. Recently he gave a statement to the National News Service in the Philippines stating his position on the Bacon bill and on the general independence question.

"The only way of compelling us to separate from the rest of the Philippines," said the sultan, "is to make Mindanao sink into the bottom of the sea. . . We people in Lanao know how the imperialists manage to make trouble. . . Our Christian brothers are not the only ones who work for independence. We Moros also work for it."

DAILY WORKER SUBS ROLL IN AS LIVE ONES COME BACK TO TOWN

By SAM HAMMERSMARK,
Daily Worker Agent in Chicago.

You can tell the world the live ones have come back from their summer vacations.

Comrade A. Vallentine spent two weeks in Wisconsin and the first day of his return he turns in two DAILY WORKER subscriptions.

Comrade H. P. Clausen, having taken a longer trip and being gone for a longer time, comes back with three subscriptions—all of them from California, where he spent the summer.

Comrade Merguerite Dunne says the women will not be outdone and starts her trip to Seattle right by bringing in three subscriptions before she goes away.

Comrade Stasukolie claims that altha he has not had an out of town trip he can still get subs for The DAILY WORKER and proves it by bringing in two new ones.

We have quite a few names of former subscribers who should be seen at once. Come in and get a few live prospects and help keep the subscribers we have had and put on a lot of new ones.

U. S. CONSULS REPORT WU PEI-FU COMPLETELY ROUTED BY CANTONESE

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10.—American interests have not yet been menaced in the severe fighting that has taken place in the vicinity of Hankow between the Cantonese forces and those of Gen. Wei Pei Fu, according to consular advices to the state department today.

These dispatches emphasized the magnitude of Wu's defeat by the nationalist army of the south. Wu's defeat was principally due, the dispatches said, to the disloyalty of some of his principal officers and men.

SWITCHMEN'S UNION ORGANIZES THREE CHICAGO RAILROAD YARDS IN GREAT UNIONIZATION DRIVE

"We are going to stay with this campaign until the ten thousand switchmen working in the Chicago district join the Switchmen's Union of North America," said L. V. Kanan, one of the two international vice-presidents in charge of the organization drive in this vicinity.

Kanan stated to a representative of The DAILY WORKER that the Chicago district campaign follows a most successful drive of a similar nature in Buffalo. Buffalo was the center of the organizers' activity from January 1 to April, and then special attention was shifted to Chicago district on May 1.

Vice-President Kanan, from St. Louis, and Vice-President Jerry from St. Paul, came to Chicago and making their headquarters in the Federation Building, 166 West Washington St., proceeded to work in the railroad yards of this great railway center.

Chicago Very Important.

The Chicago district is a big and important one, taking in not only the city of Chicago itself, but all the towns lying in the industrial area to the south, southwest and southeast: Joliet, Hammond, East Chicago, Gary, Blue Island and others.

The switching service organization had not kept pace with the times during the last five or six years, and the resort to more energetic appeals to the workers in this trade to join their union is justified by the progress made. Already at the end of August, the organizers were able to report that twice as many men had entered the union in the Chicago district than in any month before, and since then they have still been coming in.

Three Yards Solid.

One hundred per cent organization of the switchmen in the yards here of the Great Western R. R., the Rock Island and the Soo Line is achieved. Several organizers are working beside the two vice-presidents, and there are several hundred applications for membership on hand which have accumulated so rapidly they are not yet acted upon. They will be soon however, and by that time the organizers expect to have other hundreds ready.

Union Raises Wage.

Vice-President Kanan considers the advantages of joining the union almost obvious. "Every worker ought to belong the union of his trade," he said, "and the Switchmen's Union of North America is the union of the switchmen and switchtenders. It is the factor that raises wages for them. Even now we are moving for a wage raise. A demand was made on the carriers last February and is going thru the routine at present. Furthermore, switching and switchtending is dangerous. There would be innumerable accidents if the companies were allowed to drive the men as they would like, without the union constantly struggling for decent working conditions and for safety devices."

ALBAY SPEAKERS DENOUNCE WOOD FOR MASSACRES

Say Governor General Resorts to Thuggery

LEGASPI, P. I., Sept. 10.—When Colonel Carmi Thompson reached this city, the largest in Albay Province, which includes the southern part of the island of Luzon, he found the most bitter denunciation of General Wood's administration that has developed so far.

The residents of Albay are near enough to the Moro districts south of them to have all received news of the coarse intrigues by which Wood and his aids worked up artificial "demonstrations" against the Filipinos among a few venal persons, principally native rulers kept in power by American rifles.

Speakers boldly charged Wood with responsibility for the massacre in Mindanao, and stated that he caused the Zamboanga incident, when hired Moro tribesmen were told to menace the Filipino residents in order to impress Thompson.

American citizens fled from the meeting in dismay. Such an incident has never been known here before.

Thompson had to sit and take it.

Arrest More in Sofia; Summary Prosecution of Twenty Communists

SOFIA, Bulgaria, Sept. 10.—The White Terror is being increased. Twenty Communists have been arrested in connection with an alleged plot against the government. Premier Lyaptcheff made public announcement today that they would be given immediate trial.

Bulgarian prisons are still full of the victims of other raids, many persons having been held for months and years without trial.

The Worst Is Yet to Come

Because the so-called left wing leaders of British labor that numerically dominated the Trade Union Congress, that called off the general strike in aid of the miners, have finally appeared in their true colors and proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that there is no fundamental difference between them and the Thomas, MacDonald, Clynes leadership, capitallat editors are gloating over the apparent crushing defeat of the revolntionary element in British labor.

This is not the first time the capitalists have quaffed the victory cup over the imaginary demise of the class struggle. They will be just as disappointed in their hopes for a liquidation of the class struggle in England as they were in their oft-entertained hope that each anceeeding bandit that attempted to return Russia to absolutism would be successful.

What is in substance the "new wage policy" of the A. F. of L. has been adopted by the official leadership of the British trade union movement. They have repudiated the theory that the working class must own the whole of their prodncts and that the portion of the fruit of industry that now goes into the pockets of capitalism is legalized robbery.

The "new wage policy" of A. F. of L. is merely a more scientific exposition of the Gompersian twaddle of "a fair day's wage for a fair day's work." The idea is that the workers should produce more if the employer is to be in a position to pay him more. It is class collaboration at the pick handle or at the machine.

When Arthnr Pugh, chairman of the T. U. C., declared at Bonnemouth for a "scientific wage policy for generally acceptable principles of division of the prodncts of industry among those who have a claim on it," he was speaking the langnage of the A. F. of L. bureaucracy as only an English labor faker can do it. Pugh, MacDonald and the rest of the king's labor lackeys will continue to sing the "Red Flag" at mass metings and kiss the king's red toe at Bockingham palace levees. The British labor leaders are adepts at that kind of thing. Our own Green dines with Cal Coolidge at Paul Smith's. What is the difference? There is none, excepting the high cost of knee breeches in England and the superior merit of champagne to Canadian Scotch.

The British labor leaders can afford to smoke the pipe of peace with British capitalism, but the British workers who are now on the brink of starvation cannot. Class collaboration worked out mighty fine for the Frank Farrington's, O'Connors and Wilsons in America but the miners and the longshoremen want bread and meat not the rationalisation of betrayal.

Our capitalist editors may gloat over the betrayal of the British general strike and the let-down of the miners. It is a black page in working class history. But the working class know how to work while they wait. There will be another Scarborough for English labor and another Waterloo for British capitalism, and the labor fakers.

Those that gloat last gloat best. Perhaps British labor has not yet drained the bitter cup to the dregs, but the worst is yet to come —for capitalism.

The Second I. L. D. Conference

The ending of the first year's activities of the International Labor Defense and the summary of its activities show that such an organization has a tremendous and useful field in the American labor movement. We think that many radical and progressive workers do not yet quite realize the full importance and necessity of this work of unity for the defense of relief of labor's imprisoned fighters and the assistance to their loved ones left outside of prison.

Several erroneous ideas and mistaken policies have in the past nurtured a tactic in labor defense that actually frustrated the aim in view, the release and relief of every worker imprisoned by the enemy class. First, the belief anything must be done about their defense.

As a result, hurriedly organized committees, lacking experience and widespread mechanism, had to fight an up-hill battle to arouse the working class generally, and often the prisoners were already on the point of execution or their case disposed of by the capitalist courts before their case got the ear of the labor movement as a whole.

Secondly, while it has nearly always been necessary for the organization to which a class war prisoner belonged to appeal to the working class as a whole for support of moral or material kind in order to be effective, this has been difficult because of the sectional nature of such a committee. Often the appeal was not responded to properly because of the rivalry or hostility between the organization appealing and the organizations appealed to.

This, in spite of the fact that every prisoner of whatever organization, belongs to the working class first and deserves the aid of the whole working class movement. The frequently persecuted unorganized workers were generally victimized still more, since nobody interested themselves in these obscure cases.

The International Labor Defense has shown what can be done to unite the various elements into a powerful and permanent organization, non-partisan and devoted to the aid of imprisoned fighters without regard to their political belief or organizational affiliation. It has shown by its work that it helps all alike, responding so far as possible to every case arising where its assistance could be given.

Here is a movement, permanent and ready to act for any prisoner. Here is a movement which any worker can join, assured that his efforts will accomplish something vital. Make the I. L. D. grow!

Calvin Coolidge is opposed to a contest in naval building with England. This statement will give little consolation to British statesmen, who are always justifiably suspicious of kind words from rivals.

George E. Brennan made a bid for the labor vote in Illinois by telling them that the heaviest contributors to the Anti-Saloon League were the Rockefellers who expected to make dependable machines out of their employes. He did not explain why Sam Insull, multi-millionaire utility magnate, gave him $15,000 for his campaign.

DISTRICT THREE WORKERS PARTY STARTS CAMPAIGN TO INCREASE CIRCULATION OF DAILY WORKER

By ALEX BAIL.

At the meeting of the Political Committee of District No. 3, we gave careful consideration to the statement of the C. E. C. on the location of The DAILY WORKER. We are in hearty agreement with the statement "We must keep The DAILY WORKER at all costs, no matter where it is located."

Our district made a very poor showing in the last DAILY WORKER drive and we are determined to make good this time. For the reason we join District No. 8 in The DAILY WORKER drive in an effort to make it an All-Pennsylvania campaign for our daily.

Party Enters Elections.

The party is now definitely on the ballot for the November state elections, in which the leading capitalist parties will be hard pressed for an explanation of the corruption, bribery and slush fund methods in use during the primaries. The party intends to wage an energetic campaign in this stronghold of the coal barons and steel magnates.

We will speak to the workers on the union-smashing campaigns in the bituminous fields, the intensified exploitation in the steel and other industries, the relative fall of the wage scale and the necessity for organization. We will remind the workers of the statement made by Senator Jim Reed that it is almost impossible for a man of moderate means to attain to public office on the capitalist party tickets because of the wholesale buying up of offices by agents of capitalism—and we will put forward the issuo of a genuine labor party.

Party Leads Workers.

The DAILY WORKER has splendid opportunities of becoming the champion of the organized and unorganized workers in our district.

The anthracite miners have not forgotten the sell-out of the last strike by John L. Lewis, and view with alarm the chaotic condition of the United Mine Workers' Union in the bituminous fields. The open betrayal by Frank Farrington of Illinois has brought the conviction that if the United Mine Workers of America union is to be saved the Lewis machine, of which Farrington was a part, must be swept out of office in the coming elections.

Thousands of steel workers in Bethlehem and Sparrows Point, Md., are chafing under the company union plan and are ready for organization.

The rubber workers in Trenton and Philadelphia, working 55 to 60 hours and making $14 to $20 per week, are awaiting the call for organization.

Many Thousands Are Ready.

Then there are the tens of thousands of metal workers laboring under the contract system, co-operative plan and the piece-work-bonus-premium scheme, and the 80,000 textile workers before whom stands the horrole exemple of the Passaic strike.

The DAILY WORKER should and can become the organizor and leador of these workers. This is the task which we have set out to accomplish.

We are confident that the members of the party and the league in District No. 3 will do their share in making The DAILY WORKER a mass organ.

The All Party Members of District No. 3:

FIRST OF LENIN COLLECTION TO BE PRINTED HERE

Very little of the writings of Nikolai Lenin, the man who admittedly left the deepest mark on post-war Europe, is available in English. The Lenin Institute in Moscow, organized after his death to gather all his writings, is preparing a definitive edition of his works, in twenty-five volumes. The first of the Collected Works of N. Lenin to be issued periodically by international Publishers in an authorized translation will be War and Revolution, dealing with labor's attitude towards the World War and Materialism and Critical Empiricism, a brilliant philosophical study.

Lenin on War.

In the first book Lenin outlines a program by which the war between nations could be turned into a war between classes. Besides the development of this basic theme, the volume includes important contributions on nationalism, social chauvinism, a United States of Europe, peace without annexations or indemnities, self-determination of small nations, disarmamont, and socialist participation in the government. The book helps to explain the ideological background of the Russian Revolution.

Philosophical Work.

In Materialism and Critical Empiriolism Lenin subjects the empirical and positivist schools of philosophy to a merciless criticism. He duhs them reactionary and gives a lucid exposition of dialectic materialism—the philosophio foundation of socialism—and its relation to other systems of philosophy.

WITH THE YOUNG WORKERS

CONDUCTED BY THE YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE

FIFTH COMMUNIST YOUTH CONGRESS HEARS REPORT OF COMRADE DORIOT

PARIS, France, August 28—(by mail)—I am going to give you a report from the 5th French Communist Youth Congress which was held on the 15th, 16th, 17th, and 18th of August.

It was opened by a great speech from Comrade Doriot, the well-known Communist depnty who is highly hated by the French bourgeoisie on accnnt of his right and inflexible anti-militarist action; here are his chief words:

"The capitalist seems to have improved his situation since the end of the war. Therefore, the economicel contradictions are developing everywhere, for example in England with the big miners' strike, international conflicts are coming on: France, Italy and Spain, and above all: England and U. S. A.

Amid the capitalist world, furiously plagued, Russia is standing up—not to be afraid with the exclusion of Zinoviev ont of the Russian party political bureau; the unity of this party is, not threatened—Zinoviev was excluded on account of indiscipline.

The French industry has improved its concentration in steel, coal, wool and cotton. The working class must realize its unity.

In France, the capitalist class claims for a dictatorship to dump the debts question on the shoulders of the workers. Fascism threatens this country, we hevo to fight strongly; the Communist youth must he at the head of the movement to unite the mass under the red flag and lead it for the workers' and peasants' government.

On the second day, there were discussions about the statement of the general secretory given as the line: i.e. (opposition to the capitalist offensive). At last the statement was unanimously approved.

A woman delegate from the C. G. T. V. (Unitary general confederation of Workers) spoke about the girls' and women's situation in the movement. Against the French common idea, the women must work in the workshops; now, she has, and she will have in the future society her place in the economical life as a producer, she will not stay at home as in a heaven.

A delegate from the rural district relates the big difficulties in carrying on propaganda among the young peasants, whose wages have more increased than that of the industrial workers. Therefore, often they have had food and a very long day's work, but they are scattered and nearly never reached with our words and purposes.

Then an English comrade spoke to the Congress of the huge fight of the miners and the action of the young English Communists during the miners' and the general strike. He was furiously acclaimed by the whole Congress.

On the third day, there were statements about economic and sports action; everywhere the young Communists must go and attempt to unite and organize the mass in the proletarian organizations.

Anti-Fascism on Agenda.

An Italian comrade gave a talk about the action of the young Communists against fascism. They have been fighting for four years against the most hateful reaction and many of them have been struck to death. In spite of it, they have held an illegal congress and given their words to the mass for political and economic unity against fascism and the coming war. He was highly applauded.

His speech was followed by a discussion about anti-fascist action. They settled on creating the "Young anti-Fascist Guards" among the young workers to unite the youth against the fascist leagues.

The last day began with the statement of a soldier and a sailor speaking to the congress in military clothes —they speak about the "Great Family" as the officials call the Army and Navy and they describe the bad treatment they have to bear and the demands they have to fight for.

Now, the delegate from the Young Communist International comes and speaks of the duties of the young Communists in France, which are to carry on the propaganda for unity among the masses to prepare the success of a revolutionary movement when the time will come.

For an end, Comrade Doriot, whose place is now in forty takes leave of the youth and his words are applauded by the delegates which part with the song of the International.

A SHORT STORY

RAH, RAH BOYS

OF COLLEGE LIFE

"Tre-rah Boom! Tre-rah Boom!"

Mike rested his white-sleeved arm on the broom handle and turned his watery eyes toward the music. Should he or should he not shuffle over the half block and watch the parade. If he didn't it would be the first time he had ever missed, but those knotted old legs, the rheumatism made them creak with pain. He finally decided to go—it might ho the last he would ever see.

The streets were cleared, the traffic stopped as every band in the city turned out for the old graduates of The Cologo. It was Commencement week in a college town and the traditional "Old Grad" promenade was on.

The most famous, the largest college in the country was exhibiting for the benefit of the press and the city, its old students. One of the largest institutions of learning, looked up to by a country second to none for education promotion in the world, displayed for publicity and as a tribute to the college, row upon row of blue serge and white flannels, flying grandstand banners and blue balloons. To add color to the promenade came the younger classes, graduates of five and ten years ago, dressed in the fantastical costumes traditional of some escapade of their college days. Some wore green hats with jaue feathers and rode bicycles. Others wore red and black striped shirts and tam o'shanters.

Not a succestion that it was a demonstration of an institution of learning. All it lacked to make it a circus parade was a carload of wild beasts. The ballons were there, the banners, the noise and the freaks were there.

Book Review

WITH the pamphlet under the title, "Organize the Unorganized," Wm. Z. Foster has written an important document on the strategy of class war in the most vital sector, that of trade unionism. It is a compact and meaty little book.

The argument begins with pointing out that there are about twenty million unorganized industrial workers in America who could be enlisted into unions. Unless the unions begin to grow they will soon be smashed altogether; even the United Mine Workers is being crushed now by pressure from the non-union coal fields.

The present membership of the unions can be broadly divided into three classes, the author goes on to show: militant left wingers who want to organize, progressives who will help if organization starts, and reactionary right wingers who resist organization to prevent the radicalizing of the unions, to avoid struggle, and to preserve the jobs of the union bureaucracy. The left wing must initiate all organization campaigns, and when they are decided upon must actually carry them out, in co-operation with the center groups and against the sabotage by the reactionaries.

Situations occur where the most careful reasoning is necessary to decide whether to organize under the banner of the old unions in the field. Where no unions exist at all there must be new ones created, which must get into the A. F. of L. the main current of American labor. Where fairly sound unions exist, the workers can be organized directly into them. Where very old and decrepit unions claim jurisdiction over the field and are small in size, it may be necessary to organize independently, and disregard them. At times it is necessary, where reactionary unions claim control, but will not organize, to organize the workers first outside of the union and then carry on a struggle to compel the old unions to let them affiliate. Affiliation, one union in each industry, is the ideal, but it is one that cannot be slavishly followed.

The left wing, since it must do the organizing, must learn the various forms of activity possible, whether it is able to start a great, open campaign, as is still possible where the employers are disunited, or the unions already strong; or whether it must work secretly or semi-secretly thru the Workers Party nuclei, Young Workers, foreign language clubs, social clubs, company unions, shop councils, or even some new forms created for the occasion.

Almost always organization in the basic industries (and one reason for an organization campaign is that it will lead the unions into these heavy industries and away from skilled craft job trust psychology) will involve great strikes. The unorganized will join unions if they see immediate material advantages. As Foster says:

"We must study carefully the state of the industry and the condition of the employers' and the workers' forces, base our organization campaigns upon the economic demands of the workers and at all times keep the fight focussed on these demands, plan our organization campaigns carefully and thoroly mobilize all our forces to put them into execution, extend our scope of activity over the greatest possible extent of workers, strike the blow at the opportune time, demoralize the enemy, rouse public sentiment with our maneuvers, develop the utmost fighting spirit in our own ranks by our invigorating propaganda, and follow up our victories to the limit by organizing all the workers shaken into action by our big strikes and struggles."

This pamphlet, as was said before, is strategy. The minor tactics, the multiple considerations and possibilities in each concrete case, are not worked out in it. But in the very act of laying down the broad general principles our attention is called to the details, and if hundreds of militants everywhere do not begin to solve in practice some of the various "delicate questions" posed in the book then they will have missed the spirit of "Organize the Unorganized."

I.

With what slow pain
the rain descends, trickling down the wrinkles of the beggar's neck and splashing
his tray of laces.

II.

In a slum window
a child presses its dirty little face against the dreary window-pane and watches the flow in the gutter carrying its freight of rubbish.

III.

Under the bright lights
a gentleman bows
and gracefully assists his lady, holding aloft a green parasol the while she skips nimbly into the shining limousine.

IV.

The door of the meeting hall opens and slams, throwing a flood of light and of virile stir into the street.

V.

And the Red
shoving a paper into his pocket, makes his way to a hash-joint,
thence thoughtfully homewards to his attic, collar turned up against the rain.

The Messiahs and Other Fakirs

By WM. PICKENS.

JIDDU KRISHNAMURTI! A name to conjure with. Its unpronouncibleness and strangeness will appeal to the ignorant. His backers and exploiters are shrewd enough to know that the easiest way to impose some new religious fanaticism on the minds of the ignorants is to go to the other side of the world and get some stranger of a strange name and fetch him around to be "the Messiah," "the Anointed," "the Christ"—all or which terms mean the same thing.

We'll bet Mrs. Besant, or anybody else, a quarter of a dollar that the theosophists never would have nerve enough, in an English-speaking country, to make a god or a demi-god out of a plain "Henry Smith" or "John Jones." But "Jiddu Krishnamurti" has the necessary number of strange sounds in it. Do you remember the happy old lady who, returning from the Sunday morning service, said: "I certainly did enjoy the preaching this morning! I just love to hear the preacher repeat that wonderful word 'Mesopotamia!'"

Messiahs are no new things in human history. Many new religions have had them, or held out hopes to have them. That is necessary to a new religion. Now our theosophists are exploiting this young Oriental. That is another thing about Messiahs: they have to be young, around 30 years—old enough to be comparatively safe and yet young enough to be appealing. And so Jiddu Krish (we will call him that to save time, or maybe just Krish will do) is adopted by our theosophists. Theosophy is a religious cult whose devotees pretend to be more directly connected with some god than do the followers of most other religions. The word means "divine wisdom" or "wisdom of god." Who never a fellow wants to get out of working hard for a living he always pretends to have some closer connection with God than ordinary mortals have. You will notice that such people never do depend on God to feed and clothe them, however; they expect the ordinary mortals to do that. They pretend to control private wires to heaven, but they live in the sweat of other men's brows.

By Jorgor

A few centuries ago this Krish, with his talent to some sort of inside dealing with the Almighty, could have been put over big on this little world. But today, if we must worship any human at all, we are going to worship some of our real benefactors, like Edison or Burbank or Carver. One Burbank in a million years is worth more, both to the stomachs and to the souls of mankind, than is a "Messiah" every season.

Theosophy may serve the more brainless section of the rich by relieving them of the onus of their idleness and furnishing them with a more aristocratic religion than that of the sweaty working people. After all, the wealthy old dames might worship something a heap worse than this little brown man Krish. They might have a fair-looking god out of Valentino, but he could dance and drink and cuss too humanly, and his performances were too easy for the common people to grasp and comprehend. But Krish is sufficiently unknown and unknowable to turn the trick. And it is a good deal better "divine" statesmanship to fetch "Jiddu Krish" from the far heights of India than to attempt to put over "Sam Shanks" from the red hills of Georgia.

Go to it, Krish! We wish you the best of luck—by all means better luck than that which has overtaken most of the "Messiahs." We hope you will always avoid scandal, which will be hard enough, even for a god, under the circumstances—and we advise that you demand of them always "cash down" for all of your promissory notes on divine favors. There was just one Messiah who loved his enemies and sought first of all the kingdom of heaven—and they lynched him.

THE COMING A. F. of L. CONVENTION.

ON the fourth of October the American Federation of Labor will convene its regular annual convention in Detroit, Michigan. It devolves therefore upon every trade unionist to begin giving serious consideration to the problems confronting the labor movement and to the means for strengthening it.

By Voss

In connection with this important event in the life of American labor, we wish to call the attention of our readers to the Program for Building The Trade Unions issued by the Trade Union Educational League. The program was carried by The DAILY WORKER in its Labor Day issue.

American labor must give serious thought to the present situation. Every trade union organization that feels its responsibility to itself and to the labor movement organization is in duty bound to immediately start a discussion of the issues to come before the convention of the A. F. of L.

There are great opportunities to be found in the present situation for increasing the ranks of the trade unions and strengthening their fighting power. The slogan of the left wing for the Organization of the Unorganized should become the demand of the entire movement to be expressed in concrete action by the A. F. of L. convention in Detroit.

BRITISH MINERS DETERMINED TO WIN.

THE British miners lack no courage, nor perseverance, nor readiness for sacrifice. What they do need is moral and material support from their brothers abroad. And it is our duty here to come across immediately with the maximum that we have, and more.

See what the Russian workers did. Up to date they have contributed a total sum of $4,500,000 and have again decided to assess themselves to the extent of one percent of their earnings to aid the British miners. American labor should take note of this fact and try to emulate the example.

International class solidarity is the dearest possession of labor. Hardly another factor is as vital to the success of labor struggles at the present time as the growing consciousness of the world unity of labor. Today it is the British miners that are in need of support from the workers in other lands. Tomorrow the American miners are most likely to be in the same position. And the success of both will depend upon the readiness of the workers of the world to render this support.

Remember that the British miners are confronting not only the British capitalists and their government but also vacillation and even treachery among the right wing and sham left wing leaders in the trade unions. Dangerous as this situation is, the British miners are determined to win.

History of the Catholic Church in Mexico

By MANUEL GOMEZ.

(Chapter Three—Continued)

"To Hell with the Constitution."

When the secretary of the interior ordered all government employes to take the oath of obedience to the constitution of 1857, the catholic hierarchy deliberately advised, and even commanded disobedience to the order. The archbishop of Mexico sent circulars to their respective country vicars and parish curates, informing them:

"First. That is was not lawful to swear allegiance to the constitution because its articles were contrary to the institution, doctrine and rites of the catholic church.

"Second. That this communication must be made public and copies of it distributed as widely as possible.

"Third. That those who had already taken this oath must retract it as the confessional and make this retraction as public as possible, and that they must notify the government of their action." (Zamacois, "History des Mejico," Vol. VIX, p. 838.)

We therefore see that it is not only now that the catholic church has begun to resort to rebellion against a progressive constitution. The hypocritical clergies who pretend to set so much store by "law and order" and the principle of constituted authority — for the workers—have never scrupled to attack these principles when erected as a barrier against reaction. The oppressed classes in society can well take a leaf from the book of their enemies in this respect. "Law and order" represent in the abstract nothing that deserves respect. They are the slogan of governmental suppression. Only under a workers' and farmers' government can they serve the true interests of the toiling masses.

Happy Days Under Don Porfirio.

We cannot here go into the long-known-out details of the struggle which the church and its allies carried on consistently for the overthrow of the liberal Juarez regime. It culminated in the "Second Mexican Empire," which lasted for three years, supported by French bayonets. On its overthrow Juarez came back to power. He was succeeded by another liberal, Lerdo de Tejada. Then followed the revolt of General Porfirio Diaz, who, basing himself on the old aristocracy and the army, as well as foreign concessionaries, maintained himself in power as dictator for a period of 33 years.

I have already pointed out in previous chapters how the church gradually regained much of its lost power during the "Dictadora Porfiriana."

Diaz ruled by intimidation and subordination. There was no such thing as free elections. Every governor, every local municipal president or "jefe politico," every member of the chamber of deputies, every senator, was virtually an appointee of the dictator. A working class had begun to develop in Mexico, but strikes were forbidden by law, and were savagely suppressed.

It was under Porfirio Diaz that thousands of Indian peasants were robbed of the land that had been in their communities for generations and turned into peons on the lands they once owned. Privilege was thus more firmly intrenched than ever.

Beginning of the Modern Struggle.

But the Porfirian system carried with it the seeds of its own dissolution. This brings us to the modern struggle. In 1910 began what is now known as the Mexican revolution. When Francisco I. Madero led the revolt against Diaz under the slogan of "Effective suffrage and no reelection," a movement was being initiated of far deeper significance than that indicated by the inadequate slogan. The slogan merely expresses the uncertainty of the bourgeoisie under Madero. With these forces were fused the agrarians led by Zapata—and, at a later stage, the rank-and-file working class. It was one of the greatest movements in all Latin-American history. All the forces of progress in Mexico were with it.

The church, of course, was with the enemy.

No sooner had the Madero movement triumphed than Francisco de la Barra, installed as provisional president after the flight of don Porfirio, began to maneuver against the Maderistas from the inside. De la Barra was a catholic and a wealthy aristocrat. In the elections that followed the national catholic party named him as its candidate for president against Madero. Popular pressure was so great, however, that his candidacy had to be withdrawn. The church then resorted to the old stratagem of murdering Madero for president, but running de la Barra for vice-president against the Maderista candidate, Pino Suarez.

Clasping the Bloody Hand of Huerta.

Madero was overthrown and murdered, together with Pino Suarez, through the treachery of General Victoriano Huerta. Huerta's regime, an attempt at iron-fisted dictatorship on the Porfirian model, even outdid its original in brutality and degradation. It is known for its countless crimes as "the bloody dictatorship."

. . . The so-called upper classes, the wealthy and, above all, the conservative or catholic plutocracy, gave the nascent dictatorship its support and its applause," writes Manuel Calero, who was himself a member of Huerta's cabinet. "The catholic party, by its traditions, naturally sympathized with the new regime.

. . . Eduardo Tamariz, prominent and wealthy member of the cabinet, was called to Huerta's cabinet and made president of the chamber of deputies, formed by Huerta after the forcible dissolution of its legitimate predecessor in October, 1913.

. . . Among the deputies imprisoned by Huerta after the dissolution of congress there was not a single one who belonged to the catholic party. Finally, an outstanding cleric, don Francisco Garcia, was named special magistrate to judge the deputies of the dissolved congress." (Calero, "Un Decinio de Politica Mexicana," p. 128.)

The New Magna Charta.

It is not surprising, therefore, that when the present Mexican constitution was adopted in 1917, following the overthrow of Huerta by the revolutionary forces under Carranza that the old anti-clerical provisions of 1857 were re-affirmed and even improved upon. This is the constitution which President Calles is now trying to apply in the face of reactionary catholic rebellion.

The Mexican revolution clashes naturally with the church because the church in politics represents everything that the revolution must sweep away. The present chapter of our story has shown us that the church not only interferes in politics but that at every critical stage of Mexican history the church has fought militantly in the very forefront of the reactionary enemies of Mexican progress.

(The next chapter of "The History of the Catholic Church in Mexico" will show how the church has systematically allied itself with foreign enemies threatening the very independent existence of the Mexican nation.)

A PEEK EACH WEEK AT MOTION PICTURES

"TIN GODS."

THIS picture has its merits. Even the story is different. Not the "busy-business" man who deserts the wife in the "eternal triangle," but, for a change (and the relief of abused husbandhood) the politically ambitious wife neglects the husband in this drama. The husband goes to South America and to pieces—to be saved by a fiery dance hall girl. An old theme, 'tis true, but remodeled to the thrilling climax with a tragic ending, which also is on unusual procedure for American pictures.

Thomas Meighan is the leading actor. His performance is not more than an adequate one—he has done better—and to be fair, no more can be said for Kileen Pringle, who acts ambitious womanhood. But the picture rises to one above the average with the acting of Renee Adoree. Her characterization of the passionate Latin dancing girl is, in the opinion of this humble critic, as fine a job as a director could ask for. This Big Lady who helped to make "The Big Parade" what it was, is an actress the equal of any in American films.

"Tin Gods" is no great picture—but you've seen worse. It's showing (until Monday) at the "Chicago."

"THE AMATEUR GENTLEMAN."

DIPLOMATICALLY, "with reservations," we advise you to see this picture. We liked it. Not that we want you to acquire the genteel qualities of a "gentleman," for that is what the story deals with, but because of the other worth-while features about it. It has real pictorial beauty: the old English settings are a delight; old English customs, views of the life of the times, dress of the period and the architecture are all a setting which almost make the story unimportant. And it is unimportant, but it moves quite speedily even tho with considerable clap-trap attached to it.

The son of an inn-keeper and ex-champion boxer of England, on coming into an inherited fortune, desires to become "a gentleman." He convinces his father of his manhood by beating him in a boxing match (these scenes are most interesting if you are interested in the manly art of squashing noses). On his journey to London he falls in love with a "lady," acquires a valet, who becomes also his social mentor, and after many adventures (which, because of the old English settings, are quite interesting), learns to his sorrow that "gentlemen are born—not made." He-him! But he gets the "lady" "for keeps" and, being a bloke, it seems that even at that early date gentlemen preferred them.

We recall a scene in this picture of three monocled "gentlemen" viewing a painting. The arrangement of this scene was so striking pictorially that we advise you to carefully look for it if you see the film. Richard Barthelmess does a good job of his leading part, his "lady" friend is above the average and the director deserves a vote of thanks for his job and especially his choice of photographers.

—W. C.

"VARIETY"—Excellent, say most critics including ours. Coming to Chicago week of Sept. 12 (Roosevelt Theater.)

"MOANA"—A thing of beauty.

"BATTLING BUTLER"—G. W. says "Fair."

"THE ROAD TO MANDALAY"—The road to boredome.

"HARK NOSTRUM"—Just stale war propaganda.

"MANTRAP"—Has nothing to do with "Up in Mabel's Room."

"SENOR DAREDEVIL"— You'll be sorry if you go.

"THE SON OF THE SHIEK"—Valentino's last picture (Uptown).

"LA BOHEME"—A. S. says "fine."

"THE BAT"—Sh . . . spooks!

"PADLOCKED"— G. W. says "well . . . if you can find nothing better."

NOTE: Only Chicago theaters showing a program for one week are listed. Pictures of current week changed Monday.

Why Is She Back and What Does It Mean?

By N. SPARKS.

"LET'S all heave a sigh of relief. Ethyl is back! There are big signs up around the Standard Oil filling stations telling us so. It looked pretty bad on one time with the newspapers kicking up all that fuss and calling it "looney gas." But now, thank goodness, the trouble's all over! They had an investigation and now everything is sitting pretty. Ethyl is back.

"Of course, if you're a garage worker, maybe it isn't so good. And if you work in one of the stations where they mix that stuff into the gasoline you may have to be pretty careful. And if you work in one of the plants where they actually make the tetraethyl lead—but there's only a hunch of bohunks work there, and they don't matter. What does matter is the great automobile-owning public that you get the profits out of. Ethyl gasoline gives them more miles for their dollar, and that's what counts."

Being rather neatly represented in the great automobile-owning public (to the tune of a few second-hand Fords here or there) we fail to hurt into cheers at this information. In fact we are still inclined to ask: "What is the necessity for inflicting a new and deadly poison upon society—a poison to which thousands of workers will be particularly exposed? Why can't people go on using ordinary gasoline to drive their cars? Well, the answer is: Tetraethyl lead (which is the substance that is mixed into ordinary gasoline to make ethyl gasoline) is an anti-knock. Unfortunately most of us don't even know what a knock is—let alone an anti-knock. So let us go back to the beginning and find out just to what extent tetraethyl lead is indispensable to the advance of industry and civilization.

Let us assume that you know some member of the great automobile-owning public—know him well enough to get him to take you for a ride. Notice the sound of his engine as you travel at medium speed. And now notice it as you travel fast, especially when climbing a hill. Besides the ordinary sound of the engine you will hear a distinct "Ping!" in every cylinder. Now we have it! That is the knock! That "Ping!" sounds just as tho something were knocking inside the cylinders, and if your friend cares much for his car he will slow down and maybe shift gears.

Now, of course, the next thing we want to know is: What causes the knock and what harm does it do?

An automobile is driven by the combustion of a mixture of gasoline vapor and air in each of the cylinders. This combustion is very rapid, so that it is often called an explosion. But this is not really correct. The flame takes a small but distinctly appreciable amount of time to travel the length of the cylinder. An explosion, however, is practically instantaneous. And right here is where the knock comes in. When the machine is going at high speed, the mixture no longer burns quietly, the flame no longer travels uniformly thru the length of the cylinder. Instead, the mixture starts to burn, but before it is all exploded, making that "Ping!" or knock that we heard. So we see that the knock is caused by the fact that part of the fuel explodes instead of burning. And an anti-knock is something we can add to the fuel which will have the property of preventing that explosion, allowing it down into a uniform combustion.

Now what harm does the knock do? First, it causes excessive wear on the engine. Second, it reduces the efficiency (i. e., makes necessary more fuel for a given distance), for the sudden impact of the explosion on the piston and cylinder walls is not nearly as effective as the steady push on the piston caused by a proper combustion. These things are bad, but we must find something worse yet if we are to explain the connection between what the knock stands in the way of progress. Even the best automobile is not a very efficient machine—that is, only a small percentage of the energy contained in the fuel used is actually transmitted to the wheels. Increasing efficiency means saving fuel, and the conservation of all fuel is becoming a problem of tremendous importance.

ETHYL is Back

There is a tendency among automobile engineers today to believe that the first great step towards increasing efficiency is to increase the compression in the cylinders. And, true enough, when very much higher compression is used in the motor much more power is obtained from the same quantity of fuel. But the knock! Alas! with increased compression the knock also increases. So much so that all talk of higher compression becomes useless unless the knock can be eliminated. And so the automobile engineer's dream of conserving oil by producing only high-compression motors has to wait for the production of an effective anti-knock compound.

So now we can see the setting of the scene into which tetraethyl lead, this standard-bearer of progress, burst in the years 1924 and 1925, poisoning, paralyzing and killing workers, driving them into convulsions and frightful insanity.

Tetraethyl lead, as an anti-knock, was discovered by Thomas Midgely, Jr., a chemist on the staff of the Standard Oil. A new concern was created, the Ethyl Gasoline Corporation, half of the stock owned by the General Motors and the other half by Standard Oil. The Ethyl Gasoline Corporation was thus a child of both Morgan and Rockefeller. To the vice-presidency of this million-dollar corporation, Thomas Midgely, Jr., a young man well under thirty, was elevated. Thomas Midgely, Jr., could congratulate himself that his position for a young man of his age was absolutely unique, and his fortune was made. Standard Oil could congratulate itself that it would soon drive all competing gasolines off the market. General Motors could congratulate itself that it would soon introduce high-compression motors and all other makers of cars would become utter back numbers.

Into these happy dreams, however, burst from time to time a rude interruption; the report of a death here and there in the Du Pont plant at Deepwater, N. J., where the tetraethyl was being manufactured, or in the Ohio district where it was being unintentionally distributed, a couple of cases of insanity, a few paralyses. It was not the accidents that mattered so much (the company was fully aware of the deadliness of the substance it was handling), but the fact that despite all precautions, rumors would leak out and get into the papers. The company began a half-hearted, uneasy investigation into the accidents. It approached prominent experts on physiological chemistry and then drew back again. If the thing ever got into the papers it would be all up, with a vengeance.

Suddenly came the Bayway tragedy. A dozen or so men working in the Bayway refinery of the Standard Oil suddenly went into hideous convulsions and violent insanity and had to be removed to the hospital. The whole affair burst into publicity. The doctors were forced to admit that the victims were suffering from acute lead poisoning due to inhalation of tetraethyl lead fumes. The New York World scented a good thing, took up the name "looney gas," which the workers had christened it, spread it all over the front page and announced that it was beginning a campaign against it. Other papers were forced to come along. Thomas Midgely, Jr., and his staff made heroic efforts to stem the tide. Time and again they announced that the only hazard was in manufacture, that it was only workers who would go insane; but the great automobile-owning public saw themselves going into convulsions and dying from using this gasoline in their cars and grew hysterical with fear. In vain Thomas Midgely, Jr., gave an impressive demonstration to the reporters, to show its harmlessness to the user he called for a can of his beautiful red ethyl gasoline and washed his hands in it (carefully drying them off at once). All to no avail. Maybe it was only red ink he had washed his hands in. Maybe getting it on your hands didn't matter. The hysteria mounted. Ethyl gasoline was barred in New York. Thomas Midgeley, Jr., Standard Oil, General Motors, saw their dreams vanishing. To forestall complete prohibition, the Ethyl Gasoline Corporation announced that they would voluntarily discontinue the sale of their product pending the result of an investigation. On all sides the cry of "investigation!" was taken up. The surgeon-general of the United States was instructed to call a preparatory conference. The Ethyl Gasoline Corporation breathed freely again. At last they were on safe and familiar ground.

Before adjournment to the surgeon-general's conference, let us consider the different varieties of lead poisoning offered to its makers, distributers and users by tetraethyl lead.

Until the advent of tetraethyl only the chronic form of lead poisoning had been known. This is the form to which painters, typesetters and others who work with ordinary compounds of lead are exposed. Lead is what is known as a "cumulative poison." That is, a small amount of lead taken once does not act as a poison; but if even a tiny amount is taken into the body day by day, it accumulates in the tissues and gradually in the course of months or years, produces "lead drop," "lead colic," paralysis and sterility.

With the tetraethyl, however, one exposure is plenty. Tetraethyl lead is a liquid and is readily absorbed by the skin. Furthermore, tetraethyl lead presents lead in a highly volatile form, i. e., it turns into vapor in this form it can be inhaled in large quantities. Whether absorbed thru the skin or the lungs, it distributes itself almost immediately thru the body. The lead reaches the brain and convulsions, insanity and death are the result. This is acute lead poisoning.

The workers in the factory where the tetraethyl lead is made have a chance both at the acute poisoning from the product and chronic poisoning from the other lead compounds and lead dust lying around. The workers in the blending stations where the tetraethyl is mixed with gasoline also have a chance both at acute and chronic poisoning. The great automobile-owning public has a fair chance at chronic poisoning. And oh uld the use of ethyl become general even those who walk the streets and have to breathe the sweet air of innumerable automobile exhausts would stand a fair chance of chronic lead poisoning.

Marx on Goethe

(From Deutsche Brusseler Zeitung, Nr. 95, November 28, 1847, on the occasion of a review of Karl Grun's "On Goethe from the Human Standpoint," Darmstadt, 1846. The article was later reprinted as an article by M. Kriegel: Marx as a Journalist, in Die Zukunft (St. Hardies), 1901, IX, 10; and still later in Max Grunewald's "Goethe und Die Arbeiter," Dresden, 1912.—A. L.)

NATURALLY, we cannot speak at great length here about Goethe himself. We only draw attention to one point. Goethe in his works, conducts himself in a twofold manner towards the German society of his time. Now he is hostile to it; he seeks to escape what to him is repulsive, as in Iphegenia and, in general, during the Italian Journey. His rebels against it as Goetz, Prometheus and Faust, and pours forth his bitterest derision upon it as Mephistopheles. Now, on the contrary, he is on friendly terms with it, "accomodates" himself to it as is the majority of the "Upper Kanaille" and many prose works, as role it as in the "Meisternaegen," indeed, defends it against the empowering historical movement as particularly in all the works where he comes to speak of the French Revolution. It is not merely individual aspects of German life that Goethe recognizes as against others to which he is adverse; it is a continuous struggle within him between the gifted poet whom the misers of his environment disgusts and the cautious child of the Frankfurt counsellor, respective Weimar privy councillor, who sees himself forced to conclude an armistice with it and to accustom himself to it. Thus Goethe is now a colossal, now a petty, now a defiant, mocking, world-disdaining genius, now a considerate, contented, narrow philistine. Even Goethe was unable to overcome the German misery; on the contrary, it overcomes him, and the victory of the misere over the greatest German is the best proof that it can never be overcome "from within."* Goethe was too universal, of too active a nature, too much of the flesh, to look for deliverance from the misere in a Schilleresque flight to the Kantian ideal; he was too keen not to see that this flight ultimately reduced itself to an exchange of the fat for the superabundant misere. His temperament, his powers, his entire spiritual disposition, directed him to the practical life, and the practical life which he met with was miserable.

In this dilemma—to live in a sphere of life which he had to disdain and still to be chained to this sphere as the only one in which he could participate—in this dilemma Goethe continuously found himself, and the older he became the more the mighty poet, de quarree lasse, withdrew behind the insignificant Weimar minister. We do not reproach Goethe for not being liberal, a la Boerne and Menzel, but for the fact that at times he could also be a philistine; not for being in capable of enthusiasm for German freedom, but for sacrificing his more correct esthetic sense, which broke through here and there, to a common philistine timidity before all great, contemporary historical movements; not for being a courtier, but for the fact that he could carry on the most insignificant affairs and among plaisirs of one of the most insignificant German courts with a solemn seriousness at a time when a Napoleon was cleansing the great Augean stable of Germany. We reproach neither from the moral nor the party point of view, but, at the most, from an esthetic and historical point of view; we measure Goethe neither by a moral nor by a political nor by a "human" standard. We cannot here enter into a portrayal of Goethe in relation to his time, to his literary predecessors and contemporaries, in his process of development and in his life-attitude. We therefore limit ourselves to simply stating the fact.

Joseph Manley

By Alex Bittelman

JOE was a worker, a proletarian and a militant fighter. When a man like him dies the labor movement sustains a great loss.

He was only 39 years old. Still young and energetic and with a fine record of struggle in the cause of labor which would have placed him among the best and most valuable leaders in the international working class movement. But fate and the damnable capitalist system willed differently. And Joseph Manley is no more.

On August 26, 1926, the life of Joseph Manley came to an end. His death resulted from internal injuries sustained in a fall from a building in Brooklyn, New York, on August 24, upon which he was employed as an iron worker.

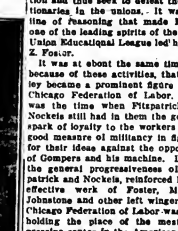
FROM what I know of Joseph Manley, that was not the way he would have liked to die. Joe was a born proletarian revolutionist. He had it in his blood to hate capitalism and capitalist oppression. His whole makeup was that of challenge, resistance and struggle. And nothing would have suited Joe better than to lay down his life—even the time came—in the working class struggle for power and for a new order of society.

JOSEPH MANLEY was born on July 26, 1887, in Dublin, Ireland. His father was a physician and an explorer, but most of his mother's family were workers employed in the making of casks, barrels and tubs. That is probably the reason why ten-year-old Joe was made a cooper's apprentice when the time came around for him to begin making a living. At about the same time Joe became a member of his trade union.

He emigrated to Canada in 1907 and soon afterwards came to the United States. Here he joined the Western Federation of Miners. During 1907-8-9 he worked in Butte and in Cobalt. In 1910 he became a bridgeman and joined the Bridge and Structural Iron Workers' Union, of which he was a member (16 years) until his death.

The political and intellectual development of Joseph Manley is interesting and instructive in many respects. The bond of Manley was traversed by many American workers. Some of them, along with Manley, have gone the whole length and have become Communists and active members of the Workers (Communist) Party. Others have stopped in the middle of the road and are still wavering between the deadening conservatism of Gompers and the invigorating, promising creativeness of Communism. Still others have turned back on their militant past and have become satisfied with merely vegetating and slowly dying away either in the folds of Gompersism or in the morass of impotent futility of anarchism, syndicalism, etc.

Manley started out on the field of class struggle as a trade unionist. Ten years of age he became a cooper's apprentice in Dublin, Ireland, and joined the union. A European worker of his type is apt to have started out as a socialist, but for a militant working class youngster in Great Britain (or in the United States, for that matter) a quarter of a century ago the natural and possible thing was to enter the class struggle thru the trade union. Why? Because there, unlike many countries on the European continent, it was not socialism but trade unionism that stood at the cradle of the class struggle.



Real when Manley came to Canada in 1907 he was already mature for a fuller understanding of and participation in the class struggle. He joined the socialist party of Canada and later, when he came to the United States, the socialist party of America.

This was no accident. During the decade (1897-1907) of work, struggle and union membership in Ireland Manley had learned things. His living for books and reading, together with a not less than ordinary faculty for thinking and reasoning, had made Joe Manley, around the twentieth year of his life, a conscious opponent of capitalism and a determined fighter for socialism. The great crisis of 1907, the unemployment and suffering of large masses of workers, which met Manley on his arrival in the United States must have exerted a powerful influence upon his intellectual and political development.

However, Manley did not stay long in the socialist party. He was expelled from its Washington state organization in 1909, together with a whole group of left wingers, among them William D. Foster, with whom Manley collaborated later in many outstanding events in the American labor movement.

As a member of the socialist party of America Manley was a left wing socialist. The he couldn't very well, as far back as 1909, have crystallized a consistent revolutionary working class philosophy like the one represented by the Communist International, yet he was proletarian revolutionist enough to rebel against the anti-proletarian, opportunistic and compromising policies of the socialist party leadership. For this he was expelled, but it did not hurt him. On the contrary, since then Manley's intellectual life became more intense. He became deeply occupied with the basic problems of the proletarian class struggle. At first he joined the Industrial Workers of the World. Like many another militant worker of those days, this was Manley's way of challenging the reactionary bureaucracy of the American Federation of Labor and their opportunistic counterpart in the socialist movement. Manley was in search of a revolutionary proletarian organization and he thought he had found it in the I. W. W.

One must remember that that was the period before the world war and the Russian revolution, before Lenin as the world proletarian leader and before the Communist International. Now it is easier for a militant worker in America to find his way, but it was not so when Manley was groping toward a revolutionary working class organization. Disgusted with the reactionaries and opportunists of the "official" labor family, Joe later on switched off towards syndicalism and became active in the Industrial League of North American, led by Foster.

The world war and the collapse of reactionary syndicalism, along with opportunist socialism; the futility of traditional dual unionism as a means of revolutionizing the American labor movement; the need and necessity of a political mass party of the workers which became so pronounced since August 1918; all these developments have brought Manley back into the main stream of the American labor movement. Together with Foster, Johnstone and several more revolutionary trade unionists, Manley became actively engaged in large organization campaigns within the American Federation of Labor. Chief among those were the organization of the stockyard workers in Chicago and the organization of the steel workers, which resulted in the great steel strike.

In the steel campaign Manley has been closely associated with Foster. During 1918-1923 Manley was as active member of the national committee for the organization of the steel industry, functioning there as the representative of his union, the Bridge and Structural Iron Workers' Union. Later he was directing the campaign of his union to organize the non-union bridge shops.

During this period of his life, when he was actively engaged in large organization campaigns, within the A. F. of L., Manley already had a clear conception of the wider meaning of these activities. He realized quite definitely that the way to revolutionize the A. F. of L. is to bring into its ranks the large masses of the unskilled unorganized workers, to build an effective left wing movement in the organization and thus seek to defeat the reactionaries in the unions. It was this line of reasoning that made Manley one of the leading spirits of the Trade Union Educational League led by Wm. Z. Foster.

It was at about the same time, and because of these activities, that Manley became a prominent figure in the Chicago Federation of Labor. That was the time when Fitzpatrick and Nockels still had in them the genuine spark of loyalty to the workers and a good measure of militancy in fighting for their ideas against the opposition of Gompers and his machine. Then the general progressiveness of Fitzpatrick and Nockels, reinforced by the effective work of Foster, Manley, Johnstone and other left wingers, the Chicago Federation of Labor was then holding the place of the most progressive center in the American labor movement.

Manley's horizon was continually growing wider. His conceptions of the class struggle were beginning to approach those of the most advanced section of the world labor movement—the Communist International. The Russian Revolution undoubtedly had a profound effect upon his whole make-up. His revolutionary working class instincts at last found a concrete political expression. His sympathies were all with the proletarian revolution. During the famine in the Soviet Union Joseph Manley joins actively in relief work and becomes the secretary of the Trade Union Committee for Russian Relief.

At that time Manley was so close to the Communist movement ideologically that his actual membership in the party became a practical question. And when Joe had realized this fact he made the logical conclusion. In 1921 Manley becomes a member of the Communist Party of America.

From that time on and until about a year before his untimely death Manley is to be found in the front ranks of every progressive and militant step in the American labor movement. As one of the founders of the Trade Union Educational League, Manley carries on active work for the building of a left wing in the trade unions in the capacity of eastern district organizer of the T. U. E. L. With the sweep of the farmer-labor party movement in 1923-23 Manley becomes one of the most active Communists in the movement. So much so that when the federated farmer-labor party was formed in July, 1924, Manley was elected national secretary-treasurer of the organization. In this work he was greatly aided by the experiences that he gathered in previous years as a leading spirit of the farmer-labor party of the United States led by Fitzpatrick.

As he grew in political maturity and Communist Party experience, he also became an influential man in the party. During 1923-25 he stood very close to the central leadership of the Workers (Communist) Party of America and was later made a candidate of its central executive committee. Unfortunately, the sharp internal struggles in the party had the effect of weakening his ability for active party work and even moved him to complete abstention from participating in political and party life. But that was a frame of mind which could not have lasted very long with Joseph Manley. He was too proletarian, too ardent a revolutionist and follower of the Communist International to be satisfied with the role of mere onlooker in the class struggle for any length of time. Comrades that have been close to Manley are quite positive in saying that shortly before his death he was beginning to chafe under the position of inactivity and was seriously considering the question of actively re-entering party life.

The labor movement and our party have lost in the death of Joseph Manley a valuable comrade in arms. His proletarian past, revolutionary temperament and his rich experiences in the class struggle and in the trade union movement would have made Manley an outstanding leader in the revolutionary struggle of the American working class.

Let this short and by no means adequate recital of Manley's life serve as a tribute to his memory and as a reminder to the working class militants still on their way to hasten their movements, to come into our party and help build the power that will lead the American workers to their final liberation.

BACK AGAIN!

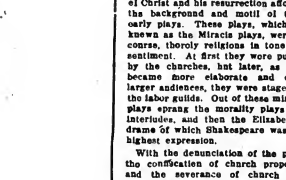
Now you are back in school. The teachers will tell you all about George Washington and Abe Lincoln, but Wilson was a great man, that every boy can become President and a lot of other fairy tales.

WRITE in to the TINY WORKER and tell us some of "The Bunk in Higher Education" you are taught—and tell us WHY YOU THINK IT IS BUNK.

The Mexican government still insists that priests must get a six months vacation EVERY year in some other country. That's a good idea.

The Red Chinese Army of Canton is moving. They have run out of WU PEI FU and the Big Powers are cutting nervous. Atasboy Canton!

The worker that joins a union helps all workers. Does your father belong to a union?



A very fat boy came down the street,
Laughing at you and me
But he's not laughing
In the air brave
And my knuckles hurt, Oh, Gee!
Arthur settles fate . . . too, too.

WAR IS DECLARED
EXTRA!

Some little fighter sent us the poem above which is sure to provoke a war. Now don't send us any more poems about fights because if we print them we're liable to get in them and Johnny Red is liable to fight but he shouldn't. It's better to fight the bosses like in this poem:

A guy I like
Is the NeoMits
He helped the strike
With all his might.

HOW I JOINED THE YOUNG PIONEERS

By Beckie Yudman, Los Angeles, Cal.

Two years ago my father asked me to join the Junior Y. P. S. L. which is now called the Young Pioneers. I went to one of their meetings but I didn't like it, so I didn't go again for a long time.

The next year I went to another meeting and liked it much better. They talked about a paper called "The Young Comrades." When I came home I asked my father if I could get a subscription and he said yes. Now I get it and enjoy it very much. I am trying my best to get all my playmates and friends to belong to the Young Pioneers and I think that all workers' children should belong. They teach you how to fight for a better living for all workers, you see.

Religion in Literature

By V. F. Calverton

THIRD ARTICLE.

WITH the rise of the bourgeoisie in the eighteenth century religion, as a motivating force, came back into literature. In the days before the commercial revolution, in fact during the entire period of feudalism, literature was but a hymn to godliness. In the middle ages religion and wisdom were synonymous. The main writers were priests. In fact, very few others than priests could write. The Roman catholic church was the inspiration of the age. Thinkers fed upon its doctrine for ideas and conceptions.

Occasionally there were rebels like Frederick II who opposed the church, believed religion an imposture, and struggled for a freedom of thought that was execrably radical in that day. Frederick II, who was known as the Stupor Mundi, or the wonder of the world, in the thirteenth century, is a very interesting type of medieval rebel. Refusing to project a crusade at the behest of three popes, he denounced the catholic church, advocated a confiscation of its property, introduced Jewish and Moslemic philosophers at his courts, and in a score of other ways endeavored to combat the influence of the christian religion. In additional he founded the University of Naples in 1224, endorged the medical school at Salerno, and constructed a zoological garden—all daring and novel at that period.

We must remember, however, that Frederick II was almost like a lone meteor in a starless firmament. He was an infidel in an age of faith—an age that forbade dissection of the human body for fear that the resurrection-bone would be destroyed, and burned Giordano Bruno at the stake for maintaining that the earth went around the sun. In literature it was not the litalian poems of Frederick II that flourished, but the prose of the churchmen.

The modern drama grew out of the church. The first dramas were devoted to christian themes. The birth of Christ and his resurrection afforded the background and motif of these early plays. These plays, which are known as the Miracle plays, were, of course, thoroly religious in tone and sentiment. At first they were put on by the churches, but later, as they became more elaborate and drew larger audiences, they were staged by the labor guilds. Out of these miracle plays sprang the morality plays and interludes, and then the Elizabethan drama of which Shakespeare was the highest expression.

With the denunciation of the pope, the confiscation of church property, and the severance of church and state, Henry VIII in England weakened the influence of the church upon the drama. The artists of the later aristocracies fought free of religious dogma. Elizabethan and restoration dramas were unreligious in spirit.

It was with the puritanic bourgeoisie that religion in literature was revived. Religion in literature now instead of emphasizing God had stressed virtue—the virtues of the bourgeoisie. Literature became looked upon as a vehicle for moral instruction. This moral instruction, of course, was definitely associated with christianity. Samuel Johnson in his magazine, The Rambler, for instance, according to one critic attempted "to instruct mankind; to teach the happiness of virtue and religion; to display the horrors of vice and piety; to inculcate a proper subordinate of the passions; and to arm the mind against the vicissitudes of life." Johnson himself, who was the most important critic of the 18th century, declared his purpose to be "the increase of virtue rather than of learning," and in another place added, with sincerity and fervor, "there are few ways in which a man can be more innocently employed than in getting money." This was the characteristic bourgeois virtue of the bourgeoisie, which the literati of two centuries decorated and deified. Anthony Trollope in the 19th century, in line with the same sentiment, asserted that he had "always thought of (himself) as a preacher of sermons, and (his) pulpit as one which (he) could make both salutary and agreeable to (his) audience."

Religion thus was preserved as a sacred element in literature. The preacher as in Goldsmith's "Vicar of Wakefield" and Jane Austen's novels, was treated with gentleness and praise. Only at occasional moments did an anti-religious fiction ruffle the placidity of the literary horizon.

It is because "the Damnation of Theron Ware," by Harold Frederic is one of the first novels to attack the religious myth that it is deserving of serious consideration. Modern religion is but a justification of capitalist enterprise. Radicalism and religiosity are not compatible. The one depends upon material factors and the other upon spiritual. Their points of view are disparate and antagonistic. Christian socialist movements are essentially saccherine and ineffective. Jesus-radicals are always sentimentalists. There has been so much research done in the origins of religion, and particularly in the beginnings of christianity, that the appeal to Jesus is infantile and idiotic. The very historicity of Jesus is not only questioned, but with the discovery of every new forgery and every new evidence its reality grows weaker and more dubious. At all events, even if Jesus did live, what he said is certainly unknown aside from the myths of simple-minded fishermen and madmen. The gospels themselves, if one would take from them an evidence and distinguish a philosophy, have been so well garbled and the evidence so confused and contradictory, that this gesture, too, is rendered hopeless and impotent.

Yet what christians know of the dubious origins of their creed? What christians know of the slender, ever-attenuating evidence upon which their Christ depends? Bruno Bauer and Fonerbach had begun the investigation many decades ago—George Eliot even translated Fanerbach's "Roots of Christianity" into English—but the majority of proletarians as well as bourgeois are entirely unaware of the nature of their work. Of course, this investigation is too technical to excite numerous readers, but its conclusions should surely be known. Literature that helps to disseminate them is of social value.

In "The Damnation of Theron Ware" the protagonist is a methodist minister, a devout, sincere soul, who has consecrated his innocent and ignorant mind to the cause of the church. His contact with Father Forbes in the town of Octavius, to which he had been isolated by the methodist conference, brings him some catastrophic revelations. At the same time the author gives a picture of the ministry, and christian evidence that would volcanically disturb the mind of a believer.

The Reverend Ware, having conceived of the idea of writing a book on Abraham, decides to go to Father Forbes for counsel. Father Forbes is a catholic priest whose vast erudition has not clouded his mind to the dulled his dexterity as an ecclesiastic.

"Modern research," he says to the simple-souled Reverend Ware, "quite wipes (Abraham) out of existence as an individual. The word 'Abram' is merely an eponym—it means 'exalted father.' Practically all the names in the Genesis chronologies are what we call eponymous. Abram is not a person at all; he is a tribe, a sect, a clan. In the same way, Ishac is not intended for a man; it is the name of a great division of the human race. Heber is simply the throwing back into allegorical substance, so to speak, of the Hebrews; Heth of the Hittites; Asshur of Assyria."

"But this is something very new, this theory, isn't it?" queried Theron.

The priest smiled and shook his head. "Many years ago. My dear sir, there is nothing new. Epicurus and Lucretine outlined the whole Darwinian theory more than two thousand years ago. As for this eponym thing, why Saint Augustine called attention to it fifteen hundred years ago, in his 'De Civitate Dei,' he expressly says of these genealogical names, 'quotes non hominos;' that is, 'peoples, not persons.' It was as obvious to him—as much a commonplace of knowledge—as it was to Ezekiel eight hundred years before him."

Father Forbes' reply is significant. It explains the tenacious affection of the church for ignorance.

"Why should 'everybody' be supposed to know things? What beatitudes is it of 'everybody's' to know things? The earth was just as round in the days when people supposed it to be flat, as it is now. So the truth remains always the truth, even tho you give a cherker to ten hundred thousand' separate pumpkin skulls to examine it by the light of their private judgement, and report that it is as many different varieties of something else. But of course that whole question of private judgment versus authority is No-Man's-Land for us. We were speaking of eponyms."

Later on, after discussing the ghosts of dead men's thoughts, the priest continues the original topic:

"The names of these dead-and-gone things are singularly pertinacious, though. They survive indestructibly. Take the modern name Marmadake, for example. It strikes one as peculiarly modern, up-to-date, doesn't it? Well, it is the oldest name on earth—thousands of years older than Adam. It is the ancient Chaldean Mordeg, or Mordach. He was the young god who interceded continually between the angry, omnipotent Ea, his father, and the humble and unhappy Damkina, or Earth, who was his mother. This is interesting from another point of view, because this Mordach or Marmaduke is, so far as we can see now, the original prototype of our divine intermediary idea. I daresay, the that if we could go back still other scores of centuries, we should find other preceding series of types of this Christ-myth of ours."

The Reverend Ware's reply is as characteristic of the religious mind as the collection plate is of the religious service.

"All I have done is to try to preserve an open mind, and to maintain my faith that the more we know, the nearer we shall approach the Throne."

The plot of the novel is inconsequential. In revealing the weakness and duplicity of the clergy, it merits attention. Instead of extolling the preacher, it exposes him. Its purpose is to hit in the form of malicious satire, but of simple dissection. The lovemade flight of the right Reverend Ware adds drama to his stupidity, but not power to the novel. The novel is not a distinguished achievement. It is important because in 1896, when it appeared, it was part of that trend that was slowly deviating from the bourgeois literature that had preceded. Since its appearance the preacher has lost his position of prominence and power in fiction. Now it is only in the trashy tosh of Ralph Connor and Harold Bell Wright that the preacher remains a hero and his profession an honor. In the new literature it is the vices instead of the virtues of the clergyman that have been described. Harold Frederic's novel chalks the beginning of this new attitude.

Scenes From the Hell of Europe

(The White Terror in the Balkans)

By HENRI BARBUSSE.

I.

The Organization of Destruction.

THE Balkan governments all make use of similar instruments and organizations of repression. In all these countries, the chief of these instruments, the most powerful of these organizations are the army and the military leagues. One cannot imagine another place in the world where the uniform and galloon enjoy more complete power, where the officers are invested with such irresponsibility and despotism more absolute. One of the most sadly picturesque aspects of the Balkan capitals are the quarters occupied by the officers and the importance which the military monuments display there.

At Bucharest, the Military Circle with its opulent architecture, eclipses all the other monuments of the city, even the Palace and the new banks.

At Belgrade, the Military School is not a monument, it is an entire quarter. The budget of Jugo-Slavia amounts to 12 milliard dinars; 2,700,000 are dedicated to the war budget, not to disregard the one milliard advanced by the good grace of France for new armaments. In Bulgaria, out of a revenue of about 5,700 million levas, 2,800 million go to the army and police. In Greece: total expenses, 2,471 million drachmes; ministry of War, 2,272 million.

Military Leagues and Police.

BY the side of official militarism, semi-official militarism; by the side of the army, the leagues composed of reserve officers or of ex-officers. All the Balkan countries are provided with them. Many have several of them. The Serbian White Head (which succeeded the Black Head) has been implicated in all the recent political events. In Bulgaria, fourteen members of the Military League form the Military Convent, the supreme committee which off-hand is called the Squadron. In addition, there is a Tcheka composed of five officers, members of the League. Operating parallel is the secret association, Kubrat.

As for the organization of the police: it is everywhere formidable. The Roumanian Siguranza (Safety) commands millions, newspapers. It has attaches and agents, ears and hands everywhere. It is a stain within the state. The number of Balkan gendarmes is out of proportion to the population. There are 45,000 gendarmes in Roumania, 60,000 in Jugo-slavia. The gendarmes are distributed over the country in small groups and commit exactions, cruelties, robberies and crimes, certain of impunity. In Roumania, they have profited largely . . . by the would-be proletarian law of the division of the estates.

Fascists and Cossacks.

THE government of Bucharest, in spite of its protestations of neutrality, undeniably encourages the growing and turbulent group of Anti-Semetic Students —fascists and provocateurs. Altho it has struck at the Independent Students, in dissolving their organization and in prohibiting their journal, it openly tolerates the propaganda of the Anti-Semetic Students. In that way, the Anti-Semetic Party, which has never existed at Bucharest (it fortified itself in Vassy under the orders of M. Cuzza who, from the height of his professorial chair, openly preached pogroms) has just been installed there by the Liberals. The Anti-Semites have five journals at their disposal, display their placards and their insignia in the open street, and are never molested in their public demonstrations. One evening, when some of these desperadoes came to shout in front of my hotel in order to punish me "for introducing Jews in the national sovereignty," I was assured that they had been surrounded by agents of "Surety" whose principal concern was to keep the crowd from hindering their demonstration. These are the young people, by their special notion of the honor of Roumania, have hindered the secretary of our League for the Rights of Man from speaking at Bucharest. At the expense of a few complaisances, the authorities possess in this a convenient means of having their hand forced. One cannot better see much on the artificial character of this anti-semetic agitation, cultivated by force by hireling provocateurs in the bosom of the least fanatical population and the one least inclined to race-hatred in the world.

Another grouping constitutes a violent agent of execution for the Balkan governments: the ex-officers and soldiers of Wrangel. In the streets of Belgrade one meets constantly in uniform who are only waiting for the opportunity—one of them has shouted it recently in the street during a brawl—to carry out in the Balkans the counter-revolutionary activity which they were unable to conduct in Russia. Vanderveide remarked at the end of the voyage which he took to the Balkans, that the Wrangelites abound by the thousands in Bulgaria. They say there are 40,000 Wrangelites in that country and this figure is not improbable.

It is at the demand of France that Bulgaria lodges the armed bands of Wrangel. The latter had their official representative, Petrisov, harbored in the Russian embassy at Sofia. Stambuliski held them in check and life was then difficult for them; but their decisive participation in the coup d'etat of June, 1923 made their fortune.

At the congress of the Russian National League in September, 1926, General Miller, representing General Wrangel and the Grand Duke Nikolaus, sends an edifying report: 2,000 of Wrangel's soldiers, 4,000 Don cossacks are perfectly organized in Bulgaria. All the Russian refugees of the country are under the direct eye of the monarchists and Wrangelites who fleece them to the profit of the Grand Duke under threat of expulsion, ridding themselves of non-monarchist refugees. In fact, the president of the Russian Committee plays the role of Russian ambassador and has the greatest authority over the whole Russian colony. The Wrangelites, those civil war specialists, who "detest the Bulgarian peasants and love the Bulgarian government," have founded mixed associations with Bulgarian superior and subordinate offices. They have special institutions. They are dreaming of having their grand military school and they will undoubtedly attain it. They already have a school at Saradevo. In that way they renew and multiply themselves.

In the mines of Pernik, out of 6,000 workers, there are 2,000 former Wrangel soldiers whose hiring has been imposed by the government.

When one reads the detailed reports of repressions, one sees the important role which the parasitic, reactionary organisation (comfortably installed in poor Bulgaria and not less solidly incrusted in Jugo-Slavia, executor of schemes of oppression and imperialism of the two governments, even when these schemes conflict) has played in the massacre of the Balkan peoples. These are the Wrangelite bands which invaded Albania in 1924, overthrew the government of Fan Noli who was supported by the peasant masses, and placed in power M. Ahmed Zogon who has reestablished the power of the feudal Beys and has connected the Albanian foreign policy with that of the Serbian dynasty and of Italy. The nature of the task which they have to perform is of little importance to these bullies provided that it is paid for and unpopular. One of them, who looks a little beyond the fat daily revenue, has disclosed to Mme. Anna Karlima the Wrangelian dream: to restore Russia, then connect to this restored Russia the "Balkan Provinces."

By putting these diverse forces in action, there results a systematic and implacable crushing of all attempts at real democracy even under the most attenuated forms.

The People Are Defenseless.

WHAT can the people do in this field of civil war where the mechanism of power is used to silence them and to subjugate them? Nothing. They have not the right to budge in defense of their interests, for the legitimate and sacred solidarity between worker and worker and between man and man. One may say that the right to organize does not exist in the Balkans. If it exists in the letter of the law, it is in reality impossible to realize other than in appearance. The congresses are readily stopped and dissolved off-hand. All that is permitted are lamentable parodies of working class organisations which conceal a blind servitude to the regime, and domestications which are deceptions both for the people interested and for the public opinion of the world. At Bucharest, every time that the trade union workers assemble, a police inspector is at the door of the local and examines and registers the cards. All public demonstrations are forbidden. The few proletarian demonstrations that have taken place in my honor on the streets of Bucharest and Belgrade were anomalies which were only tolerated at this moment for special reasons and which will certainly not be renewed henceforth in these large cities. One must insist upon the rabidness with which every attempt at real working class co-operation even on the purely trade union ground is persecuted and annihilated. The Bulgarian trade unions were, in the hands of the working class, powerful forces of culture and of progress. All the independent labor organizations, even those that confined themselves strictly to trade demands, have everywhere been driven out of their locals and dispersed. One of the most typical examples is that of the suppression of the large Bulgarian Workers' Co-operative, Osvobojdenie Emancipation—which numbers 68,000 members, 130 branches and 490 agencies. Its goods and its funds were confiscated. This tyrannical measure did not have for its aim merely the cutting of the bonds of organized popular solidarity but of freeing the merchants from the formidable competition of co-operation. They have recently arrested without any pretext seventeen members of the Trade Union Alliance at Bucharest. The Bulgarian Independent Alliance of Trade Unions 35,000 members—has been dissolved just as in Hungary—a quasi Balkan country. Following a strike, they have excluded from the right to organize entire sections like those of the shoemakers and turners (non-Communist). In Roumania and Bulgaria they accept only those unions which are always ready to do acts of servility. In some places they support only democratic and socialist parties which have given guarantees of servility. In Belgrade, the beautiful building of the prosperous United Trades was confiscated by the police and sold to a merchant—at the time when there are 150,000 unemployed in Jugo-Slavia (the law considers them as culprits), when the worker there is paying a tax equal to 5 per cent of his salary, the clerk 50 per cent (wages considered as revenue), when the bureaucracy there (200,000 functionaries) absorbs 50 per cent of the budget and when they have suspended their old-age insurances.

In Bulgaria, in 90 per cent of the enterprises, the 8 hour day is suppressed. The cost of living is forty times higher than before the war while salaries have increased only fifteen times; the appointments of the functionaries have risen only by the coefficient 10, pensions according to the coefficient 5.

And the Silence.

THROUT this Roumania of today, throout this Jugo-Slavia, and throout this Bulgaria which is the most pathetic circle of the Balkan Hell, the methodic suffocation of every pulsation of liberty transforms itself at sight into a calm which rends one's heart because it is the calm of a cemetery. One well knows that the heads which were erect have been struck down and that if others here and there raise their heads again they will be struck down in their turn; that all the living and conscious forces of the workers of the city and country have been or will be annihilated. This collective mutilation might lead one to believe that there is a semblance of order which can only spread over this frightful earth. But this peace is a shroud and the surviving understand that their existence depends upon the first gesture, upon the first word.

Bulgaria, Roumania, Jugo-Slavia, Greece are dying of the White Terror.

The Woman Without a Heart.

By Roy Nierenberg.

Last night I sat in the moon light
Gazing upon the Celestial ert,
I decided to paint a picture
Of a woman without a heart.

I still remember the last time I saw her
A picture of beauty and tons,
Her face was as white as marble
And her heart as cold as a stone.

Her eyes were burning with passion
Her lips were so red as a rose,
Her soft fluffy hair peaked at the evening air
But her voice was as cold as snow.

The picture now seems to be fading
As the moon vanished into the dark,
The only vision I have now remaining
Is of a woman without a heart.

TWO POEMS.

By Henry George Weiss.

INDUSTRY, HONESTY, THRIFT

A crazy man commits a crazy crime and goes to the crazy house for several years.
Worth fifty thousand dollars when he enters, he comes out a millionaire, having spun not nor toiled.
While I, who have practiced Industry, Honesty, Thrift digging ditches, washing dishes, respecting property, saving pennies,
Am worth after the same length of time exactly ninety cents!

FUTILITY

By HENRY GEORGE WEISS

When they hanged August Spies, George Engel, Adolph
Fischer, Albert Parsons,
They thought they had killed the revolution.
When they shot Joe Hill, lynched Frank Little, tortured Wesley Everest,
They thought they had killed the revolution.
Now surely, by God, if they electrocute Sacco and Vanzetti
The revolution will be dead!

Fighting for a Square Deal

A Letter from a British Miner.

(The following letter was sent by a South Wales miner to a friend in the United States who was kind enough to let us have it for publication in the magazine. Although dealing with the first weeks of the great strike, the letter represents a document of tremendous importance for the understanding of the historic conflict taking place in England).

Aberaychan, So. Wales,
May 9, 1926.

Dear Friend:

The impossible seems to have happened. We are all on strike over here. I have plenty of time to write now, being we are locked out.

We are all out, besides sanitary workers and gas workers. Safety men are allowed to work so far; but they are abusing that concession. If things are not played square very soon, I can see a row about same; and every man jack of them will have to stop.

We are called a sporting nation, but when workers and their children are the querry, you won't find much sport about them in our favor.

The "higher-ups" are the most unsporting crowd that ever drew breath. They are fine sports with our rights. Give them all and they are pleased. Give them a little for to beat up, or a pheasant or deer to shoot down, why they are the finest sports ever.

They believe in giving us about as square a deal as the poor things they shoot down. They haven't as much real sport in them as a garden slug.

Did they do their bit in the late war? No; they were on soft jobs in safety, and having the best of wine, woman and song, and the first pick of everything. There is another war on now and again they will try to dodge it by using our own brothers to shoot us down.

But things like that are apt to recoil against them and I wouldn't be in their shoes just now, for all their dirty blood-stained dough.

The more they bit us, the more sullen and ready to hit back we feel. I am prepared to work hard but intend to have the same chance in life as those who now batten on my work.

We are all solid. We had a meeting this week, and on the platform were workers of all the trades around here. Railway men were there, transport, and in fact all the jolly lot in the one fight. Gee, I felt proud and reverant when I saw that. Nothing has been known like it in all the world before.

If things don't settle soon, everyone else that is left in work must come out, and that will about put the tin hat on things. We shall get their servants, cooks, etc., out. They will have to clean up their own dirty work and bathe their own children and kiss them goodnight (a thing seldom done by them—the nurse does it for them), and cook their own meals. I bet it will be some cooking, too. The servants have already left the house of commons.

So you see we are out for a square deal this time.

• • • •

IF their pits don't pay, why in all common sense don't they give them up? No, it is only a gag to get more out of us.

If I had a shop, or anything else, and it didn't pay, do you think I would hang on? No, I would cut my losses as soon as possible and clear—and more so with a big concern like a pit. No, that is all moonshine, but they are not putting their moon-madness over on us this time of day.

Bust 'em—I'm not standing for it!

Here we have what you haven't got out there, namely: dukes, lords, sirs, etc., independent of the people who own industry.

These lords were looked up to as such once upon a time. Now we look upon them with scorn. A lord to us is nothing but a scab upon the country. Well, these people are trying to put us back into the old days—put us in our place, as if we were "small fry." So the people who own industry would like to please them, because it would hit in with things for them also, but it is not coming off. Our eyes are opened too wide for that now. The more the bosses get into this country, the better it will be for all concerned. A lot of what is going on is making people very bitter.

Even the women are waking up over here, and interesting themselves in public affairs. Our meetings now are mostly half women, and they are jammed full as a rule. We never smoke now in public meetings out of respect to them, but they must get right in, and not before will we have much better conditions.

I shall be pleased with the box of chocolates you mentioned, if it lands here, but outward-bound parcel post is stopped.

Well, we have just finished a bonny dinner and Mamie is asking me whether we shall be able to get one like it next week.

Supplies are bound to be short, and many places have started to ration out. We have the dough to get some, but I'm afraid the shops won't have much to sell by then.

Maybe after this struggle England will be a better land for the workers. I'm hoping so, anyway—if our cards are played right, it will be. All I hope is, we will keep cool and beat them by the justice of our cause. All their money won't bake a loaf of bread or cut a dram of coal. They can eat their money if they want to, but it won't keep them alive. The worker is the backbone of every nation. If the bosses beat them, they beat themselves every time. Give the worker a square deal and he is mostly happy.

I think that in the end all this growth of barnacles of long standing years will be cleaned off the bottom of the ship of state. All these old lords, etc., are nothing but scabs and fungus. To me they are the most useless jokers ever born.

Blue blood, is it? Why, the rotten lot don't see England three parts of every year. It is not good enough for them. "Beastly climate, you know." Well, there are many better places, sure.

You can bet there are attempts made to blacken our case in the eyes of the outside world. But don't fall for them. Russia has no more to do with this than the poor old man in the moon.

The whole case rests upon starvation wages versus the present position, and we have had no option but to accept this fight. The whole show has been played for by the other side.

Russia has no hand in the making of this pie. The wages offered are too low to keep body-and-soul together, and that is why all the other workers are with us.

They say pits don't pay! A bigger lie was never invented. They are paying as good as ever they did, but greed rules their brains.

This is the agreement we have: So much for wages —so much for profits—and so much for costs of production—on the coal produced. Now this is how the blind side of the business is worked, to show the outfits don't pay.

Here it is called C. O. P., i. e., "Costs of Production." Directors' fees run into thousands of pounds, besides their gross profits on the money they have invested.

The Priest to the Miner: "Be humble, my child. Each one of us has got to carry his cross."

Directors' work is done in some nice villa in some nice climate. That means nil as regards producing a dram of coal.

They have big villas here, and when the weather is nice they come home. Their servants: gardners, footmen, chauffeurs, etc., are classed on the pit books as producers of coal.

Do they pay, out of their regular income, for the food they eat, wines they drink, cigars they smoke, rent, taxes, etc., clothes and what-nots?

No, they call all that "stores, timber, etc," in other words, "costs of production," and that is how they rob us; where the trouble is concealed. Even our local bosses are supplied with gardners, motor cars, wireless outfits, house, free coal, light, etc. They have banquets every so often; Xmas time they have a bonns, and a big fat turkey; also holidays with pay, and pay for sickness.

Net satisfied with all that, they put their friends into "jammy" (soft) jobs, doing nothing, only hanging on.

In the pit I work in, the waste is awful to see, and the plant lying about is enough to make one weep. They don't put practical men in charge underground now, they are all mostly "paper men," and they know no more about producing a ton of coal than a farm laborer. To think clearly of it all is enough to send a true practical collier off his pit. You should see mining now as it is carried on here. Half-full drams are coming up the pits now, owing to our present conveyor system.

But with all that, the pits are paying the owners very well indeed. I'm working harder seven hours than I did eight. Why? Because there is more speed and hustle.

Again, there are here by-product-works on top of the pit, the finest in the world; also the biggest power house in England.

All this is run free of charge by the small coal we fill for nothing. The profits from these concerns are not counted in with the regular mine proceeds at all. Well, is this fair?

The profits on the by-products alone will cover all pit expenses, but they tell us that is a separate industry, and does not come into our earnings. Gee, it is jammy for them, isn't it?

The terms the mine owners offered us, you know through your newspapers. They are not our terms, but theirs.

I fought and ruined my health to my dying day to protect this country and now I am, back. It is a worse fight to live in it because our own kith and kin are in the lines fighting and suffering slow starvation and that is worse than real war.

There it is mostly short, sharp and sweet, but here, you can see workers' children fading before one's own eyes, blighted by poor food and suffering from shoddy clothes and foot-wear. We pay the top-most price, but even our food-stuffs are faked up, everything we wear is shoddy and faked.

We won't accept them—just as well starve above-ground as underground working for them. So now they say we are fighting the community! What a lie! If the coal owners are the community, then goodness help us in the next war. They haven't the courage or heart of a field mouse. So don't you fall for their lies over there. We are not Bolshies or Communists, we are just workers fighting for a living wage; fighting for our women-folks and children. The greatest call ever heard was, "Suffer the little children to come unto me." Why should the workers in the family of god get the worst upon his table every time? He doesn't wish it that way, I'm sure. He gave us brains as well as a place to put food, and if we don't use our brains what is the use of god giving them to us?

A man who fights for bread for his children is all that is bad. He is a Bolshie, or, in other terms, a Red. Why, now, to me he is only a human being. For being less he would be the biggest coward known. Why, ever since nature formed itself, the smallest thinks known will fight for their young. So we are not really so bad ever here.

Cook is obeying our mandate and his own, and believe me, he knows his job. To the other side, his one great fault is he will not name his price. He hits too straight for them, and he is beating them on tactics.

I have spoken of this useless mob of lords, sirs, dukes, etc., over here. Since the war we have added a good many more.

We have one to every milestone now; the old country is honeycombed with them—they bleed the land. They are useless bullest every time, with their deer parks and hunting grounds.

They say, "Send the skilled men overseas, or use Canada, but our deer parks, Oh, no!"

We are willing to work, and work hard for a square meal, but we can't expect it under the circumstances I have shown you.

"What are we to do?" is the next question. I know what I would do if I had my way.

You may have friends calling and talking about us, so don't be afraid to show them my letter. Truth here is a burbear to many in high places. Our papers are mostly dictated lies, when anything affecting the workers is concerned. So don't fall for those lies.

The printed wage-scale issued by the Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co., Ltd., and made up according to the awards of Earl Buxton and Lord St. Aldwyn, will show you that the standard rate plus 5 per cent, and plus subsistance allowance, that is, the total wage, extends from a minimum of 6 shillings, 2d, for single men over 21 years of age, to a maximum of 7 shillings, 2d, for married men, per day.

This would be, in U. S. money, a daily wage of from $1.38 for single men, to $1.72 for married men.

When you consider that we have to pay as much for almost everything here as you do in America, and more for some things, why you can see what this means to the workers' families here.

These wage-terms, so kindly offered to us by the company, we are supposed to accept, also, upon "day to day contracts."

Well, good luck and cheerio.

Communist Campaign Gets Under Way

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

WHAT is left of the socialist party of America is suffering from united front phobia. Lest any of their members should be roped in on a joint campaign of many working-class organizations where Communists participated, the national secretary of the socialist party has forwarded a letter of instructions to all units of the party warning them against voting for Communists to any executive position, lest the Communists gain any prestige as a result. The fiasco made by the socialists of the futile split in the Anti-Fascist Alliance is not very encouraging for their success in future splitting tactics.

DESPITE Governor Blaine's victory over Senator Lenroot in Wisconsin for the senatorial nomination, the old LaFollette machine is badly bent. A former follower of LaFollette, Fred R. Zimmerman, ran away with the gubernatorial nomination from Herman L. Ekern, the LaFollette family candidate. Now it remains to be seen whether the LaFollette-Blaine combination will make a deal with Zimmerman, run an independent candidate against him in the finals or whether Zimmerman will make an alliance with the republican "stalwarts" and make the chances of "Young Bob's" re-election in 1928 a slim possibility.

THE late LaFollette hoped to stun the nefarious farmer-labor party movement in 1924 with a well-directed anti-radical blow at the St. Paul convention. His efforts to curry favor with the capitalists did not help him any, the the labor bureaucrats gave lip loyalty to his campaign. They went over, almost entirely to the two old parties before election and the disappointment hastened LaFollette's end. The LaFollette-Blaine machine in Wisconsin will not do any more for labor than the late "fighting Bob" did. What the workers of Wisconsin

EMIL HOLMES DESERTS F.-L. PARTY COLORS

Will Be Expelled from Organization

By WM. F. DUNNE.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Sept. 12.—Emil Holmes, candidate for lieutenant-governor on the farmer-labor ticket in Minnesota will be expelled from the party following his endorsement of Alfred Jacques, democratic gubernatorial candidate, according to statements made by Henry Teigan, farmer-labor party campaign manager and other spokesmen of the farmer-labor party.

Accidental Nominatien.

Holmes' desertion of the farmer-labor party clears up an embarrassing situation resulting from his accidental nomination and proves that he has been nothing more or less than an agent of the old parties in the ranks of the farmer-laborites.

Holmes' indorsement of the democratic candidate came after he was ruled out of order at a recent meeting of farmer-labor party candidates at which he tried to introduce a resolution condemning Communism.

Repudiate Ticket.

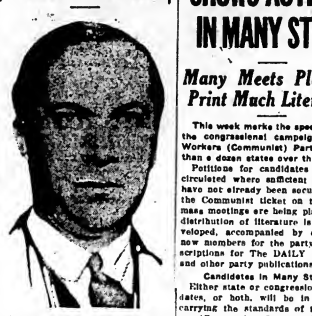
He not only has denounced Magnus Johnson but had repudiated the whole farmer-labor ticket with one exception —Minnie Cederhold, candidate for clerk of the supreme court.

Immediately after his endorsement by Holmes, Jacques, in a public statement, denounced class parties and the McNary-Haugen bill for farm relief. Legal authorities here state that Holmes' name cannot be removed from the farmer-labor ballot.

GERMAN TESTIFIES HE HAS EVIDENCE TO SHOW DAUGHERTY CONSPIRACY



Among the early witnesses called by the prosecution in the Daugherty-Miller trial at New York is Richard Merton of Germany, above, who is agent for a Swiss firm. He is said to have definite evidence of a Daugherty-Miller conspiracy to defraud the government.

DAUGHERTY NOW CLAIMS BRIBE WAS ONLY FEE

German Magnate Will Resume Stand Today

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Sept. 12. — Cross examination of Richard Merton, German metal financier, the government star witness in the trial of Harry M. Daugherty, former attorney general, and Colonel Thomas W. Miller, former alien property custodian, charged with conspiracy to defraud the government, will be resumed Monday.

It was learned today that the defense plans to call George R. Williams, first assistant to Colonel Miller. Williams was mentioned frequently in the testimony. At one point Buckner described him "a conspirator," but his name does not appear in the conspiracy indictment.

Why He Paid Money.

Merton on the stand related how and why he had paid $441,000—$391,000 in bonds and $50,000 in checks—to the late John T. King, G. O. P. national figure, in consideration of the transfer of the $7,000,000 German equity in the American Metal company's assets, seized by the government at the time of the war to the German-controlled Society Suisse Pour Valeurs De Molaaux.

Had Large Sum.

Merton also told of Colonel Miller bringing personally from Washington almost $6,500,000 in two checks, which represented the bulk of the proceeds involved in the Society Suisse American Metal company.

The defense strategy is based on the claim that the $441,000 delivered to John T. King, G. O. P. national figure, Harry M. Daugherty, attorney general and Thomas W. Miller, alien property custodian was not a bribe but a fee for services rendered.

Dropped Off in Time.

The name of Jesse Smith is frequently heard at the trial. Smith was a small businessman, the point of being exposed. For a long time he lived in the same apartment with Daugherty.

Grab $4,000 an Street.

Bandits kidnapped William Stoeckel, 35, as he was returning to his office from the Equitable Trust company, robbed him of $4,000 which he obtained there, and then tossed him out of their automobile on the south side of the city.

WORKERS PARTY SHOWS ACTIVITY IN MANY STATES

Many Meets Planned; Print Much Literature

This week marks the speeding up of the congressional campaigns of the Workers (Communist) Party in more than a dozen states over the nation.

Petitions for candidates are being circulated where sufficient signatures have not already been secured to put the Communist ticket on the ballot; mass meetings are being planned, the distribution of literature is being developed, accompanied by drives for new members for the party and subscriptions for The DAILY WORKER and other party publications.

Candidates in Many States.

Either state or congressional candidates, or both, will be in the field carrying the standards of the Workers (Communist) Party in Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin and California with prospects of Communist tickets in additional states.

The Workers (Communist) Party will also support the campaigns already on of the Farmer-Labor movement in Minnesota, South Dakota, Montana and Washington, and in other states where the drive for independent political action thru a Farmer-Labor Party shows signs of an immediate crystallization.

100,000 Pamphlets Put Out.

One hundred thousand copies of the pamphlet, "The Workers (Communist) Party, What It Stands For; Why Workers Should Join," written by C. E. Ruthenberg, have already been sent out for distribution. It is planned to publish at least half a million. This distribution is the basis for the intensive drive for an increased party membership.

Five hundred thousand copies of the Party's Congressional Platform, recently published in The DAILY WORKER, are also being printed. There will be several leaflets for general distribution, among them one on "Dollar Democracy," showing American democracy in action with its huge slush funds, and another exposing the attacks on labor by the government. The campaign will include demands for farmers' relief.

300 Mass Meetings Arranged.

Arrangements are almost completed for 300 mass meetings to be held during the campaign. These are being directed from the national office. The local and district organizations of the party will increase this number.

The first campaign tour planned by the party was completed by William F. Dunne Sunday, speaking at Milwaukee, Wis.

J. Louis Engdahl, candidate for United States senator in Illinois, starts a second tour tonight, speaking in Toledo, Ohio, at Iota Hall, Grant Hotel, Jefferson near Erie, and in Pittsburgh on Tuesday.

Many Speakers Tour Country.

Among the many party speakers who will tour the country during the campaign are Ben Gitlow, candidate for vice-president in 1924; C. E. Ruthenberg, general secretary of the party; Bert Wolfe, director of the New York Workers' School; Herry Wicks, Rebecca Grecht, William J. White and Manuel Gomes.

Local speakers will be drawn into the campaign everywhere, while special tours will be planned for all candidates.

WILL LABOR BREAK WITH SAM INSULL?

Streator Convention to Test Officials

By ARNE SWABECK.

The exposure of the slush fund in the Illinois primaries as brought out by the senatorial committee of investigation has proven at least one thing conclusively, namely, that the selection of candidates on the capitalist tickets is completely in the control of those who can put up the cash. After such proof has been furnished, the support given by labor representatives to candidates thus selected becomes nothing short of treason to the labor movement.

That the money power controls the present congressional and senatorial election machinery, that it controls the two old parties and their selection of candidates, we knew before; but to the labor movement it becomes disturbing in this situation to note that a complete political alliance exists between such selected candidates, the politicians of the capitalist parties, and officials of the Illinois trade union movement.

SOVIET LABOR HEAD IN BERLIN FOR ANGLO-RUSS MEET DECLARES BRITISH MINERS ARE ISOLATED

BERLIN (By Mail).—After the conclusion of the session of the Anglo-Russian committee in Berlin, Comrade Andreyev, the chairmen of the Russian delegation, made the following declaration to the representative of the "Inprecorr":

"To the question, how we, the representatives of the Soviet Labor Unions, estimate the situation in the struggle of the British miners, I must say the following:

Feels Prove Estimate was Correct.

"We have very often expressed with great clarity our opinions concerning the estimation of the events in Great Britain, in the decisions of the central council of Soviet labor unions. The latest happenings in connection with this struggle have completely corroborated our estimation.

"The struggle of the miners is lengthy and has already lasted over four months. We can only express our astonishment at the persistency and the heroism with which the miners are fighting. A possible victory for the miners will demand tremendous sufferings and sacrifices from the fighters because all forces are being mobilized against them.

Seek Coal the Danger.

"The unhindered transport of strike-breaking coal from abroad to Great Britain, and the transport of this coal in Great Britain itself is a great danger for the struggle. This gives the enemies of the miners, the employers and the government, a powerful weapon in the hand. It is already proved with all clarity that the con-

U. S. WARSHIPS TURN GUNS ON CANTON TROOPS

Act as Convoy for British "Merchantman"

(Special to The Daily Worker)

U. S. Navy Fires On Cantonese.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 12. — Admiral Clarence S. Williams, commander of the U. S. Asiatic fleet, has cabled the navy department confirming the report that American destroyers Stewart and Pope, the gunboat Palos and the mine sweeper Pigeon, fired upon the Cantonese occupying the river fortress at Hanyang, when the Chinese attempted to investigate the character of passing boats.

It is admitted that the Palos and the Pigeon were convoying a British "merchantmen." The state department does not give any information on whether the British "merchant" vessel was loaded with arms for the reactionary troops.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SHANGHAI, Sept. 12.—The naval-consular parley of the imperialist powers going on at Hankow is expected to disclose one of the neatest tricks ever turned on the intriguing British imperialists by the Chinese nationalists in connection with the investigation of the clash at Wanhsein between British marines and subordinate troops of Wu Pei-fu. The incident is cause for Homeric laughter.

Those "Merchant" Ships.

The British have been subsidizing Wu Pei-fu in his fight against the Cantonese armies. Supposedly innocent "merchant" vessels, sometimes convoyed by gunboats, have been carrying shiploads of arms and ammunition to the reactionary troops of Wu up the Yangtze, as have similar "merchant" ships of other nations as well, including the United States.

According to first reports, the clash at Wanhsien, fully 1,200 miles up the Yangtze in interior China, arose over an alleged accidental grazing of small boats filled with troops under General Yang-sen, one of Wu's reactionary subordinates, by a British "merchantman."

Row With Ally.

It was stated that Yang-sen seized two British "merchantmen" to insure compensation, and refused to let them go on the demand of the British consul at Chanking, whereupon British marines attempted a forcible rescue and received a sound thrashing by the Chinese troops of Yang-sen, retreating with seven dead and fifteen wounded.

It is now revealed that the two "merchantmen" were loaded with arms for the reactionary troops of Yang-sen. But when they reached Wanhsien, the boats were boarded by officers of the Cantonese troops, who convinced the ships' captains that they were the ones to whom the arms were to be delivered.

Cantonese Get the Arms.

The arms were, therefore, turned over to the Cantonese. But when Wu's subordinate, General Yang-sen discovered that the arms had been given to the Cantonese, he accused the British of double-crossing, and promptly seized the vessels. Then followed the attempt to rescue and the loss of British marines shot down by their allies.

This is very unpleasant to the British, since it exposes to the world their support of Wu Pei-fu, who in turn is exposed as a tool of imperialism, as the Cantonese have claimed.

Canton Whipping Sun.

More bad news for the imperialists is contained in dispatches showing that the Cantonese are winning against the newest imperialist hopeful, General Sun Chaun-fang, ruler of most of the five provinces on the lower Yangtze. Sun, at British behest, declared war on the Cantonese when the latter showed their strength by routing Wu Pei-fu at Hankow.

The Cantonese replied with an ultimatum to Sun to get his troops out of the province of Kiangsi. Now the report is that the Cantonese advance against Sun has taken the city of Pinghiang, 100 miles west of Nanchang, the capital of the province. The troops of Sun are retreating in disorder toward the capital. Wu Pei-fu seems completely put out of the fight, in spite of his boasts about reorganizing his army as he retreats into Honan.

They were both most young when they killed Paul who had run away from home because he didn't like the religious principles imposed by his father. Paul is now a member of the I. W. W. Watkins field and his sister Ruth is keeping house for him. The Watkins field is really Bunny's and he has been made very unhappy there the bringing in of a great well which has grown to fourteen derricks. In the meantime Bunny's home and the man in the oil Arden, purport to strike for an eight-hour day and a raise in wages. Paul becomes a leader of the strikers and a battle is on between the oil workers and the Oil Operators' Association which supplies thugs and gunmen to the various operators, including Dad, during the strike. Bunny is back at school and reads the reports only thru the press. He is somewhat sympathetic to the strikers and doesn't believe the calumnies printed in the press about the I. W. W. Bunny goes back to the field and gets a chance to talk with Paul who has now become a strike leader and editor of the strikers' paper. He tells Bunny he is too soft to do what he would like to do, stand with the strikers. That same day, news comes from Washington that one of the war the demands of the men will be granted and Bunny is very happy.

LIVELY FIGHT LOOMS FOR ILL. MINERS' HEAD

Tumulty of Springfield on Progressive Slate

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Sept. 12.—Joseph Tumulty of Springfield carries the progressive banner in a three cornered contest for the presidency of the Illinois Miners' Union.

Despite suspicions that the operators would not allow Farrington's friend Fishwick and Lewis' man Sneed to split the forces of reaction and facilitate the election of Tumulty, it appears that both candidates are intent on remaining in the race.

Both Sneed and Fishwick are now peddling on Farrington's sell-out to the Peabody Coal company. In the frame of mind the union coal diggers are in, they are ready to brand all these the excuse or play low on Farrington's treachery as agents of the operators.

The reactionary labor leaders are as still as death on the Farrington matter. At a labor picnic held in West Frankfort on Labor Day William Sneed, the candidate for president of District 12, spoke for an hour but never referred to Farrington's consent with the Peabody Coal company. He boasted of the organization and what it was doing for the miners. Lots of people around here believe that those boys are afraid that Farrington will split the vote in favor of Tumulty unless they play low on his $35,000 a year contract.

Corbishley Not Allowed To Speak.

A fake progressive by the name of Jones, chairman of the meeting refused Henry Corbishley of Zeigler permission to speak because Corbishley would not consent to be muzzled. When William F. Dunne, editor of The DAILY WORKER was introduced the reactionaries pulled off an acrobatic stunt on the grounds and succeeded in drowning a good many of the workers away from the speaker.

The reactionary crew of rub-lieutenants are slivering in their shoes in anticipation of Farrington's return. Those lackeys have been living on Farrington's bounty for years and now dread the thot of being dumped out into the cold.

Lost Big Sum of Money.

Rumors persist around here that Farrington lost $50,000 in the Peerless Milling company. This is adduced as a reason for the exposure of his contract with the Peabody's. No well informed miner will believe that the contract was not signed until a day before Farrington left for Europe. Or if it was not signed there is reason to believe that there was a definite standing between Farrington and the mammoth coal company for many years.

ANSWER WALL STREET FICTION ABOUT PULLMAN PORTERS' WAGES; COMPANY PROFITS FROM TIPS

By ESTHER LOWELL.

NEW YORK—(FP)—Pullman porters organized in the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters are using the occasion of their union's first anniversary to answer Pullman Co. propaganda printed as a news article in the Wall Street Journal. One big point made in the article is that the minimum wage of porters has increased 162 per cent in the last 13 years. "Quite true," agree the porters, "but look where it started—$27.50 in 1918! In the $72.50 a month a living wage now? We are seeking a minimum of at least $150 monthly to meet the high cost of living."

The Pullman Co. saves $139.50 on every 15-years-in-service porter it pays $90.70 a month, declare the porters. The porter "paid this rate is "in charge"—doing the conductor's work in addition to his own on the Pullman car. If the company paid a conductor for the work they would spend $150 for the conductor plus $80 for the porter, a total of $230.

Few Privats Care.

"Furthermore," the company cannot point to a single porter regularly employed in charge of a private car and therefore earning the maximum rate of $104 a month, $1,248 a year mentioned in the Wall Street Journal. The porter is paid at the maximum rate when he goes out in charge of the private car, but he is seldom out in that capacity ever a month or two at a time, and never as much as a year steadily. Between such choice runs he lapses back to his old rate.

The Pullman Co. is credited with paying porters on committee and company work extra sums on the basis of their presumed tips equaling $75 a month. The porters say that they are actually paid only for such days on which the committee work occurs, not for the total days lost. Roy Lancaster, secretary-treasurer of the brotherhood, says that he used to miss five days when called off his New York-Chicago run for company union work. He received pay only for the two days on which the committee met.

Few Tips.

Tips are about the $65 a month first estimated in the Wall Street Journal, not the $75 later implied as correct, according to Labor Bureau Inc. findings from the porters' own replies to a questionnaire. Sylvis Kopald of the bureau is working out statistics for the brotherhood to present with its case—to the Pullmen Co. If a conference is granted after the national referendum on company union or brotherhood—to the rail mediation board otherwise.

Only a third of the passengers in a parlor car of 31 seats will tip, porters say, and most give only a dime. In sleeping cars the percentage tipping is a little higher but the maximum amount given is usually a quarter. When a man and wife and children travel together, the man is likely to give the porter only a quarter for the whole family, even the several berths are occupied. When berths are not all full, the porter is the loser. He is never sure of this much needed extra income from tips.

Tipping the Boss.

The Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters wants to see the porters and maids paid sufficiently by the Pullman Co. so that they will not have to depend upon tips for their living. The tip is really tipping the company, the porters say, for not paying its workers decent wages. The company does not recognize tips as a part of earnings in apportioning pensions to old employes. The average pension given is only $18 a month.

Porters have to pay for their own food enroute, paying half the high dining car prices charged to passengers, which is still an expensive rate for such poorly paid workers. Only a third of the portars, according to the Wall Street Journal figures, get free uniforms because of 10 years or more service. The majority of porters have this additional expense each year. As for owning their own homes and autos, the brotherhood officials laugh at the idea and wonder where the Wall Street Journal got its figures. Porters in small towns may possibly own little shacks they call homes, but the bulk of the porters are flash, jewelry and certainly do not own either residences or autos.

Don't Own Company.

The financial paper makes a point of the partners ownership of Pullmen Co. stock. Each porter is permitted to buy only one share and less than a tenth have taken the offer. The Pullmen Porters' Benefit Assn., given with the company union, was denied the right of investing $200,000 of its $250,000 funds taken from the porters in stock.

THOMPSON ENDS TRIP; STIMSON APPLAUDS WOOD

Last Audience Solid for Independence

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MANILA, P. I., Sept. 12.—Colonel Carmi Thompson, President Coolidge's personal investigator in the Philippines, made his last speech to a meeting of Filipinos at Pasacao, southern Luzon. The Filipinos were unanimously in favor of independence, and not a single speaker among them favored the Bacon bill, which would divide the islands into two parts in order to cripple the independence movement.

Thompson is having trouble in getting back to Manila, as a storm drove the government cutter Mindoro, on which he was to take passage, out to sea. He intends to rest for some time at a mountain resort near Manila, and then to go to China to study relations between that country and the islands.

Militarist Speaks.

Henry L. Stimson, former secretary of war, issued a signed statement to the press on the eve of Col. Carmi Thompson's arrival in Manila. He landed Governor General Wood for his undoing of the liberal measures of the preceding Harrison regime, and threatened the Filipinos with American indifference in case they broke away from the control of the United States and were attacked by other powers.

New Angle in Rubber.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 12.—Capitalists and politicians are bending an attentive ear to the reports of the American Chemical Society congress here. The congress has been told and is investigating the fact that sufficient rubber to provide for the present consumption of the United States (about one billion pounds) can be grown thru the efforts of 40,000 men farming the guayula shrub in the desert regions of the southwestern states. At present over 400,000 men are employed in the tropics in the production from rubber trees this much crude rubber.

It May Work.

The shrub is said to be under cultivation on small farms in California and the technicel difficulties of making rubber from its sap are in the way to being overcome. Since American policy in the Philippines has been largely influenced by the fact that the islands may be the United States' chief source of rubber, observers think the guayula may aid the independence movement there.

Slovak, Czech Workers Celebrate 20th Year of Rovnost Ludu, Now Daily

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

SLOVAK and Czech workers in the Chicago district, in common with these thruout the country, will join on Sunday, Oct. 10th, to celebrate the 20th anniversary of their daily paper, "Rovnost Ludu."

C. E. Ruthenberg, general secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party, will speak at the Chicago celebration, to be held on that day at the Czecho-Slovak American Hall, 1438 W. 18th St., bringing the greetings of other native and foreign-born workers in the United States allied under Communist standards or sympathetic to the revolutionary cause.

Oct. 10th is nearly a month away. But the preparations for the anniversary are already getting ahead full speed. It is not only going to be a day of rejoicing, over 20 years of progress achieved against great obstacles, but it is also going to mark another milestone recording new efforts.

Already claiming a total of 10,000 readers, the campaign is being launched for winning 5,000 additional subscribers for the "Rovnost Ludu," to commamorate satisfactorily its 20th year.

"Rovnost Ludu" was launched as a ravolutionary monthly in October, 1906. This was the month in which the socialist party launched its first English-language daily in this country, the Chicago Daily Socialist, with Joseph Medill Patterson, one of the owners and later one of the editors of the Chicago Tribune, as co-editor with Algernon M. Simons, author of "Social Forces in American History."

The incident of the Chicago Daily Socialist is merely mentioned by way of contrast. "Rovnost Ludu" had only the will of the Slovak workers in the great basic industries to keep it alive. The Chicago Daily Socialist had its many connections with liberals, who contributed liberally in money and with such intellectual guidance as they had to offer.

After six years the Chicago Daily Socialist passed out of existence in 1912, discredited, while the "Rovnost Ludu" continues to grow.

"Rovnost Ludu," soon after it was established became a semi-monthly, and then it became a weekly in 1908. It had the same difficulties that beset all revolutionary working class dailies during the war. It was in June, 1917, the month that the espionage act went into force that the "Rovnost Ludu" ceased to be printed in the Spravedlnost plant.

It was established in its own print shop at 1510 W. 18th St., where it is still being published in an excellently equipped plant with linotypes, up-to-date presses and other machinery. It was reided and its editors and managers persecuted by the agents of the United States government during the war. Different issues were held up by the post office department in an effort to cripple and crush it. But it kept going.

The Slovak Federation joined the socialist party in 1913. It withdraw in August, 1920, taking the "Rovnost Ludu" with it. This was immediately following the presidential nominating convention of the socialist party held in New York City. It did not, however, immediately join the Communist movement that came into existence one year previously. It remained independent for the time being. After a long struggle, however, lasting over several years, the Slovak section with the "Rovnost Ludu" was brought under Communist standards in June, 1925. In the meantime "Rovnost Ludu," in January, 1922, had become a semi-weekly, and on May 1st, 1926, "The Daily" was launched, not only as the organ of the Slovak workers, but also of the Czech workers in the United States.

"Rovnost Ludu" is also the organ of the Slovak Workers Benefit Society, organized in 1915, with a present membership of about 4,500.

Its field is to be found among the 619,866 Slovaks and 622,796 Czechs in the United States, according to the 1920 census. Its special strength however, is among the steel workers, coal miners, rubber workers and glass workers, in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio, Illinois and other great industrial states. Slovak workers are to be found in the big cities of many trades, in Chicago, Cleveland, Pittsburgh and New York, and in the smaller cities, in Bridgeport, Conn.; Clasanove and Allentown, Pa.; Racine, Wisc.; in Youngstown, Akron, Neffs and Bellaire, Ohio.

In addition to the publication of a newspaper, the "Rovnost Ludu" plant has turned out a continuous stream of literature in leaflets, pamphlets and books, conducting a book business very successfully since 1920.

"Rovnost Ludu" has had its struggle with the catholic clergy as a result of its ceaseless efforts to lift the pall of papal darkness from the minds of the Slovak workers. It has fought the catholic clergy in common with revolutionary press in other languages and quite successfully.

It also finds strenuous opposition from the 19 bourgeois Slovak publications, three dailies, two in New York and one in Cleveland; 10 weeklies and six semi-weeklies and monthlies.

The "Rovnost Ludu" has therefore come a long way during the 20 years of its existence. But it is very apparent that it has greater struggles ahead. It can continue on triumphantly only in the most active and energetic support of all Slovak workers. All English-speaking and foreign-born workers can co-operate with their Slovak comrades by introducing this working class daily to Slovak workers not already acquainted with it.

"Rovnost Ludu" is a powerful weapon in the revolutionary struggle for the abolition of capitalism. It must be made more powerful.

Long live the "Rovnost Ludu." Hail greater achievements of the Slovak workers, able fighters in the ranks of the American working class.

FLIES RED FLAG ON SOVIET SHIP INTO SCOT PORT

Cabin System Enjoyed by Russian Seamen

(Special to The Daily Worker)

GLASGOW, Scotland (By Mail).—The S. S. Leonid Krasnin from Leningrad docked here with a cargo of oil-cake consigned to a Glasgow merchant.

The presence of the soviet ship flying the Red Flag in this port has drawn considerable attention. Hundreds of workers visit it daily and are astounded at the condition of work and equality that exists between the officers and crew.

Considerable Change.

The Leonid Krasnin was a British tramp steamer till eight months ago. All the attendant miseries of the "glory hole" and the "galley" was the heritage of the soviet seaman. The soviet commissar of shipping decided that their seamen could not live under such conditions and had the ship renovated.

The interior of the crew's quarters is white enameled, two men for each cabin, clean linen for the beds every week, a writing desk for every cabin, inlaid linoleum on the floor, a large dining room nicely decorated, a washroom with hot and cold water and a library with books of every description.

Fine Welcome Given.

The crew, including officers, were entertained by the comrades of the Glasgow district of the Communist Party of Great Britain.

A deputation of locked-out coal miners from Lanerkshire escorted the crew to the mining districts to inspect the housing and other conditions which the British miners live under.

The soviet ship will load a few hundred tons of machinery then proceed to Liverpool, where she will complete her cargo and return to Leningrad.

Building Trades Head for a Million Dollar Headquarters Building

By LAURENCE TODD, Federated Press.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 12.—Proposal that a national headquarters building be erected in Washington by its affiliated national and international unions will be laid before the building trades departments of the American Federation of Labor at its forthcoming annual convention in Detroit.

Secretary Tracy of the department will advocate the purchase of a site and the construction of a building trades temple that will cost approximately $1,000,000, in beauty and enduring materials he would have it vie with the best architecture in the capital.

Not only is the departmental office located here, but the international headquarters of the Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, the International Association of Sheet Metal Workers and the bricklayers', Masons' and Plasterers' International Union are now in Washington. The electrical workers are in the Machinists' building, opposite the building owned by the A. F. of L.

Headquarters of the plumbers and steamfitters are in Chicago, in that city also are the head offices of the steam and operating engineers and the roofers. The plasterers' international has headquarters in Middletown, O., and the stone cutters in Indianapolis. The lathers are in Cleveland, the hod carriers and the granite cutters in Quincy, Mass., and the painters in LaFayette, Ind. The carpenters, who may reaffiliate with the department within a year or two, have a building in Indianapolis.

Kharakhan Regrets Hems.

Russian foreign minister, has ordered M. Kharakhan, Soviet minister to China, to return to Moscow for consultation, due to the serious situation that exists between China and Russia, according to a Central News Moscow dispatch.

Chicago Federation Backs McVey for the State Legislature

A resolution was carried unanimously at the last meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor, calling on all organized labor to support David McVey, running on the progressive ticket for state representative from the twenty-third senatorial district.

The federation elected as delegates to the Illinois State Federation of Labor convention which will be held in Streator next week, Oscar F. Nelson, vice-president of the Chicago Federation of Labor and member of Post Office Clerks No. 1; Arthur Olsen of the Painters' Union No. 194, and William Rossell, of Machinists' Union No. 461. Others on the ballot but not elected were: Daniel Cruse, of Carpenters' Union No. 1; George Koop, of Typographical Union No. 16, and John Werlick, of Metal Polishers' No. 6.

John Fitzpatrick of Horseshoers' Union No. 4 was nominated to succeed himself as president of the Chicago Federation of Labor; Oscar Nelson was nominated for another term as vice-president; E. N. Nockels of the Electricians' Union was nominated again as secretary and Harry Scheck, of Printing Pressmen's Union No. 3 was renominated for reading clerk of the Chicago Federation.

FARRINGTON AND JOHN L. LEWIS

The following article, was specially written for the DAILY WORKER by J. B. McLachlan, former president of the Nove Scotia miners who was forced out of office by John L. Lewis and his place filled by men who consented to carry out Lewis' wishes. While McLachlan was in jail as a result of the miners' strike Lewis was associating with the Canadian government officials and doing everything in his power to assist McLachlan's enemies.

By J. B. McLACHLAN.

GLACE BAY, Nove Scotia—Frank Farrington's last public official act as a double-dealing traitor to the working class could not have been more fitting had the gods themselves, after careful deliberation, pre-arranged it. Farrington was in Geneve, the mecca of labor fakers, for the purpose of furnishing a room in the labor annex of the league of nations in honor of Sam Gompers, when another traitor spills the beans and shows Farrington to be the hired tool of the Peabody Coal Company.

How faithfully Farrington must have served the Peabody Coal Company when they consider him worth $25,000 per year, and how constantly and persistently he must have betrayed the miners in order to command such a price from the people who live by robbing the miners of the wealth they produce!

When the curtain is raised on this latest bit of treachory to the working class the stage setting could not be better, the trinity revealed could not be blacker: Farrington unmasked, Gompere dead, and John L. Lewis, the arch-traitor of the bunch, playing the roll of the purtly guy.

There is no need for despair because of a few fakers, but there is great need that the rank and file learn that every official who talks to them about collaboration with the boss is a potential traiter. The selling out by Farrington is not a act that was done in an unguarded moment, but the direct result of years spent in the belief that the coal owner and the coal digger were natural partners.

Before this show is all over Farrington, if his boss will elbow him, may have something to say about this 100 per cent capitalist tool, John L. Lewis, and the leaders of The DAILY WORKER may have one more "revelation" of the selling out of the miners by Lewis.

It was Lewis who proposed to the coal operators that 200,000 coal miners be driven out of the incustry to starve as far as either he or they cared, and his act in turning up a confederate, who was becoming too dengerous to him, will hardly et this fete dete stamp him as the disinterested guardian of the coal miners of North America.

In 1922 Lewis, like the traitor he is, ran the knife in the back of the miners of Nove Scotia when a splendid victory was almost in their grasp. The miners of Nove Scotia had come out on strike against the use of the armed forces of the country being used to smash the then existing workers' striko. Every lost men in and about the coal mines came out. The company property could go to hell as far as the miners were concerned, and both the government and the operators were in the freme of mind to settle.

Only once in all the history of the labor movement in Canada did the governor-general interfere in a labor dispute, and it was in this miners' strike in 1922. He came to Nova Skotia and met the officers of the miners' union and agreed that the armed forces be all taken out of the strike field and that the miners start to go back into the mines when the troops leave the district.

It was exactly at this point that the minister of militia and a lawyer for the British Empire Steel Corporation got John L. Lewis to step into the struggle on behalf of the master class and depose the district officers and order all coal miners back to work on pain of having their charters taken awey and their solidly organized union smashed to fragments. His is a history of black treachery treason to the coal miners of North America.

Wherever men battled for bread this traitor tricked them and betrayed them. In West Virginia, where the miners took up a battle that thrilled the world, John L. Lewis was swearing out affidavits that he was not in that state at all. In Somerset coke fields, where 40,000 coal miners came out on strike, Lewis, at the dictates of his coal operator boss, refused the strikers membership in the union and left them in the lurch when he used

GREEK REVOLT IS CRUSHED BY ATHENS TROOPS

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ATHENS, Sept. 12.—Fifty persons were killed and many wounded when thousands of shots were exchanged between members of the Athens garrison and the republican guard. The latter had been ordered disbanded by the new dictator, Condylis, and marched on the city in protest. Civilians joined with them in the battle against the loyal troops and the struggle raged for several hours, with war planes flying overhead and dropping bombs on the city.

The rebels numbered about 1,000. Superior forces finally overwhelmed them and their officers were arrested. The city is now under mertial law.

OFFICIALS SAY VACIRCA TO BE DEPORTED SOON

NEW YORK, Sept. 12. — Assistant Commissioner of Immigration George Tolman has issued a statement to the press that Vincenzo Vacirca, editor of the Italian anti-fascist paper, Nuovo Mondo, is to be deported at once unless he leaves the country of his own accord.

Vacirca claims the ancient right of political refuge, once recognised by the United States, in the days before the House of Morgan and Premier Mussolini made their bargain.

Vacirca, in his own statement, says: "If I return to Italy my life will be in danger, and besides I was the first of the anti-fascists to be placed on the list of the interdicted. The Italian government has confiscated my property and has deprived me of my citizenship. I have been a long while

When Joseph McCoy, treasury department actuary, announced the other day that America owns its first billionaire this year he did not give out any names. But it is quite certain that the flivver king of Detroit who has earned an entirely false reputation for being a "good boss," is the man. His speed-up system in the Ford factories have built a fortune for him unprecedented in the history of the world.

The Daily Worker Needs Your Help Now!

"The Source of Working Class Literature"

This is the home of The Daily Worker, made possible by the sacrifice and generosity of thousands of working men and women. For three years 1113 West Washington Blvd. has been the heart and the center of the revolutionary labor movement in America.

THE DAILY WORKER has for nearly three years carried on a militant struggle for the workers' interests.

It has been in the heart of every labor struggle, telling the facts about the struggle, meeting the lies of the enemies of labor, inspiring the workers with courage and enthusiasm to go forward to victory.

It is a big job to keep alive a daily paper fighting for the interests of the workers. But with the help of the conscious courageous workers who understand the class struggle and the need of a DAILY WORKER to speak for the workers, it has been done.

Thru months of storm and stress, thru ever recurring financial crises which threatened the life of OUR PAPER, the flag of a militant workers' daily has been kept flying.

We have kept the Daily Worker alive.

We must "KEEP THE DAILY WORKER."

Every Militant Worker Must Aid.

Each year The DAILY WORKER has been compelled to come to those whose cause it serves for help.

It has drawn new strength to live and carry on its services to the workers' cause thru the contributions they have been been willing to make in order to keep their paper alive.

This year the crisis which The DAILY WORKER faces is deeper and the help must be greater. We have the accumulated financial burdens of nearly three years of struggle on our shoulders.

To Meet the Situation the Daily Worker Must Raise $50,000.

Without that sum or near that sum the future outlook for your paper is dark. With that sum we can KEEP THE DAILY WORKER. We can clear up its financial obligations and place it on a sound basis for another year of service to the workers' cause.

We are certain that those supporters of The DAILY WORKER who have kept it alive during the last two and a half years, together with the new friends it has now, will come to its aid again and help us to

Keep The DAILY WORKER.

The Forward Movement of Labor.

The workers are developing a new fighting spirit. The period of easy submission to capitalist oppression and exploitation, to cutting wages, worsening working conditions, is over. The workers are again beginning to march.

This is shown in the hard-fought battle of the anthracite miners, the victorious struggle of the New York furriers, the splendid fight of the Passaic textile workers, the determined struggle of the New York garment workers.

The railroad workers are demanding higher wages. The coal miners are making a fight to cleanse their union of the agents of the bosses and preparing for a militant struggle.

The new mood of labor will create a greater field for The DAILY WORKER. It will be able to win a broader support and build a sounder foundation for itself.

We must KEEP THE DAILY WORKER so it can remain the militant voice of the workers, helping the workers in their strikes, fighting for left wing unionism, for the protection of the foreign-born, for labor defense, for a labor party, for the workers' and farmers' government and for the abolition of capitalism.

Help Must Come Quickly.

The situation of The DAILY WORKER is critical. It must have help quickly. To meet its obligations and keep its flag flying it must raise $10,000 during the next ten days and the whole of the $50,000 fund in the next three months.

The $10,000 is needed at once to pay paper bills so that more paper can be secured, without which The DAILY WORKER cannot appear. It must pay the workers in its printing plant, there can be no DAILY WORKER without their services.

Buy "Keep the Daily Worker" Certificates.

To raise the $10,000 immediately and $40,000 during the next three months we are issuing "Keep the Daily Worker" Certificates.

Every supporter of The DAILY WORKER, every reader, every member of the Workers (Communist) Party must come to the aid of The DAILY WORKER immediately by buying as large a block as possible of the "Keep the Daily Worker" Certificates.

CHICAGO PARTY STARTS DRIVE FOR SIGNATURES

Intensive Campaign to Get on Ticket

An intensive campaign is being staged by the district organization of the Chicago Workers (Communist) Party to make certain of getting the party candidates on the ballot in the coming elections. The district organizer, Arne Swabeck, announces that the petitions have been issued a little late and that a well organized attempt to get signatures must be made if the party candidates are to go on the ticket.

Must Next Sunday.

To facilitate the getting of signatures and to get the party to move en masse for the securing of the necessary number of names, meetings are being called in the various congressional districts for Sunday morning, Sept. 19, at 10 o'clock. The comrades will meet at that hour to report on the number of signatures secured and, if necessary to go out that very day and fill out the quota.

The Schedule.

The meetings are scheduled as follows:

In the 6th congressional district, where Mathilde Kulousek is the nominee for congress, the party members and sympathizers will meet at Freiheit Hall, 3209 W. Roosevelt Rd. Section 4 of the party is assigned to this district.

In the 7th congressional district, where Sam Hammersmark is the nominee, Sections 5 and 6 of the party are combining to secure the signatures and the members of these sections will meet at Folkets Hus, 2733 Hirsch Blvd.

In the 1st congressional district, Comrade Elizabeth Griffin is the nominee and Sections 1 and 3 of the party are combining to put her on the ballot. Comrades of this section will meet at Community Center, 3201 S. Wabash Ave., to report on the signatures secured.

Senate Nominee.

Comrade J. Louis Engdahl is the nominee of the party for senator from Illinois. All sections of the Chicago party are combining to get signatures on his petition, there being no district requirements in this case. Each party therefore has two petitions to work on. One for his congressional district, the other for the state.

All these meetings will occur on the same morning, Sunday, Sept. 19, at 10 o'clock. Pick the right hall and don't fail to appear.

WORKERS' SCHOOL ENTERTAINMENT OPENS SEMESTER

Concert and Dance to Start Off Term

The scene is all set for the good old-fashioned get-together which the Chicago Workers' School students have planned as their celebration of the opening of the Fall 1926 term.

The time is Sunday, Sept. 19th, at 8 p. m.; the place is the Workers' Lyceum, 2733 Hirsch Blvd. Admission price is 50c.

Good Concert.

It is planned to have a very good concert preceding the dance. In addition, there will be a special display of shop bulletins published by Workers Party units in all parts of the country. This will be a demonstrating of the close unity of theory and practice in Communist education.

After Permanent School.

The object of the school this year is to lay the basis for the development of a real permanent educational institution for the militant workers of Chicago. The students themselves have entered into this project with real spirit and enthusiasm and call upon all workers in the party and sympathetic to it to give them their cooperation.

The plans for the coming term have already been laid out. They include the following courses:

The Classes.

1. The History of the Three Workers' Internationals, teacher, Max Shachtman.

2. Trade Union Tactics and Strategy, teacher Arne Swabeck.

3. Elements of Communism, teacher Bittelman.

4. A. B. C. of the Class Struggle, teacher Simons.

5. Communist Party organization and Functioning, teacher Ahern.

6. A. B. C. of the Class Struggle, (class held on South Side), teacher Kaplan.

Don't forget—the first student's affair of the season, Sunday, September 19th at 8 p. m. at the Workers' Lyceum, 2733 Hirsch Blvd., for a real good time in the informal comradely spirit that we all enjoy.

SANTA MONICA CHIEF ATTEMPTS TO PREVENT COMMUNIST ADDRESS BEFORE OPEN FORUM, BUT FAILS

By W. E. CARPENTER.

SANTA MONICA, Cal., Sept. 12.—The chief of police of Santa Monica, Cal., attempted to stop an address by a Workers Party member which was scheduled to be given before the Peoples' Forum, in the city park. He got the following letter from W. E. Carpenter, in charge of the meeting:

Capt. Clarence E. Webb, Chief of Police, Santa Monica, Calif.

Dear Sir:—In compliance with your commands, given on your visit to my apartment, Aug. 31, I informed Mr. Schneiderman, that you forbid him to address "People's Forum," for the reasons, according to your statements:

First, That a committee, representing over thirty persons, gathered in the city park, at 7th and California Sts., informed you, that a sign printed with red paint, was posted there on the sign board for announcing meetings, said sign reading, "What the Communists Want, by a Communist."

Second, You thot it out of place, that red paint should be used, in printing the sign, therefore had removed the sign amid great cheers, and sign was then in your car.

Third, That Pasadena would not allow a Communist to speak, and Santa Monica must do the same.

Fourth, The committee was so wrought up that they had threatened rough treatment to the speaker, with injury to limb and danger to life, if stated speech were attempted. Therefore you forbid the speach to be made. This even after I had informed you that the "People's Forum" had invited the speaker to address them.

On Sunday, Aug. 5, date of meeting, about 75 elderly persons, including some capitalists, retired business men and representatives from your office left in the city park. The chairman inquired of me regarding the non-appearance of the speaker.

I explained regarding your visit, but was unable to explain what had happened to the committee, that had threatened mob rule with injury or possible loss of life as its aim, and have not even any account of arrest of such committee.

After being informed of your ukase, the meeting voted unanimously to have the speaker appear, and give the free speech address.

As I noticed a flying squadron of American Legion in the offing, I knew they would protect an American citizen in his right which includes free speech. So I notified Mr. Schneiderman, who addressed a meeting lasting two hours, and a very peaceable meeting it was.

As you stated you knew nothing about Communism, I can recommend very highly, a book I have just finished reading. It was written by two men, who have had the extreme honor of assisting in the administration of a Communist government, of over 150 millions of peoples, in a country covering one-sixth of the earth's surface, therefore knew of what they write.

Communism is fast gaining ground in the United States, and you will hear more of it in the future.

This book can be obtained at The Workers (Communist) Party, 322 W. 2nd St., Los Angeles, Cal. Its title is "The A. B. C. of Communism."

Los Angeles Press Picnic Attracts Rebels for Oct. 12

All this at the International Press picnic.

All rebels are asked to arrange their outings for the above date no matter whether they live in New York or California. It is the International Press picnic.

Youth Meeting Rebuilds League

GARY, Ind.—A fairly well attended International Youth Day meeting was held here on Friday, at the Workers' Hall. Speeches were given by the local Workers Party organizer, Comrade Borisoff, by Comrade Paul Bacha Hammond's leading pioneer, (many other Hammond Pioneers were present) and by a Young Workers League comrade from Chicago. In addition to the speaking there were recitations by Comrades Ropar and Conovic. Refreshments were served and a collection of $13 was made for the Young Worker and the Young Comrade.

Comrades of the formerly strong Young Workers League branch, which had existed in Gary when were present, were quite encouraged by the meeting and arranged to get together on the following Sunday to discuss plans for putting Gary back on the map of organized Young Workers League territory.

ALL LABOR CAN HELP THE MINE STRIKERS WIN

I. W. A. Points Way For Unorganized to Aid

The following message received by the International Workers' Aid of America from its sister organization in England is of the utmost importance and should be heeded by all workers. The message in substance reads:

Unless the millions of workers and friends of labor will come to the immediate assistance of the British miners' children, wholesale deaths by starvation will be unavoidable.

Government Starves Children.

School meals heretofore granted once a day to the miners' children have been withdrawn by the authorities, thus robbing the children of the last governmental support.

To counteract this abominable deed we are arranging to distribute 100,000 food packages in the mining districts every week. Each package costs 50 cents and will feed two children. How many friends and workers can you rally in support of preventing actual starvation?

Who Will Give?

The American I. W. A. is conducting a nation-wide campaign in cooperation with its English sister organization, and appeals to all workers and friends to give substantial aid by contributing from $1 to $10 a week.

The American Federation of Labor is supporting the British miners thru their affiliated unions. There are, however, some 20,000,000 workers outside of the American labor movement who also owe a duty to the miners' struggle in England.

These workers are called upon to forward their donations to the I. W. A. locals in the different cities or to the national office of the International Workers' Aid of America at 1553 West Madison street, Chicago, Illinois.

THE Moros are almost certain to enjoy the "protection" of the United States for many years to come, thanks to the possibilities of raising rubber in their native land. They are supposed to be heathens and there are 400,000 of them in the Philippine Islands. The Moros seemed to be getting along tolerably well with the Christian Filipinos until our christian rubber hunters became interested in their salvation. Now our elastic missionaries intend to protect them from the christian Filipinos, for they should lose their immortal souls.

COLONEL HOUSE has again broke into print with the charge that the United States is to blame for France's financial predicament because the senate did not keep the obligations made by Woodrow Wilson in 1919. The blood-sucking capitalists of France and the United States are responsible for France's financial ills, as they, in conjunction with the financial pirates of other countries were responsible for the world war which murdered over 7,000,000 men and crippled three times that many. The dumb House has nothing to say about the 75,000 Americans who were killed in the war because of Wilson's desire to defend the interests of the House of Morgan.

PARLEY PARKER CHRISTIANSEN, who is about to open his batteries on political corruption, finds such issues as prohibition and the world court unworthy of his campaign oratory. His slogan will be "a return to honesty and economy in public life." This is a man's job, Parley is no Lilliputian physically, but he will have to do better than this unless he wants to create the impression that his third-party trip around the world reduced his thinking apparatus to impotancy.

THERE is only one character in human history who made a success as a personal savior, and he is a myth. Furthermore, he was crucified for his pains. In all probability this Jesus of Nazareth was a trade union agitator if he ever existed. Preaching purity to capitalist politicians is about as futile as advocating limitation of offspring in a rabbit burrow. It is very doubtful if anybody except the type that is stupid enough to join the ku klux klan will take such a program seriously. And purity sharks are under heavy suspicion today.

WITH THE YOUNG WORKERS

CONDUCTED BY THE YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE

Wages of Mail Order House Youth Is "Dirty Shame," Says Manager

Dear Sir:

In regards to your pamphlet for the young workers—it is a wonderful thing and a great help to the workers of today. I am a department manager in a mail order house here in Chicago and have charge of 28 man under me and it is a dirty shame—tho low wages that are paid to the young workers and upon which they are forced to live. The labor men earn $23 per week and the girls earn $10 to $15 per week, while the young men earn $15 to $17 per week for their labor.

But it is not my fault on the wage question. I really feel sorry for them, most of them are married and their wives are also working in order to live. That is the reason why so much goods are stolen in our place on account of measly low wages. A great lawyer stated that low wages and unsanitary working conditions and unemployment are the cause of seven-eights of our crime and vice—divorces, murders and corruption in our country. The rich man is the fault on account of low wages and other conditions that he hands out.

Thera ought to be a law against such greed, as is shown by tha rich tha so-called Americans as they are ero. Something should be done for the working class fer a better living in this life. There was 7 or 8 managers who talked very well about the Young Workers League and we hope you people would spread more propaganda to tha workers. It is a great help and the best I ever come across in 38 years in the slava field. I hope you get to all the mail order houses and factories and department stores with your propaganda to the working class. It is slow, but the time will come. The people want a change nowadays from the old rutten political machine to something good for the workers.

I will close with the best of luck and success and keep up tha good work for the future generations and humanity.

Signed,

P. S. Some of our men are going to join the Young Workers League.

A SHORT STORY RAH, RAH BOYS OF COLLEGE LIFE

(SECOND INSTALLMENT.)

BUT Mike didn't think of that. Mike had never really thought of the college as a place where one went to learn the sciences—or at least he hadn't thought of that for many, many years.

Heaven and the great vine-covered buildings held equal fascination and charm for him. They both seemed so far, so unreachable. The heavy gates of the college seemed to guard some precious supernatural life. The figures that sauntered back and forth thru the gates were like young gods. Those swagger he had tried to imitate as a youngster, whose dress he had copied in a cheap coarse way when adolescent. The sight of one of these creatures, new and young and fresh each year, like gods that never grow old, even now stirred him with speak less awe. Even the annual return of the old graduates, years adding to the gray on their temples, did not quite break the charm of everlasting youth, for gray as they may become they never seemed to get old, youth bloomed on their sheeks and sparkled in their eyes.

He always watched for the class of '81. That was the class he would have graduated from had he gotten past his fourth winter at school and had he been one of those born lucky enough to be entitled to such an honor.

There they came! He recognized the faces. He missed some of them and wondered where they were. Death in relation to these gods never occurred to him. His mother had washed the face of that fatal boy. Mike sighed. A youth in a mechanics' jumper turned to him.

"How long have you lived here, Dad?"

"All my life; was born here," Mike answered proudly.

"Then you must have known some of these boys in the old days, eh!"

Mike put back his narrow shoulders as far as his crooked back would let him and answered, pride in his eyes. "If I had gone to college I'd have been in the class of '81."

The young mechanic looked at the shrunken old figure, bloodless and gray besides him, and then at the young old faces that were passing in the special cars for the class of '81.

"Why didn't you go to college?"

Mike croaked a little laugh. "Me go to college? My father died when I was three and my ma took in washing for the college students until she died.' I come from the common people, what would I have done with college?" Then he added almost defiantly: "Used to shine their boots sometimes, tho!"

The promenade was over. The blue serge hacks were lost in the mass of traffic that followed, the blare of the brass bands was dying out in the distance.

Got to get to work," Mike mumbled and ambled off down the street to his dump cart and broom, groaning a little as his twisted bones moved.

A mother shooed her brood of undernourished, ill-clothed youngsters toward home. Probably she, too, washed for college boys and her little sons shined their shoes. Probably her little sons, too, dreamed of the inside of the college walls and the young gods that lived there most of the year, and probably those little bodies would one day be crippled with age and toil and drained of their youth blood and would drag after a street cleaner's cart.

British Youth to Visit Soviet Union

LONDON, England — Among the many lessons which the Workers have learned from the general strike is the need for the organization of young workers.

The young worker must, like his elder brother, be made to realize his class position, and be made to take his stand in the ranks of the workers.

In an interview, E. Starkey Jackson, a member of the London Advisory Committee of the Labor League of Youth, told that a youth delegation is being sent to Soviet Russia to study the conditions of young workers in that country.

Young Girls Hold Crowd in Open Air

A steady crowd of 200 people gathered around tha speakers' stand at the open air meeting of Section Six of the Chicago League, held at Division and Washtenaw. A unique feature of the meeting was that all of the oratory was handed out by girl comrades, namely Minnie Lurie and Clara Shapiro. The crowd seamed to take kindly to what they were saying. Comrade Lurie's talk, especially, going across big.

Early Struggles in Great Britain

By JOHN HAMILTON

In "The Cooperative Movement."

THE chief obstacles to the success of the co-operative movement were the hostility of shop-keepers and wholesalers, the lack of education, unbusiness-like methods, and the absence of legal protection. Fraud by officials and store-keepers was fairly common, altho the general honesty of those entrusted with responsible administrative positions in the workers' movements has been very marked considering the temptations of the average worker's life. Holyoake tells us that "some of the stores appear to have been troubled by the disappearance of cheese in larger proportion than the sales accounted for, and announcement was made of the formation of a mouse-trap committee.

The most serious difficulty was the law. Before 1852 the legal disabilities were: (a) every co-operative society was considered a partnership, and every member was responsible for the total liabilities of the society; (b) if it had more than 25 members it had no legal existence at all; hence (c) it had no means of defense against embezzlement or robbery, and no power to enforce rules. As the law stood, an action could not be taken at common law by a partner suing his co-partner for breach of agreement or fraud. The only proceedings that could be adopted was by filing a bill in equity against his partner in the court of chancery. This was an expensive business, the cost of filing the bill alone being 60£, hence the practical impossibility, to those days of scanty capital, of taking any proceedings against a fraudulent member. It was better to grin and bear losses than to risk all the savings disappearing in a chancery suit.

Luckily for the co-operative movement, an influential group of sympathizers—the Christian Socialists—placed their legal knowledge at its disposal. Help was also given and the cause championed in the house of commons by J. S. Mill (the economist), Thomas Hughes and Walter Morrison (which championship resulted later in the loss of their seats by the hostile votes of shop-keepers).

Eventually parliament granted legal recognition.

The Industrial and Provident Societies' Acts.

The industrial and provident societies act of 1852 gave to workers' cooperative societies legal sanction, protection against dishonest officials, and power to enforce rules. An act, however, of 1855 made expenditure on education out of society funds illegal. Originally the Rochdale Pioneers had devoted 2½ per cent of their net profits for educational purposes, and this prohibition gave a check to educational work. It was removed by 1862, which also limited the liability of members of a co-operative society to the amount of shares held. But the mischief had been done, and as regards education "societies got out of the way of thinking it an essential matter."

J. M. Ludlow (later chief registrar of industrial and provident societies) drafted the act of 1852. Assistance was also given by Vansittart Neale (in after years secretary of the Co-operative Union), who drafted model rules, acted as legal adviser, and wrote the first Handbook for Co-operators.

The public libraries acts were passed in 1850 and 1855; the newspaper duty was finally abolished in the latter year. These were important measures to men who realized the necessity of education in the co-operative movement—the type of men who had previously to pay 7d. for such newspapers as Feargus O'Connor's Northern Star.

Reform Movements.

Another significant event of this reform period was the founding of the Working Men's College, in London, in 1854, by Frederick Maurice. The animating motive of this experiment in adult education was to harmonize the radical antagonism between capital and labor. Maurice, in common with all the Christian socialists, made a general appeal on the broad basis of Christianity for a more endurable existence for the workers. "Social reform was the new line along which the ruling class was compelled to proceed if it would save itself from the consequences of rebellion."

In this atmosphere the movement made steady progress, altho in the most important seat of co-operation, Lancashire, the cotton famine of the sixties was a severe testing time. The storm was weathered successfully. Parliamentary returns of the movement were made by the registrar for the first time in 1862, and the following estimated figures give us an idea of the progress made in about twenty years:

Number of societies, 450.
Number of members, 90,000.
Share and loan capital, £450,000.
Annual sales, £2,250,000.
Profits, £166,000.

The Manchester Equitable Society started the Co-operator in 1860. After various vicissitudes, and the final merging into the Anti-Vaccinator, it went ont of existence in 1871. A deficit due by the editor to the printers was paid by the English Wholesale Society. The Scottish Co-operator published monthly at a half-penny, was launched in 1863, and ceased to exist in 1871.

These years also saw a revival of co-operative conferences, both in the north and south.

Russian Co-Operatives Raise Relief Fund for British Mine Strikers

MOSCOW, Aug. 23 (By Mail).—The co-operative section of the commtern strongly condemns the treachery of the International Co-operative Alliance which has rejected a proposal to organize an international campaign of assistance for the British miners and calls upon all members of the co-operatives and upon all co-operatives to institute collections, to contribute a part of the dividends to the strike funds and to organize associations for the purpose of making purchases in bulk for the miners.

The central union of Russian Cooperatives has sent a further sum of 30,000 rubles to the British miners. Together with the previously despatched sums, this makes a total of 116,000 rubles from the Russian cooperatives.

Progress of the Central Co-operative Exchange in 1925

By GEORGE HALONEN.

This Year Book contains a good deal of figures and statistics about the Co-operative Central Exchange. The figures as such do not have any life, but when you discover the incessant care and self-sacrificing industry by which the result was obtained the dull story bestirs to live.

An increase of the sales from $612,214.64 to $835,532.37 did not speak by itself, and not only thru sound commercial practice, but thru hard work thruout the line. Many faint-hearted members had to be converted to understand co-operative centralization, many store managers had to be saved from the flattery and deception exercised by private salesmen, and we must admit that the number of loyal store managers has been increased and that they did the pioneering work among the masses with enthusiasm and sacrifice. If we could present figures to show how many times our co-operative store managers and clerks have been compelled to explain the elementary truth of centralized co-operation the figures would run high.

The work done thruout the line has brought results which show that the co-operative wholesale has come to stay and that its future is assured. To think, that in 1917 only 35 societies were affiliated with the exchange and the sales were only $35,572.62, while at the end of 1925 there were 96 societies affiliated, buying from us during the wholesale $835,532.37 worth of goods.

Co-operation Saves Expenses.

The average expenses of the co-operative stores affiliated with the Co-operative Central Exchange were 12.16 per cent of nat sales in 1925. The corresponding figure of the private stores is about 18 per cent. And the net profit of the co-operatives will benefit those to whom it justly belongs and not the private merchant.

The Co-operative Central Exchange itself tells the same story. Last year our gross profit for the jobbing and wholesale departments was 7.31 per cent, and the expenses were 6.26 per cent. The corresponding figures of privately owned wholesalers of the same size were 11.5 per cent and 11 per cent.

So it does not pay the gib-tongued salesman of private merchants to boast of their "cheaper" goods. According to these figures their quality, not their price, is cheaper.

Educational Activities.

But the commercial end is not the whole purpose of the local co-operatives or their centralized wholesale. Bearing this in mind, the Co-operative Central Exchange has been helping local societies to conduct educational work among the masses.

During last year the exchange issued 76,000 leaflets or seven different subjects. About 8,000 circulars, dealing with educational questions, were mailed to the educational committees. employes and boards of directors of the societies. Speakers and lecturers were furnished to about half a hundred localities. A mimeographed bulletin, "The Cyrenian Builder," was sent to the employes of the co-operatives. (At present the "Pyramid Builder" has been changed to a monthly co-operative magazine.)

The main task in the educational work has been to connect the isolated co-operatives with each other for common purposes, and to make the masses understand that the co-operative movement is a working class movement and thereby a part of the general labor movement.

The Future is Promising.

To judge from the results achieved during the last year, the future, indeed, is promising. About 20,000 members of the co-operative societies are becoming more and more convinced that the co-operative activity is not limited to their narrow localities. The commercial as well as the educational achievements are a proof that the masses of workers and farmers are working their way to a new and better future, determined that a new society must be built to replace the profit system.—The Northern States Co-op. ## SOVIET POSTERS ON DISPLAY IN DOWN TOWN BANK

An interesting display of Russian bank posters is to be seen at the State Bank of Chicago, Washington and La Salle streets. They are posters obviously intended to reach the peasants and are well drawn lithographs in three or four colors. The exhibition faces La Salle street and is attracting much attention from passers-by.

The captions are translated from the Russian which is inscribed on each poster. One reads, "Mustyk, show the savings book to her fellows and says to Sashka with a happy smile—now I can have my own way. I am as free as a bird in the sky."

Taxes on Time.

A peasant stands before a bank teller's window and says, "I'll solve the financial problem in a minute, I'll bring in money to the savings bank—and let the interest grow and I'll pay my taxes on time without any delay because I'll have ready money in the bank."

The object of the posters is plainly to arouse the interest of the peasants in the state banks for two purposes: to assist in the struggle in Russia, thus aiding in the circulation of money and the expansion of credit; and to educate the peasants to the necessity of dealing with modern financial institutions.

"How Convenient."

A third poster reads, "And how exceedingly convenient. Ivan sends money from Kazan to Moscow without any trouble," while a fourth, showing a peasant standing beside and attempting in vain to peer with in a huge safe, reads, "My neighbor will never know how much money I have in the bank—that is kept a secret"—a sort of first lesson in the

POPULATION OF SOVIET UNION IS INCREASING

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 12.—The population of the Soviet Union now exceeds that of 1913 in the same territory, according to official figures of the state planning commission of the U.S.S.R. received by the Russian Information Bureau. The present population is estimated at 141,400,000. A year ago it was 138,781,000 and under the census of 1920 it was 131,000,000. Before the war it was 140,000,000.

The gain in population is attributed largely to the steady reduction of the death rate, particularly in regard to epidemic diseases. The death rate from typhoid is now a little over one-third the pre-war rate and from smallpox one-fourth.

Million in Industry.

Of the present population 72,410,000 persons are classed as gainfully employed. These include 58,646,000 persons engaged in agriculture and 7,000,000 employed in industries, transport and construction. The number of persons classed as living on independent incomes in the Soviet Union is estimated at 90,000. The number of unemployed in the settlements is 1,200,000. The total urban population is 24,760,400 and rural 117,049,600.

DON'T LIKE THE COMMUNISTS BUT ADMIT PROGRESS

Even Capitalists Tell of Workers' Advance

CLEVELAND, O., Sept. 12.—Fred J. Ramsey, president of the Cleveland Y. M. C. A., and D. D. Kimmel, president of the Midland Bank of this city, have just returned from separate trips to Soviet Russia. Altho unable to understand the dictatorship—and of course opposed to it—their flattering statements about what is being done in Soviet Russia.

"A mammoth program of education is under way. Universal education of children is being brought about and tens of thousands of adults are being taught," said Ramsey. "The Soviet hopes to increase literacy from 30 per cent of the population to 50 per cent within ten years.

"Women Equal in Industry.

"Women in industry are given equal rights and pay with men. An expectant mother is given two months' vacation with pay and free transportation to one of the many national rest camps. These are generally at a health resort in the country estate formerly belonging to some rich nobleman or bourgeoisie."

"Communist for Keeps."

Mrs. Ramsey, who flew to Moscow from Berlin, states that representatives of American, British and German concerns are even more enthusiastic over the future than the Russian leaders with whom I talked. That view is that Russia is Communist for keeps, but that its Communism will develop along lines with which the rest of the world will not continue to quarrel." Mr. Kimmel admits that conditions in Russia are greatly improved over 1920.

Mr. Ramsey favors recognition of Soviet Russia by the United States. "It can do no possible harm to America," he says.

NEW PAPER IS OUT TO EDUCATE RUBBER SLAVES

"Rubber Worker" Appears in Akron Mills

AKRON, O., Sept. 12.—With a streamer line that says "Rubber Workers Are Underpaid," a four-page paper has put in its appearance in the rubber plants of this rubber center of the world. It is called the "Rubber Worker." It is the vehicle of a group of rubber workers who want to see the industry organized.

Facts and Figures.

The main article gives facts and figures to prove that the workers in the Akron plants are very much underpaid and overworked and also gives an idea of what melons the owners of the industry cut each year.

There are news items of struggles being fought by workers elsewhere, notably in Passaic, where the situation prior to the strike that organized 15,000 workers was very similar to the unorganized condition of the main industry here.

Nucleus of Union.

A long editorial reviews the problems of the rubber worker and defends the means of creating a strong organization to put forth his collective demands. A nucleus of a rubber workers' union has been formed and recently staged a well-attended picnic at which one of the speakers was Albert F. Coyle, editor of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers' Journal.

The paper doesn't overlook the importance of the Philippine situation as it affects the interests of the rubber industry, and on the whole promises to become a really representative organ in the battle of the rubber workers for organization and recognition.

20 Lynchings Reported This Year; More Than in 1925, Says N. A. A. C. P.

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—Lynchings for the first eight months of 1926 exceed the total for the entire year of 1925, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People announces. There have been 20 lynchings up to September, 1926, while 18 were recorded for the whole of 1925. Two white men are among those lynched in 1926. Florida leads with this year with five lynchings, Mississippi following with four.

Responsibility for the increase in lynchings is placed squarely on the United States senate by the N. A. A. C. P. "While there was the hope and the threat that Dyer anti-lynching bill would be passed," says the organization, "lynchings sharply declined. Now that the senate, by its indifference and hostility to this legislation, has again indefinitely postponed any hope of enactment of a federal anti-lynching law, the lynchers have again become emboldened."

5,000 MONTANA FARMERS ENTER BIG WHEAT POOL

With Canada and Dakota for Co-operative Sales

By M. HELENDER,
Worker Correspondent.

PLENTYWOOD, Mont., Sept. 12.—Sunday, September 5, the special committee appointed by the Council of Action of the Western Progressive Farmers of Montana gave their report of the investigation of the North Dakota wheat pool.

The members of the committee, Art Wenkel, secretary of the Council of Action of the wheat pool; Eng. Torstensen, treasurer of Sheriden county, and Chas. E. Taylor, senator of Montana, gave a very favorable report of the pool, and recommended that the Western Progressive Farmers, an organization of about 5,000 members, join.

Withdraw From Agency.

In their investigations in Minneapolis they heard criticism both favorable and unfavorable regarding the North Dakota Wheat Growers' Association, but all seemed in favor of a pool of some sort or another.

The American Sales Agency, with whom the North Dakota association was once connected, objected to the way in which Mr. Duis, the manager of the North Dakota association, has had this pool withdraw from the sales agency, thus forming another co-operative, of a similar sort. Mr. Duis, in reply, stated that remaining in the sales agency would have meant absolute ruin for North Dakota.

Farmers Favor Pool.

The North Dakota farmers all seemed highly in favor of the pool, and even those who were holding their wheat for future peak prices, claimed that the pool was the thing. Mr. Taylor, in questioning one of these farmers about the pool, stated:

"We are on a committee representing a body of farmers' elevators, and our report may have some weight. Would you, after your experience with the North Dakota Wheat Growers' Association, and in your position, advise those farmers to join the N. D. W. G. A.?" He was answered: "I surely would."

Canadians Advise It.

In Canada the wheat pool was highly in favor of the organization of a large similar institution in the States. The representative officers at Winnipeg recommend that the Montana growers join with the North Dakota pool, for, they said, since the latter has been set up Canadian farmers have been receiving good prices for their wheat.

Canada and the States are both in the same world market as far as wheat is concerned. It would not pay for the States to be unorganized with conditions as they are. The wheat growers of Montana would be wise in joining such an efficient organization as the North Dakota pool.

After a careful investigation, the committee found that the N.D.W.G.A. are loyal and consistent co-operators, that the association is well managed, that the association is well financed, that it has the apparatus to handle the wheat of this section, that it has a good sales agency in Minneapolis and Duluth, that it has run for four years and has a surplus of $250,000, that it has met its obligations and made its settlements promptly, that its membership is increasing and that it now has 18,000 members, that the old members are loyal, satisfied and are rejoining, that the chances for its future success seem to be very bright.

The committee believes that its members can make no mistake in joining the North Dakota Wheat Growers' Association, and recommends to the Council of Action that that body so recommend to the members of the Progressive Farmers of Montana.

The report of the committee was favorably commented upon by the members who were at the mass meeting in Plentywood, and accepted in full.

The joining of the Montana Western Progressive Farmers into the pool will mean that over 3,000 farmers of the state will pool their wheat this year instead of sending it into the hands of private wheat speculators.

FASCIST CREED SUMMARIZED IN SYMBOLS OF A ROSARY, A WINE GLASS AND CUTLASS ON BOOKLET

WASHINGTON, Sept. 12.—(FP)—More anti-fascist material for William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, who has pledged his organization to help "drive fascism off the face of the earth," has been published in the capital. This is a series of extracts from a booklet entitled "The Vade-mecum of Perfect Fascist.." It appears in the current issue of the Advocate of Peace, organ of the American Peace Society which is subsidized by the Carnegie Endowment.

Ten Fascist Commandments.

"Written by a certain Signor Longanesi and dedicated to several prominent fascist leaders," says the article, "this little book consists of 10 axioms and 87 maxims. Memorise these axioms and maxims and act in accordance with their precepts and you will be welcomed in the fascist ranks.

At least so the author of the book assures us.

"The axioms and maxims are divided into three principal series: patriotism, morality and religion, and war.

God and Mussolini.

"Here are some of the striking maxims on patriotism:

16. Civilization is non-existent for you; Italianism is existent.

19. At the theater hiss whatever offends God, the family, the fatherland or the army.

30. If foreigners praise Goethe, you think of Dante.

69. In Italy you are allowed to say and do in other countries, but when abroad you must uphold and eulogize even its most notorious filthiness.

60. Failing all other arguments, say "Italy is such a poor country."

"Some of the precepts on morality and religione are:

Do What Love Making You Please.

Maxim 31. Love your father and mother. Do what love-making you please. Try to produce children with a woman of your own race.

70. The only morality is religious. You are a Catholic and don't forget it.

"One man, we are assured in Maxim 84 that—For the fascist the recent war was not the last but the first great war.

"Axiom 3 reads: Your bayonet and rifle are given you not to lie and rust, but with a view to the next war.

Your Bludgeon is Great Stuff.

"Maxim 76. Hide your hindmost when you go to the crannary or in a box. But believe me it's a great thing.

"At the very end of the book there is the admonition: You have a leader, Mussolini. There is only one Mussolini.

Rosary, Wine-Glass and Sword.

The magazine comments that "Here, indeed, is a religion where the same earmerks as wrapse Mohammedanism in its prime. One wonders if Signor Mussolini has read and approved this epitome of the rules of the religion of which he is the sole prophet. The fascist cecssorship has apparently read and approved of it, for the book is on sale in every part of Italy. Its bright cover, adorned—strangely enuf—with a rosary, a wine-glass and a cutlass, is very much in evidence in the windows and stalls of booksellers all over Mussolini's realm."

SOVIET UNION BUYS THE BEST SHEEP AT SALE

Credit Would Insure Still More Trade

SALT LAKE CITY, Sept. 12.—Michel S. Pereferkovitch, of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, sheep buying commissioner now here looking over the blooded stock at the ram show, addressed the chamber of commerce and the Rambouillet Association during a banquet given in honor of the foreign buyers.

Commissioner Pereferkovitch explained that his duty was to secure in America such stock as would improve the herds of the Russian peasants. He pointed out that it is part of the comprehensive plan of the Soviet government to build up the breeds of domestic animals in the Soviet Union to help the peasant peasants and thus eliminate any shortage of products.

Borrow to Give Credit.

J. W. Pincus of the American Russian Trading Corporation (Amtorg) offices in New York, accompanied the mission and also spoke on relations between the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics and the rest of the world. He gave as a reason for the great purchases of goods in Germany rather than in U. S. by the Soviet government trade monopoly that the German manufacturers were shrewd enough to see that they got this valuable trade, even tho they had to make some sacrifices to do so. "Germany," he said, "is borrowing money in Wall Street in order that they may underbid American manufacturers for the Russian market."

Western Banks to Act.

Pincus urged that western bankers devise some means for extending credit to the Soviet Union commission for the purchase of sheep. The chamber of commerce, it was announced after his speech, is seriously considering his suggestion.

Towards the end of the sale, during which prices were rather tight, the Soviet sheep buyers got in and purchased several pens of fine stock at prices considered reasonable by experts. One pen of extraordinary fine Rambouillet rams, was bought by the commission at the highest price paid in the sale, $95 an animal.

League of Capitalist Nations Seats Germany; Discusses U. S. Secretly

GENEVA, Sept. 12.—Germany was yesterday unanimously elected a member of the league council and given a permanent seat on the league's council. German delegates are on the way to take seats. American tourists are being turned out of hotels to make room for the Germans.

Other developments of the day were the rumored note from Spain withdrawing from membership because of the denial of Tangier as a "mandate" for Spain, and the discussion of the U. S. reservations in the world court, which is clearly bound up with the league.

Survey Over U. S. Reservation.

The committee of fourteen, to which the world court conference referred the question of United States reservations, is holding secret sessions on the subject of the fifth U. S. reservation, which prohibits the court from entertaining without American consent, any requests for advisory opinions on questions in which the United States has or claims an interest.

In the league assembly, the Netherlands and Norway made some opposition, but were squelched by the big powers, over the question of permanent and non-permanent seats.

Maharajah Sips.

One other jarring note was sounded by the Maharajah of Kapurthala, one of the world's richest men, who seemed to forget for a moment that he wore British harness as the chief Indian delegate, when he said:

"Indians are awakening to the spirit of nationalism, and hope in the not far distant future to become a united nation like our sister dominions, Canada, Australia, and South Africa."

Kansas Deputy Killed.

SEDAN, Kans., Sept. 12.—A deputy sheriff was killed at Falls City, near Cedarvale, today by two bandits who earlier in the day had shot and wounded two persons at Waunita, Kan., where they had robbed two stores. The dead officer is Harold Casebolt of Sedan.

Mussolini Believes in Preparedness

That Mussolini expects some good shooting this coming winter is indicated by his intention to introduce a new penal code which will hand a life sentence to anybody attempting to assassinate the king or premier. For a successful attempt we have an idea the patriot will be given a prize.

Having nothing else left to abolish, Benito is now furrowing his glorious brow over the prospect of getting rid of parliament, which has been deceased in substance for a long time. But Benito hates to see a stinking corpse lying around and he is preparing to call in his scavengers.

Taking all this in connection with the news that the pope has installed punch clocks in his big joss house, so that his attendants will not be tempted to spend too much time playing with their spaghetti—since the longer hours regulation went into force—and it can be plainly seen that life in Italy is exciting.

Berger's Dyke Weakened

When Victor Berger allowed his bailiwick to be amalgamated with the LaFollette movement in 1924 he let the progressive water run into his socialist milk, which was watery enough as it was.

"This is the admission made in a front page editorial in Berger's own Milwaukee Leader of Sept. 10, in the following words:

"No matter what the socialist leaders may do or say—they never have been able to keep their voters and sympathizers from helping out our LaFollette friends in the primaries. Now less so than ever—since party lines have been weakened, and the fences separating them lowered thru Robert M. LaFollette running for office in the third pary ticket in 1924."

The cause of this confession is Governor Blaine's heavy vote in the socialist stronghold of Milwaukee despite Berger's public statement that Lenroot, Coolidge's leader in the world court fight was a better public servant than Blaine.

Seven Months of Fighting

After seven months of battling against the brutal mill owners and the mill-controlled police, the 16,000 striking textile workers of Passaic and vicinity are still struggling bravely on against wage cuts, starvation wages, company unionism and for the right to have a real union of their own.

With the admittance of the strikers into the United Textile Workers of America, the mill bosses have been shown up for the hypocrites and liars they are. Before affiliation with the A. F. of L., the bosses assiduously tried to create the impression in the public mind that their refusal to deal with their striking workers was based solely upon the alleged Communist leadership of the strike. Their refusal now to deal with the A. F. of L. union which has taken over the strike, gives the lie to the mill barons and shows them up for the anti-labor and anti-union despots that they are.

So the struggle still goes on. For better conditions in the mills, for a living wage, for the workers' right to collective bargaining and a real union of their own. It is a struggle that must enlist the continued support of every worker. The Passaic strike is a battle against all bosses who exploit unorganized labor. It is a fight to protect the wage standards of organized labor.

Relief should be rushed at once to Passaic. The arrogant mill bosses must be made to understand that labor stands solidly behind the strikers and against the bosses' attempts to starve them back to work in surrender. Strike relief has so far defeated the bosses. Strike relief will win the struggle for the workers.

How to Help the Miners' Relief

The need for furnishing relief to the British coal miners, their wives and children, to prevent their actual starvation and consequent surrender to the lords and earls who live in luxury from coal royalties, is a need that ought to be self-evident to every worker, that should and must be at the present, a first charge against his income.

While the organized labor movement has its channel thru which it can and must send every penny possible, the unorganized, which vastly outnumber the organized, and those generally who sympathize with the British miners but who have no particular organizational connection which can act for them, often think they have no opportunity to discharge their duty toward the aid of our British fellow workers.

We wish to point out that for all such workers and working-class sympathizers, there exists an organization exactly suited to their situation. The unorganized workers and sympathizers particularly, who wish to help the British miners, can do excellent work thru the International Workers' Aid, the national office of which is at 1553 West Madison street, Chicago.

This organization has been built up just to serve the workers in all such distressful periods. It was not formed just for the British strike, but maintains a permanent organization to assist in all similar emergencies, emergencies which are always arising and for which some hastily constructed organs of relief have to be set up by labor.

It does not mean to take the place of these temporary committees of relief, but to furnish an added support by its permanent organization, which is always ready to step into the field as it did to the best of its ability in the horrible holocaust in the Southern Illinois coal fields last year. Such an organization is most valuable, particularly in organizing the assistance among sympathetic elements and unorganized workers.

These elements have a duty to perform in the British strike situation. They can not only send their donations to the International Workers' Aid, but they can and should work with it as a part of it, collecting funds and sending the proceeds thru the I. W. A.—and as quickly as possible, in order that our British brothers in the coal fields, their heroic women and little children are not starved into surrender to their baronial exploiters.

WILL LABOR BREAK WITH SAM INSULL?

Streator Convention to Test Officials

any demands made for improved conditions of the workers employed by his corporation, supplies thousands of dollars to run over Frank L. Smith for United States senator in the republican primaries. He also donates money to the democratic primaries to be on the safe side.

Other utility magnates donated money to the Smith campaign. Frank L. Smith is chairman of the Illinois commerce commission and the slush fund investigation brought out the additional fact that these utility corporations had applications pending before the commerce commission before it to transfer rates and other benefits sought for their corporations.

Open Shop Crowe Machine.

The Crowe-Barrett political machine, headed by State's Attorney Crowe, who has attempted to break strikes, who put trade unionists thru third degree methods and tried to smash the unions, supports Frank L. Smith, the Insull candidate. The Chicago Tribune selected Smith as its candidate. The Illinois labor officials gave him official endorsement and put it over in a number of unions.

Whether or not this is deliberate, the political alliance has become extended and made complete. From Samuel Insull of the utility corporation thru the Illinois corrupt capitalist politicians to these officials of the trade unions.

Non-Partisan Sunk.

This is the inevitable result of the so-called non-partisan policy, its consequence in all cases has become one of complete partisanship to the candidates selected by the money powers of the capitalist tickets. These candidates pledge loyalty to none but capitalism, they carry out their wishes and naturally in any situation of conflict between capital and labor, they take their place unreservedly on the side of capital against labor.

One striking example has already been furnished in this instance. In the case of Frank L. Smith and the fare war hearing of the Chicago Street Railway Lines before the Illinois Commerce Commission. The result of this hearing has been printed in an official statement issued by the Chicago Street Carmen's Union, from which we quote in part:

Smith Plainly Anti-Union.

"During the extended fare rate hearing affecting the surface railway lines of Chicago before the Illinois Commerce Commission in 1921 and 1922, a hearing was prompted solely by political motives costing many thousands of dollars of the tax payers' money, Frank L. Smith, as chairman of the commission, by his attitude assisted in every way the political representatives that were demanding a reduction of street car fares by reducing the wages of the employes, increasing their hours of labor and disrupting the conditions they had established thru their union after a struggle for many years.

"The whole burden of this demand for fare reduction was placed upon the employes and their families, and thruout it all the attitude of Frank L. Smith was against the employes and with the political forces that were using the situation to perpetuate themselves in power."

Must Come Clean.

After this slush fund exposure, will the officials of the Illinois trade union movement who are responsible for the political alliance with capital, have the courage to repudiate their enforced candidate, to repudiate their alliance and at least on this point square themselves with the labor movement? This should be the important question before the state federation of labor convention now in session at Streator, Illinois.

The welfare of the trade unions is involved in this question. Their future existence as independent organizations of the workers at liberty to conduct their rightful struggles for better conditions of their members is at stake. If the officials do not repudiate their alliance, further developments will compel the rank and file members to take action.

For a United Labor Ticket.

Undoubtedly this present situation offers a splendid opportunity to the labor movement to give an appropriate reply to the corrupt capitalist politics, exposed at the slush fund hearings. A further alliance with politicians of the old parties and with their supporters, the big corporations, will not only increase corruption, but prevent the trade unions in their efforts to gain better conditions for the workers; and if carried to its logical consequence, even lead to the break-up of the unions.

The proper reply has been given by the progressive trade unionists in their demand that a united labor ticket be put up against the candidates of the big corporations. That reply should be carried into action.

Earthquake Recorded.

NEW YORK, Sept. 10.—An earthquake disturbance of four hours' duration was recorded on the seismograph of Fordham University today.

The Fight for the British Miners

servative government in Great Britain directly supports the employers.

"The latest reports concerning the mobilization of the police to protect the strikebreakers give a special corroboration of this fact. Some British trade union leaders still do not or will not grasp this fact, but every honest proletarian knows perfectly well that the conservative government is determined to crush the miners at all costs.

British Unions Themselves Laggard.

"The situation of the miners, which would in any case be difficult enough, is worsened by the lack of sufficient material support from the international proletariat and also from the leaders of the trade unions in Great Britain itself. This fact leads directly to starvation and to inhuman sufferings for the miners and their families.

"I believe that an estimation of the whole situation shows that the miners are now, as before isolated in their struggle, despite the fact that the leaders of the British trade union movement declare that they are supporting them.

"We Do Our Class Duty."

"All these things together must cause serious concern as the outcome of the struggle, amongst those who feel themselves bound with fraternal bonds to the heroic struggle of the British miners. We, the representatives of the Soviet labor unions, as well as the whole working class of the Soviet Union, are doing everything possible to assist the British miners. Up to the present the coppers of the workers of the Soviet Union have been collected and have resulted in a sum of approximately five million roubles being handed over to the Miners' Federation of Great Britain.

"We do not consider that as anything very special, deserving praise, for that was our simple class duty to our comrades in their struggle. We shall continue to do our duty in this respect even more persistently and energetically than before despite the treachery of the British bourgeoisie which it pours over our honest and fraternal attempts to assist the British miners in their struggle.

Must Have More Help.

"We are of the opinion that our assistance alone is extremely little and cannot make victory safe for the miners, and for this reason we suggested the calling of the Anglo-Russian committee for the sole purpose of placing the support action upon a broader basis. We wished to discuss the question of strengthening all possible means, material and moral, in order to obtain support in Great Britain, the Soviet Union and also upon an international scale.

"Unfortunately as has already been reported in the press, it was not possible for us to discuss these questions at the Paris session of the Anglo-Russian committee, which took place about a month ago.

"We have discussed these questions now at the session of the Anglo-Russian committee which has just ended in Berlin, in all their depth, and the result of this session is not the immediate support of the British miners, then we hope that every worker will know that this was not our fault. The entire delegation has reported to the central council of the Soviet labor unions I can give the press no details concerning the session, to say with all clearness and wish to stress the point, that the contention that the Soviet labor unions wished to dictate to the British trade unions is a malicious calumny.

"The British bourgeois press is doing its utmost to spread this calumny and to break the fraternal bonds between the British workers and the workers of the Soviet Union. Those people in the camp of the reformists who are dissatisfied with the existing relations between the British and Russian trade union movements are doing the same.

Went Unity.

"We have often declared and declare again now that all that the Soviet labor unions want is to give fraternal assistance and thus insure a joint struggle against the offensive of capitalism. We are led by no other desire than to see the establishment of real unity inside the trade union movement of the world.

Workers' Unity Must Not be Broken.

"We consider it to be our proletarian duty to the workers of the Soviet Union and of the whole world to give our opinions of the leadership of the British general strike openly, but we are convinced that the tactics of the leaders can only be determined by the British working class and by no one else.

"For this reason it is a wicked calumny to speak of an interference on the part of the Soviet Labor Unions in the affairs of the British trades union movement. We are firmly convinced that this calumny is the class enemies and of the opponents of international trade union unity will not succeed in breaking the fraternal bonds which bind the British and Russian labor movements.

Strike Stops Fines.

ADAMS, Mass.—(FP)—Abolition of the fining system against which workers were rebelling has been decided on by the Berkshire Cotton Mfg. Co. for two weeks, during which union representatives will investigate fining in other mills. The workers are members of the Polish Weavers Union, affiliated with the independent American Federation of Textile Operatives.

TO MAKE FIGHT FOR SACCO AND VANZETTI FREEDOM AT TANGIER MANDATE

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BOSTON, Sept. 12.—William G. Thompson, attorney for Sacco and Vanzetti, will appear before Judge Webster Thayer in superior court at Dedham, Massachusetts, Monday and ask favorable consideration for the contention that because of new evidence as the result of confessions implicating the actual slayers, the verdict of guilty pronounced upon them for the slaying that accompanied a payroll robbery in South Braintree, Mass., in 1922, be set aside.

In support of the confession made by Celestino Madeiro, himself convicted to death for another murder, the defense will present 61 affidavits that, it contends, removes the last vestige of doubt that Sacco and Vanzetti are innocent. In return, the district attorney will present 27 affidavits. It is expected that the hearing will be bitterly contested by both sides.

SPAIN OOZES HYPOCRISY IN LEAGUE NOTE

Disgruntled at Denial of Tangier Mandate

GENEVA, Switzerland, Sept. 12.—The official communication from Spain, notifying the league of nations of Spain's withdrawal from the league, was received by league officials yesterday. It is known that more than a permanent seat on the league council, Spain wanted a mandate for Tangier. The issue of the seat is played up, but Tangier is the basic reason.

The Spanish note abounds in polite phrases, complimenting the league on the seating of Germany—"which event Spain ardently hopes will be of great advantage to the league of nations." Also, Spain expresses the conviction that its withdrawal will not hurt the interests of the league, "whose prosperity is ardently desired by Spain." Additional diplomatic hypocrisy speaks of Spain's desire for peace, "which our country has hitherto so earnestly and effectively promoted."

The league hears that Turkey is to apply for membership in the league, not only upon the provision that it be given a seat in the council.

"Liberated" Provinces of Alsace-Lorraine in Appeal Against France

PARIS, Sept. 12.—Alsace and Lorraine, the two provinces holding a population of 1,600,000 which cost 4,000,000 French lives to "liberate" from the rule of the German kaiser, are on the point of revolution against their "liberators." They want to have autonomy within the French government, but not the present complete dictatorship of the French.

To attain this, the people of the provinces are thinking of appealing to the league of nations to get its assistance in relieving in some degree the strangling grip of their "liberators." As a beginning, they appeal to America, the home of the hokum about the self-determination of peoples put out by Woodrow Wilson.

In the words of Eugene Ricklin, leader of the movement, they appeal "To the great people of America, for freedom from the terrorist and dictatorship rule of France."

The Alsatians and Lorrelnians complain about the complete control of the French officials in all affairs and branches of government. Also the forcible introduction of the French language in all administrative departments, the re-introduction of the ancient code of Napoleon, and a succession of abuses and tyrannies which they did not have to suffer under the rule of Germany before the war brot them "liberation."

calls for more action on the part of the British armed forces in China with broad inferences that England must declare open warfare on the Canton government.

This is the opinion stated by the Morning Post, which adds:

Peking Government a Myth.

"We trade to live, and by that necessity have established ourselves in various treaty ports of China. Hitherto we have concerned ourselves too much with the diplomatic fiction of the supposed government at Peking, but the time has arrived when we have got to face reality or perish."

The Post declares Britain made itself respected "by bold and intelligent use of power in China" and argues for a warlike policy.

colored; sometimes she wore a veil, and you kept tactfully out of the way, understanding that Tommy was "playing the woman game." Mrs. Tommy you saw pictured among "the distinguished hostesses of the week"; she went in for art, and there would be a soulful young man about the house. The servants understood the situation, and so did Eunice.

She was dark and slender, a quick and impatient little thing, with an abundance of what was currently known as "pep." She was in two of Bunny's classes, and discovering that he was a serious youngster, she worried him by saying sharp and cutting things, that he was never sure whether she meant or not; he dared not ask, because then she would tease him worse than ever. There were always half a dozen fellows following her about, so it was easy to keep out of the way.

But one Saturday afternoon Bunny won the 220-yard dash for the school team, and that made him a bit of a hero and boys and girls swarmed about him, cheering and patting him on the back. Then, after he had had his shower and was dressed, he went out in search of his car, and there was Eunice just getting into her roadster, and she said, "Let me take you." He answered, "I've got my own car here," and she exclaimed, "Why, you horrid rude thing: Get into this car at once sir!" So of course he did, a little rattled. When she said, "Are you afraid somebody will steal that cheap old car of yours?"—was it up to him to defend the newness and expensiveness of Dad's latest gift?

"Bunny," she said, "my mother and father are having a row at home, and it's horrid there."

"Well, what do you want to do?" said he, sympathetically.

"Let's go somewhere and have supper—away from everything. You come, and it'll be my party."

So they drove for an hour or so, and climbed by a winding road to the top of the hill, and there was a cafe, with a terrace looking out over a bay and a rocky shore-line, that would have been famous if it had been in Italy. They ate supper, and chatted about school affairs, and Eunice told him about her home-life, and how some woman had written her mother a letter revealing that her father had paid a lot of money to some other woman, and Mrs. Hoyt was furious, because why should men do things that made it necessary for them to pay money.

The sun set over the ocean, and the lights came out along the shore, and a big full moon behind the hills; and Eunice said, "Do you like me a little bit, Bunny?" He answered that of course he did, and she said, "But you don't show it ever." "Well," he explained, "I never know quite what to make of you, because you always kid me"; and to that she said, "I know, Bunny, I'm a horrid mean thing, but the truth is, I just do that to keep my courage up. I'm afraid of you, too, because you're serious, and I'm just a silly chatter-box, and I have to make a show." So then, of course, Bunny was able to enjoy the party.

They got into the car and drove again. The road ran through a tangle of sand-dunes, high up above the ocean. "Oh, this is lovely!" said Eunice, and when they came to a place where the ground was firm she ran the car off the pavement and parked it. "Let's go and watch the ocean," she said. "There's a rug in the back." So Bunny got the rug out, and they walked over the dunes, and sat on top of one, and listened to the waves below; and Eunice smoked a cigarette, and scolded Bunny because he was a horrid little Puritan that wouldn't keep her company. Presently a man came walking by, and glanced at them as he passed, and Eunice said, "Have you got a gun?" And when he said that he hadn't she remarked, "You're supposed to bring a gun nowadays when you go on a petting party." Bunny had not realized that this was exactly a petting party, but you can see that it would not have been polite of him to say so.

He listened while she told him about bandits who were making a business of holding up couples parked by the roadside; some were beasts to the girls, and what would Bunny do if one of them were suddenly to appear? Bunny said he didn't know, but of course he'd defend a woman the best he could. "But I don't want you to get shot," said Eunice. "We've a scandal always threatened in our family." So she said, "Let's get lost, Bunny;" and he gathered up the rug and they wandered over the dunes—a long way from the road and from everything; and in one of the hollows, a still nest where the sand was soft and warm, she told him to spread the rug again, and there they sat, hid from everything save the round yellow moon, which has looked down upon millions of millions of such scenes, and has never yet betrayed a confidence.

They sat close together, and Eunice rested her head against Bunny's shoulder and whispered, "Do you care for me a little bit?" He assured her that he did, but she said, no, he must think she was a horrid bold thing; and when he declared that he didn't, she said, "Then why don't you kiss me?" He began to kiss her, but she wasn't satisfied—he didn't mean it, she said; and suddenly she whispered, "Bunny, I don't believe you've ever really loved a girl before!"

He admitted that he had not. "I've always known you were a queer boy," she said. "What is the matter?" Bunny said he didn't quite know; he was trembling violently, because he had never had anything like this happen to him, and several different emotions clamored at the same time, and which one should he follow? "Let me teach you, Bunny," whispered the girl; and when he did not answer at once, she put her lips upon his, in a long kiss that made him dizzy. He murmured faintly that something might happen, she might get into trouble; but she told him not to worry about that, she knew about those things and had taken the needed precautions.

CAL REAFFIRMS HIS 'HANDS OFF' MEXICO POLICY

PAUL SMITH'S, NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—After a second conference with the ambassador to Mexico, President Coolidge announced that there would be no change in the administration's policy towards the southern republic.

As previously suggested in The DAILY WORKER, the administration cleverly took advantage of the Mexican government's engagement with the catholic church in its fight against the latter to force concessions from Calles in the land and mineral laws.

Could Get Better Results.

Coolidge was of the opinion that he could secure more practical results from a non-interventionist policy for the American investors in Mexican developments than by acceding to the demand of the vatican for a punitive policy.

Calles in his message to congress was obviously indirectly appealing to Washington when he suggested that modification of the contested laws would be tried if the present statutes proved unworkable.

Church Campaign Fails.

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 12. The bottom has fallen completely out of the catholic church agitation since it became evident that even Ambassador Sheffield would fail to shake the "Hands off" policy of the Coolidge administration.

The Mexican national chamber of commerce attacked the policy of the Calles government and urged a protective tariff on importations, a reduction in wages and longer working hours for Mexican labor.

COAL FAMINE IS PRESSING IN GREAT BRITAIN

Imported Coal Is Found Unsatisfactory

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Sept. 15. — The approach of cool weather is bringing a rising apprehension at the shortage of coal, and not a little of the protest is directed at the mine owners' association, which refuses to settle with the strikers on the basis of a national agreement.

Orders for British coal are pouring into the offices of coal merchants, and coal consumers declare they are entirely dissatisfied with the kind of coal imported from other countries.

"Everyone is heartily fed up with it," says one big coal merchant.

The owners, who have rejected the proposal of the government, that the owners participate in a three-cornered conference with the government and the strikers' representatives, think that the strikers are beaten to their knees and concessions to them are unnecessary.

The owners boast about the miners who have returned to work, yet their claim of 85,000 now working thruout the country is not enough to affect the issue, there being 1,000,000 on strike and standing firmly for the union in spite of the most bitter suffering. The government, which has been ready at all times to coerce the miners, now has the task of showing its attitude toward the mine owners who refused the proposal of the government made by Winston Churchill. It is expected that Premier Baldwin, called back from his vacation in France, will have the job of continuing the negotiations in the coal strike, as well as determining British policy in China, the ostensible reason for his return.

President Green Agrees Workers Need Shorter Work-Day

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15—(FP) — Further reduction of the standard working day in American industry was suggested by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in his speech at the laying of the corner-stone of the new office-building of Carpenters' Local 132.

"Working men and women beings said must be given the same opportunities as other men to develop their spiritual, moral and mental faculties," he said.

"If we find it necessary to further reduce hours of labor then our labor movement will lead in seeking the further reduction of working hours."

LABOR PARTY BIG ISSUE BEFORE CONNECTICUT STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR CONVENTION IN DANBURY

DANBURY, Conn., Sept. 15.—The Connecticut Federation of Labor met here with a hundred and ten delegates present representing local trade unions and central bodies from all over the state. The big issue arousing a lengthy discussion in the convention was the question of independent political action and the formation of a Labor Party.

The Labor Party question was brought before the convention by the local Painters' Union on the basis of the resolution of the national convention of painters last year which committed that organization to the formation of a Labor Party. The motion for the formation of a Labor Party in Connecticut was defeated by a vote of 23 in favor and 88 against.

Support Growing.

The fight for the Labor Party was led by Morris Rohlasky of the New Haven Painters' Local and supported by George Moffit of Stamford and John Vanlelty of New Britain.

President O'Meera of the federation declared that he would fight "to the last drop" against the Labor Party because he said the Communists would be the leaders in the Labor Party if it were formed.

The 23 votes cast in favor of the formation of the Labor Party is a sign of the growth of the movement in the state of Connecticut and an indication that in the future conventions an even stronger support will be found for independent political action by labor.

BANKERS FIGHT FOR CONTROL OF SURFACE LINES

Two Groups in Battle Before City Council

Lisman and Company, a New York concern, acting for a syndicate of New York, Chicago, and other bankers, has offered the Chicago city council transportation committee to take over the street railway system when the present franchise expires and to work for the consolidation of the existing elevated, bus and street car lines and to establish bus lines where needed.

This concern, acting on behalf of a syndicate of bankers, points out that it has the necessary cash to redmance the roads and to operate and maintain them provided the city grants them a 20-year franchise.

Competition between two groups of bankers is on now before the city council. One group is composed of a number of Chicago and New York bankers that now control the lines and the other group is a syndicate of New York and Chicago bankers seeking to gain control of the roads.

Neither of the two groups state in their proposals whether there will be a return to the former 5-cent fare or whether the fare will be increased.

PRIMARY SEASON CLOSES; PREPARE FOR ELECTIONS

Coolidge Cohorts Fear More Defeats

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—The 1926 primary season, which has been marked by more political upsets than any in recent years, came to an official close with balloting in a dozen states.

Hot Fight in Maryland.

In Maryland Senator O. E. Weller, republican, who came into the senate on the crest of the Harding landslide in 1920, is opposed for renomination by Representative John Philip Hill, the acknowledged wet leader of the house. Hill is anti-world court. There has been a slam-bang campaign which will leave scars in the republican organization in Maryland, irrespective of the outcome. Observers believe the contest will be close, with Hill leading.

Klan Backs Means.

In Colorado Senator Rice W. Means, republican, is opposed by two candidates, Charles W. Waterman and George A. Luxford. The klan has entered heavily into this fight and is seeking the control of the state machinery. Means is supported by the klan.

In Louisiana Senator Edward S. Broussard, democrat, a wet, is opposed for renomination by Ex-Governor Jared Y. Sanders, who favors a referendum on the liquor question. Broussard is favored to win.

Withdraw Cole' Man.

In President Coolidge's home state of Vermont, Senator Porter H. Dale, republican, is unopposed for renomination since the withdrawal of Ex-Governor Stickney, law partner of Attorney General Sargent. Stickney entered the race ostensibly as an administration candidate against Dale, who refused to follow the White House leadership.

To "Count In" Butler.

In Massachusetts the president's campaign manager, Senator Wm. M. Butler, is expected to be renominated. He is opposed by Washington Cook, a wet. It is expected that Cook will be smothered when votes are counted. Ex-Senator David I. Walsh is unopposed for the democratic nomination.

In Washington state Senator Wesley L. Jones, dry and protectionist, has three opponents for the nomination. The division in the opposition is expected to allow Jones to ride in.

Start Election Campaign.

With the end of the primary season the candidates will start their seven-week race towards elections in November.

Jonas Ahead in Washington.

SEATTLE, Sept. 15.—Senator Wesley L. Jones was leading his opponent, Frank E. Hammond, by four to one for the republican nomination for United States senator with practically all the precincts in the state heard from early today.

EIGHT WORKERS TRAPPED UNDER MISSOURI RIVER

Blast Cuts Off Tube Drillers

(Special to The Daily Worker)

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Sept. 15.—Eight men were trapped in a tunnel under the Missouri river here today, when an explosion occurred where workmen were constructing a water main between Clay county and Jackson county. All air passages were cut off.

In Center of River.

The men were working in two crews, driving the shaft from either side of the river, and the cave-in occurred behind the crew in the north side of the tunnel, imprisoning them between the ground which had not been dug, in approximately the center of the river, and the mass of earth that fell.

Chief Engineer Charles S. Foreman the barrier, 2100 feet in the shaft, before he was blocked.

Little Hope.

The cave-in virtually sealed the portion of the tunnel into an airtight pocket in which the men are imprisoned. Officials of the Smith Brothers, Inc., who were in charge of the construction, expressed doubt that their air supply would last eight men more than a few hours.

Altho there is a strong possibility that the men are all dead, according to workers, other killed in the explosion, which was so powerful that it knocked workmen on the surface from their feet, or smothered.

GREEN WINNER FOR GOVERNOR OF MICHIGAN

DETROIT, Mich., Sept. 15 — Fred W. Green, mayor of Ionia, winner of the republican nomination for governor in yesterday's primary election, continued today to pile up his lead over Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck, fourth-term aspirant. Lieut.-Gov. George W. Welsh was battling with Luren D. Dickenson for second place on the ticket.

A total of 2,196 precincts out of 2,935 for governor gives: Green, 298,755; Groesbeck, 171,310.

Waterman Leading in Colorado.

DENVER, Colo., Sept. 15.—R. W. Means, republican, junior United States senator from Colorado, was running second today to Charles W. Waterman, on incomplete returns from yesterday's state primary. 502 precincts out of 1,501, giving Waterman 19,805, Means 10,586 and George A. Luxford, 5,123.

In the republican gubernatorial race, Oliver H. Shoup was leading John F. Vivian, backed by Senator Lawrence C. Phipps by 7,000 votes, the count being Shoup 19,874; Vivian 12,836.

Senator Broussard Re-nominated.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 15. — Renomination of Senator Edwin S. Bronssard, democrat, appeared probable on the basis of returns from all sections of the state today.

With the city count complete and 831 out of 1,084 precincts in the Parish reported, Senator Broussard was leading his opponent, J. Y. Sanders, by a majority of 4,307 votes.

Ask New York Labor Join Injunction Fight

of the city water department immediately went into the north tunnel with a crew of men, and penetrated to the another glittering, but false hope dangled in front of the manufacturers by their leaders to get a settlement on their own terms. They will feed them this hope for some time to come, but the manufacturers who believe the strike will be broken this way will soon find their mistake. Nothing will break the determination of the workers to obtain livable conditions. Mr. Finder and their other leaders will never see the day when workers will return on their indecent terms.

"Injunctions do not make cloaks. Sooner or later the manufacturers will have to come to terms with the union. Every effort they make to delay the final settlement will redound to their own disadvantage. They can get the workers back into their shops not thru the intervention of the governor nor thru an injunction, but only by conceding to the workers their just demands."

Replying to full-page advertisements appearing yesterday in the Yiddish press, inserted by the industrial Council, which declared that the points contained in them, urging the workers to return to the shops, did not coincide with Finder's recent statements that, as far as he was concerned, the strike was broken and over.

Magistrate Rosenbluth, sitting yesterday in Jefferson Merkat court, freed 490 cloak pickets arrested yesterday for violating the injunction, the the papers had not yet been served on strike leaders. The magistrate warned the police and counsel for the manufacturers that arrests for violation of the order can be made only after pickets had been served individually, on the golden theorem in injunction papers.

Labor Must Expose the Capitalist Government As Murderer of Workers

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TWO former agents of the department of justice have admitted, in affidavits read at the reopening of hearings demanding a new trial for Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, that our two comrades were deliberately "framed" by the powerful United States government that wanted to get rid of them.

This is what The DAILY WORKER has always charged. Without proving The DAILY WORKER has thundered that Sacco and Vanzetti are innocent of the murder, committed in the South Braintree, Mass., payroll robbery, April 15, 1920, more than six years ago. The actual murderers have been revealed as members of the Morelli gang of Providence, R. I., thru the admissions of one of the gangsters, Celestino Madeiros, now facing a death sentence for another crime.

The two ex-agents of the department of justice, Lawrence Letherman and Fred J. Weyland, now confess that Sacco and Vanzetti were being railroaded to the electric chair as "one way of disposing of them." The frame-up job was merely part of the blasting drive of President Woodrow Wilson's Attorney General, A. Mitchell Palmer, "WITH THE APPROVAL OF THE DEPARTMENT IN WASHINGTON, TO WHICH FULL REPORTS WERE MADE."

In Letherman's own words:

"It was the opinion of the department of justice agents here (Boston) that a conviction of Sacco and Vanzetti for murder would be one way of disposing of them."

Let those words scar themselves into the minds of every worker in America. They reveal, better than many volumes, the real nature of the employing class, tyranny that has reared a government in Washington to keep labor in slavery.

In attacking the spokesmen of labor the government has two alternatives. It can either bring them to trial for the principles that they espouse or it can frame them up on some fraudulent criminal charge.

The government fears the former. It results in a court clash over vital principles as in the Michigan cases growing out of the raids on the Communist Party convention at Bridgeman. Communist principles gain a hearing before broad masses of workers. Then no death penalty has as yet been fixed for those espousing the cause of the social revolution in this country.

The government, therefore, prefers the frame-up, in the case of Mooney and Billings, in the case of Sacco and Vanzetti, and in many other similar cases that dot the pages of American labor history. The tactics of the Pinkerton and Burns Detective Agencies, become the tactics of the United States government. Attorney William J. Burns did not get into the department of justice until the democrat, Palmer, had been succeeded by the notorious Harry M. Daugherty, now on trial for collecting graft totalling $441,000 out of a deal to return alien property in his custody valued at $7,000,000 to its German owners.

Murder is the popular frame-up charge. It is legalized lynching. Thus Joe Hill was put to death by the government in Utah. It was a lynching bee as much as the murder of Frank Little, slain by a mob during the war. Only the voice of labor has so far halted the legal lynching of Mooney and Billings, Sacco and Vanzetti. The attacks on Sacco and Vanzetti was cold-blooded and deliberate. The ex-agent, Letherman, in the employ of the detective service of the government for 29 years, mainly in the post office department, further stated:

"It . . . was the general opinion of such of the agents as had actual knowledge of the Sacco-Vanzetti case that Sacco and Vanzetti . . . were not highway robbers and had nothing to do with the South Braintree job."

The Wilson-Palmer department of justice had 12 men on the johbing of Sacco and Vanzetti, carefully preparing the frame-up in order to make it airtight. Some of these were undercover. One was "planted," in a cell beside Sacco in the hope of entrapping him into confessions. Others served on Sacco-Vanzetti committees, one as a collector. An effort was made to place another in the home of Mrs. Sacco. So carefully and deliberately does the government plot its attack on the advance section of the working class.

The Wilson-Palmer democratic administration has succeeded by the Harding-Daugherty republican regime that in turn gave way to Coolidge-Sargent rule, also republican, in the department of justice. The last, however, is just as guilty as the other two. The frame-up is not characteristic of any single administration. It is an established weapon of the capitalist tyranny.

Attorney William G. Thompson, for Sacco and Vanzetti, charges that he wrote to Attorney-General Sargent demanding that the records of the Boston office be opened as a matter of justice where two human lives are at stake. Yet Thompson declares that not only has the attorney-general failed to answer his letter, but that inspector Dowd, in charge in Boston now, has refused help, giving as the reason unwillingness to exceed his instructions. Murderers were never more cold blooded.

Thus Cal Coolidge, president of the United States, stands revealed as one of the executioners seeking to send Sacco and Vanzetti to the electric chair, instrument of the capitalist assassins in Massachusetts. Coolidge, thru his close contact with the department of justice, dominated by his own appointee Sargent, and errand boy as he is of the textile and shoe barons of New England, must have known the facts about the frame-up of Sacco and Vanzetti. He must have known the truth when he was visited by William Green, president, and the rest of the officialdom of the American Federation of Labor, at his summer retreat in New York's northern woods. All the greater the crime of Green, Woll, Ryan, Duncan and the rest who shook hands with a would-be murderer of courageous workers.

With the fake charges against Sacco and Vanzetti thus blasted, it is well to study their actual crime against American ruling class. They still sit in the Massachusetts death house actually because they took up the cause of a fellow worker, Andrea Salsedo, victim of deportation and held by the department of justice on an upper floor on one of those high skyscrapers that canyon Park Row, in New York City. Salsedo was held incommunicado months. Efforts to secure his release were futile. One day in early 1920 his body came hurtling thru space, from the open window of the department of justice offices. It was crushed lifeless against the pavement in the street below. The inference is that the department of justice agents, failing to get Salsedo to confess to any of the numerous blasts that were taking place at this time, like the Wall Street explosion and the Chicago post office disaster, had thrown him from the window knowing that certain death waited below to silence Salsedo forever.

It is charged that this is the method used to "dispose of" Salsedo in New York City, just as the electric chair was to be used "to dispose of" Sacco and Vanzetti in Massachusetts.

The workers must now put the United States government on trial. Sacco and Vanzetti have not been murdered. But Salsedo was slain in cold blood. The murderers can be found. The whole American working class must be aroused in this new effort.

A new phase of the Sacco-Vanzetti case opens. Labor has been too much on the defensive, struggling valiantly, to be sure, to save the lives of our two comrades in prison. Labor must now embark upon an offensive challenging the would-be murderer in the Sacco-Vanzetti case, the actual murderer in the Salsedo case, —challenging the United States capitalist government itself.

Two Children Die in Farm House Fire

FRIENDSHIP, Wis., Sept. 15—Two children were burned to death and their father was fatally injured in an effort to save them Sunday when fire destroyed the farm home of Jake Hoffmaster in the town of Big Flats, northeast of Friendship.

Mrs. Hoffmaster leaped from an upstairs window to escape the fire, which started while the family was asleep, and sustained injuries that may prove fatal.

Crossing Death in Illinois.

ROCHELLE, Ill., Sept. 15—Charles E. Nixon, 48, of Clinton, Ia., died in a hospital here today of injuries suffered late last night when his automobile was struck by a Chicago, Burlington and Quincy express train at a grade crossing near here.

PITTSBURGH HAS ROUSING CAMPAIGN MEET

Workers Party Wins in Free Speech Fight

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Sept. 15.—With the local police department well represented and to the strains of the "International," the Workers (Communist) Party opened its congressional campaign here before an enthusiastic throng in Carnegie Music Hall, from which the party was herred by the police on last May Day.

Abram Jakira, district organizer of the Workers (Communist) Party, in opening the meeting as chairman pointed out that the meeting had a double purpose. To celebrate the free speech fight won by the party and to inaugurate the party's 1926 parliamentary struggle in the Pittsburgh district.

J. Louis Engdahl, editor of The DAILY WORKER, aroused great enthusiasm from the fight to free Sacco and Vanzetti by pointing out the revelations brought to light in the confessions of two ex-department of justice agents in the court hearing at Dedham, Mass., Monday. He said these revelations admitting the government's frame-up against Sacco and Vanzetti to explain the real nature of the American capitalist government.

Mrs. Parthenia Hillis, the party's candidate for lieutenant governor, won great applause by her excellent statement of the part that the worker is taking in the American class struggle, her declaration that the Negro was in a class fight and not a race fight for his race was enthusiastically applauded. She eloquently exposed the republican party as the enemy of the Negro workers.

Organize Young Workers.

George Papcun, of the Young Workers (Communist) League, urged the organization of the young workers in the steel mills, the mining and electrical industries. "A special musical program was furnished by the Kendra brothers.

This was the first of a series of four campaign meetings. The next meeting will be held Sept. 28, addressed by William W. Weinstone of New York City.

AIMEE'S ALIBI FALLS DOWN ON MISS X DOUBL

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 15.—A little black book and the notes in it have undone a perfectly good alibi for Aimee Semple McPherson, the woman evangelist who disappeared at Ocean Grove beach and appeared some weeks later in the desert at the Mexican border in Arizona with suspicions that she had been kidnapped and held for ransom.

The little black book was the property of one Mrs. Lorraine Wiseman who was arrested recently on bad writing checks. The police discovered notes in the book showing that she had had some business dealings with Aimee.

Good Alibi, But—

It developed that Mrs. Wiseman was the woman who made an affidavit that she was the woman other women had identified as Aimee McPherson, who was charged with spending ten days in a love nest with her radio operator, Kenneth G. Ormiston, at Carmel-by-the-Sea during the time she was supposed to have been "kidnapped."

Mrs. Wiseman had sought to clear both Aimee and herself by saying that a certain "Miss X." Mrs. Wiseman's twin sister, Mrs. Viria McDonald Kimball of Oakland, California, objected to being put in this light, Mrs. Wiseman confessed.

The confession specifies in great detail how the alibi for Aimee was worked out with Aimee's assistance and a payment of $5,000 of Mrs. Wiseman would go thru with it. She told how she got a certain Miss Rachel Wells to appear at Salinas, Cal., and make an affidavit supporting her—Miss Wells claiming to be the mysterious "Miss X."

Coached to Get $5,000.

A man named Martin, supposed to be a Chicago lawyer, who had said in an affidavit from Ormiston in which "Miss X" was named as being in companion, and Aimee was cleared, is now said by Mrs. Wiseman to have trained her in her story to put the alibi across.

In addition, Mrs. Wiseman says, Mrs. Maud Atherton coached me on points which were vital to the story. Her attorney, Mr. Woolley, took me to a handwriting expert. I was instructed to try to copy the words and signature of grocery lists found in Carmel. Those were the words found by reporters in my black book."

When the views of Mrs. Wiseman's confession reached Aimee McPherson the evangelist issued a flat denial and shut herself up with her attorneys.

Menace of Illinois Flood Causes Alarm

BEARDSTOWN, Ill., Sept. 15. — Levees are being reinforced, and bridges, roads and sewers protected as well as possible, as authorities today are completing preparations for a threatened flood. Many streets already have been flooded by backwater, and several sewer mains have broken. Flooding several additional streets. The east end of town and the levees district are being deserted in the face of the threatened peril.

The Illinois river is rising and the bridge here has been closed to traffic. The levee at Naples, it is reported, is safe from a break.

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

ILLINOIS labor leaders, the bona fide variety so-called, desire to remain neutral in the contest for United States senator between George E. Brennan, democrat, and Frank L. Smith, republican. So far serious consideration has not been given in news of the Streator convention, to the candidacy of Farley Parker Christensen, who is running against both, but on no tangible platform except a vague back-to-Jesus one. If Farley desires any friendly co-operation from the christian labor leaders who dominate the A. F. of L. around here he will have to orientate towards Samuel Insull and keep away from Mount Calvary.

SINCE Frank Farrington accepted the $25,000 yearly retainer from the Peabody Coal Company there is a saying around here that a politician whose neck is not built to wear an insull or a Peabody collar has a poor prop for his head. The political aspirant who claims to wear no man's collar nowadays does not even get credit for honesty from the voters. He is looked on either as a hypocrite who "got his" and is trying to cover up or as a simpleton who does not know enough to turn his umbrella upside down when the golden shower is falling.

OUTSIDE of candidates who run on a working-class platform and on a working-class ticket, I never had the pleasure of meeting a capitalist aspirant for office who impressed me as being honest except one, and he was a native of South Boston, Mass. We will call him Mr. Bung. His opponent shall be known as Mr. Tuog. Mr. Tung was a candidate to succeed himself. Mr. Bung's plea was that Mr. Tung was well fixed financially and had enough political honors for any one person.

MR. BUNG was a poor man and had needed the money. Why not give a good boy who was brought up around Flood Square a chance? Despite Tung's lead hands at the last he considered an attempt on Mr. Bung's part to pollute the streams of legislative purity, Tung went down to defeat under an avalanche of votes and Bung was elected. Such honesty is very rare indeed in capitalist politics.

THE Nizam of Hyderabad holds the world's record for oil time, almost, for being the possessor of the best stocked harem in history. The exception was Solomon's, and I am beginning to suspect the Nizam's press agent overstepped the mark—even for a press agent. The most intriguing story about Hyderabad is not the number or price-brands of the Nizam's feminine furniture, but the fact that the British government takes care of all his foreign relations, in return for which the Nizam undertakes to furnish certain troops for empire defense. Outside of that the Nizam is as free as one of his concubines.

THE British, always willing to carry the dark man's burden, thought the Nizam had his work cut out for him to looking after the interests of his lady friends, as the empire, thru the Indian office, added a number of officials to the Nizam's staff and the latter hasn't much to do besides amusing himself and acting as referee between his warring wives. The funny part of it is, or should be, that England is quite a moral country and stands squarely on a monogamous platform. Why, even Queen Mary refused to recognize an American actress at a Buckingham palace reception because the stage star's garters peeped out occasionally. But the Nizam! Business is business.

THIS discussion takes us from Hyderabad to the episcopal church in the United States. Our spiritual herders can never give themselves a rest from worrying about the precarious condition in which national virtue is in at a particular moment. One of the reasons given for imposing the Volstead law on the nation was the necessity for placing obstacles in the way of Old Nick, who was a couple of laps ahead of Jehovah in the novo-reading, soul-grabbing contest. But what is the result of the work of the prohibition advocates, the bootleggers and the ku klux klan.

THIS column is too considerate of the sensibilities of its readers to quote the exact words used by a writer

MINE WORKERS IN OHIO FEAR BOSS ATTACK

West Virginia Is an Object Lesson

This is the first of a series of articles on the crisis of unionism in the coal industry written by prominent labor writers.

By HARVEY O'CONNOR,
Federated Press.

COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 15.—Attacked simultaneously on six fronts by the coal operators, Ohio's 40,000 union coal miners are holding the fort for the United Mine Workers of America in a crucial struggle which may determine the fate of the national organization. Besieged from one to three years by unemployment resulting from the country-wide effort to ruin the union, Ohio has become the critical point in the battle to save the soft coal industry for unionism.

Largely successful in West Virginia and western Pennsylvania in wresting control from the union, the operators, backed by Wall Street financial interests, mean to force the breaking of the national Jacksonville agreement—and the union—in the heart of the central competitive field.

Born in Union.

Ohio would have capitulated long ago if her coal diggers had not been born and reared in the union. Both the American Federation of Labor and the United Mine Workers were founded in Columbus and District 6 dates from April 15, 1890. Consequently unionism has become a tradition, a way of life for the men and women in the Ohio and Hocking valleys, the main mining districts.

A swing around the coal fields fails to reveal the slightest weakening on the part of the workers altho the operators, both individually and thru the newly-organized Ohio Coal Operators' Association, are constantly attempting non-union operation. So far they have succeeded in opening not more than half a dozen big mines, mostly in Pomeroy Bend, and employing more than 2,000 miners. In the past month six of the bigger companies have made

Save the Mine Workers' Union!

The crisis for unionism in the coal fields is becoming acute. Beginning today, The DAILY WORKER will publish a series of stories released by the Federated Press describing the condition of unionism in the more important coal fields of the country. Today's article is by Harvey O'Connor on the Ohio district. Following this will be articles by Art Shields on Pennsylvania and West Virginia, Ernest Chamberlain on the southern fields, Frieda Reicher on the Rocky Mountain district and others to be announced later. These articles will be of special interest to members of the United Mine Mine Workers' Union.

LIBERALS WIN ELECTION IN CANADA OVER TARIFF ISSUE ON U. S. PRODUCTS

ARTHUR MEIGHEN

W.L. MACKENZIE KING

Above is Arthur Meighen, premier of the conservative government of Canada, who went to the people for a protective tariff to Canadian industry, what there is left to it was defeated in his own constituency, while Mackenzie King, leader of the liberal party, was re-elected on a low tariff platform and will assume the premiership at the next session of the dominion parliament. Three labor members of parliament were re-elected.

ELECTION IN CANADA GOES TO LIBERALS

TORONTO, Ont., Sept. 15.—The returns from the Canadian elections, the incomplete, indicate a victory for the liberal party over the present conservative government, headed by Premier Arthur Meighen.

The new government will be led by the liberal Mackenzie King, and will consist of liberals, progressives, laborites and independents.

Premier and Five Ministers Beaten.

Premier Meighen and five of his cabinet were defeated at the polls.

The liberals so far are conceded 112 seats, the conservatives 87, progressives and liberal progressives 18, United Farmers' Alliance, a progressive element, 10, Labor 3, and independents 2.

Two political issues overshadowed minor matters in the elections. These were the tariff and dominion rights within the kingdom. The conservatives were for a high protective tariff as against the United States, the liberals for a policy of low tariff in trade with the United States.

Tariff With U. S. An Issue.

The budget of the King government, which held power up to a short time before the election, provided for a 15 per cent reduction on American automobiles and reduced income and general taxation. The conservatives urged practically a tariff war with the United States.

In the matter of dominion rights, the liberals raised the issue of constitutional rights because Baron Byng, governor-general, appointed by the British king, refused to dissolve parliament at the time King was premier, failed to be sustained by a vote of parliament.

British King's Agent Played Tricks.

This forced King to resign. When Meighen succeeded him, Meighen, too, was defeated in parliament. This trick by the agent of the British crown left the control of the election machinery in the hands of the Meighen conservatives, and the liberals attacked it as an infringement of the dominion rights by the British crown.

The counter-charge of the conservatives was that the liberals sought to annex Canada to the United States.

BRITISH KILL 5,000 CHINESE AND BURN CITY

Fire and Slaughter Is Used on Civilians

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SHANGHAI, Sept. 15. — More details of the fight between the British and Chinese partisans of Wu Pei-fu under his subordinate, General Yangsen, say that at least 5,000 Chinese were killed by the British at Wanhsien, 1,200 miles up the Yangtse river, when the British tried to recover by force the British ships seized by Yang-sen who was angered by the British delivering arms by mistake to the Cantonese that were meant for Yang's use against the Cantonese.

Camouflage Attack.

The British used a merchant ship, the Wiawo, as camouflage, arming it and loading it with marines. The boat was run alongside the British ship Wanshein, held by Yangsen's soldiers, who shot down a boarding party of British marines attempting to recapture the ship.

Fire City of 150,000

The British gunboats then opened fire not only on the Chinese aboard the Wanhsien, but upon the city of Wanhsien, which has a population of about 150,000, setting it afire, practically destroying the city and killing 5,000 people, besides the 300 Chinese soldiers on the boats and lining the shore.

The American Counsel General at Hankow, Frank P. Lockhart, has cabled Washington that General Tang, commander of the Cantonese now in control of Hankow, has issued an order forbidding the firing on foreign vessels in his jurisdiction.

Americans Safe at Hankow.

A wireless from Admiral C. S. Williams, commander of the U. S. Asiatic fleet, on board the flagship Huron, states that all Americans and British at Hankow are safe. The message was relayed from the U. S. gunboat Monocacy, at Chunking, a Chinese city on the Yangtze 1,500 miles in the interior, still further inland than the scene of the clash between the British and Chinese at Wanhsien.

The United States has five gunboats, two destroyers and two mine sweepers in the Yangtse river.

British Send Another Cruiser.

LONDON, Sept. 15. — The British cruiser Carysfort has been ordered to leave for China.

Conflict at Canton Eased.

HONGKONG, Sept. 15.—It is reported that the Canton government has undertaken to protect the British wharves at Canton, where the anti-British strike boycott has been going on for many months.

The British take for granted this means a prohibition of strike pickets, and have acceded to the demand of the Canton government that British gunboats be withdrawn from the river there. Canton has jurisdiction, but claimed the right to send them back if picketing is continued.

We Need The Daily Worker; It Needs Us

By MAX BEDACHT

THE most important weapon in the hands of the capitalist class is the capitalist press. This press is manufacturing and falsifying public opinion. It is this "public opinion" upon which the powers of the state base their interference against the workers in all of their struggles.

To be sure those powers would move anyway in the defense of the bosses' interests. But they would have to move with greater difficulties if they did not have "public opinion" on their side, or, at least, neutral. They would have to move in the face of mass resistance. As it is they move against detached battalions of workers who happen to be engaged in battle against their bosses. And the rest, the masses, stand idly by.

THIS is the fruit of the poison of the capitalist press. The weakness of our press is a constant danger to its existence. It is our foremost duty to remedy this weakness. Weak tho our press may be, but it is a weapon in our hands. Better than throw away a weak weapon is to sharpen and to strengthen it. We need our press—there can be no question about that.

BUT because of its weakness our press needs us.

Our "DAILY WORKER" is now nearly three years old. It is a vigorous youngster. It is a formidable fighter. But it still needs our close attention and support. Without that it cannot grow up and grow stronger.

"THE DAILY WORKER" IS OUR MOUTHPIECE. Without it our party and our movement would have little voice in the public. We must preserve and strengthen this voice at all cost.

"THE DAILY WORKER" IS OUR ORGANIZER. Without it our party and our movement would be deprived of an effective propagandist. We must preserve and strengthen this propagandist at all cost.

"THE DAILY WORKER" IS OUR TEACHER. Without it too many of us would be delivered over helplessly to the poisonous vapors of the capitalist press. "The DAILY WORKER" tells us the truth. It teaches us to understand our problems and our fights. We must preserve and strengthen this teacher at all cost.

Without "The DAILY WORKER" our party and our movement would be crippled to near helplessness. We need "The DAILY WORKER."

But at this moment "The DAILY WORKER" needs us. It is in immediate danger. We must meet its difficulties and must secure its existence.

Comrades! Let us all pull together. The task is to put over our campaign for "The DAILY WORKER" one hundred per cent.

LABOR PARTY URGED AT MEET BY OVERGAARD

Left Wing Leader Flays Walker's Report

STREATOR, Ill., Sept. 15.— The slumbering pyratechnics broke forth today at the sessions of the forty-fourth annual convention of the Illinois Federation of Labor, in session here.

C. B. Cline, of the Auto and Aircraft Mechinists' Union, Chicago, broke the ice with an open charge that Communists operating in this country had drives 100,000 machinists out of the union.

And Andrew Overgaard, also of the Mechinists' Union, Chicago, followed it up with a bitter attack on President John Walker's report on candidates for state representative, state senator and congressman.

Overgaard urged the federation to put a farmer-labor ticket in the field, and to oppose the old party candidates.

Cline, leaping to his feet, continued his attack by denouncing Overgaard as "a Communist," a troublemaker and a Communist worker.

When the smoke had cleared away, President Walker's report was adopted with a slight dissenting vote

MARINE ENGINEERS DEMAND PAY RAISES OF STEAMSHIP LINES

NEW YORK, Sept. 15. —(FP)— Twenty big steamship lines have been served with a written demand by the Ocean Association of Marine Engineers for wage raises bringing engineers' pay to shipping board standards. This would mean increases of $10 to $25 a month. Wages have stood still since the wars that followed the lost strike of 1921.

CHARLES EVANS HUGHES.

America's most famous corporation lawyer and former secretary of state is shown here on the steps of the ministry building in Paris after an audiance with Foreign Minister Aristide Briand. In any case it is hard to believe that whiskered Charlie is merely having an outing abroad.

ASK N. Y. LABOR TO JOIN FIGHT ON INJUNCTION

420 Garment Pickets Jailed in One Day

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK CITY, Sept. 15.—A clarion call to union labor affiliated with the American Federation of Labor to fight injunction of peaceful picketing was the reply last night by leaders of the general strike committee of the 40,000 cleakmakers to the temporary injunction obtained by the industrial Council of cloak manufacturers from Supreme Court Justice Charles L. Guy, returnable Wednesday morning.

While the union will make strenuous efforts in court to have the injunction vacated, a series of gigantic mass meetings thruout the city are being rapidly arranged, in which every A. F. of L. organization in the city is expected to participate. Already Louis Hyman, chairman of the cloakmakers' general strike committee, has received vigorous assurance of support from other unions which look upon injunctions such as issued in the eleventh week of the present strike as a menace to union efforts to improve work ers' conditions.

Defies Injunction Action.

Following a meeting of the strike advisory committee, Mr. Hyman issued the following statement:

"The strike will not be broken by any injunction. We are of the opinion that the taking out of this injunc-

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—State department information from Nicaragua, is that the reactionary military dictator, Chamorro, is ready to compromise with the liberal and labor forces now waxing successful war against him to restore the constitutional regime he overthrew by a coup last year.

If the liberal and labor forces are successful they will place Vice-President Sacasa at the head of the government. Mexican labor has been giving powerful aid to the rebels against Chamorro. The Nicaraguan labor unions are affiliated with the Pan-American Federation of Labor.

DEFENSE TAKES OFFENSIVE IN SACCO HEARING

Madeiros Confession Is Effective

DEDHAM, Mass., Sept. 15—Reaching back into the ambitions of four years ago, William G. Thompson in his plea before Judge Webster Thayer today for a new trial for Nicola sad Bartolomeo Vanzetti charged that they had been "railroaded" to a conviction because of their activities and to satisfy the presidential aspirations and personal avarice of "a then high official."

"Who is the worst murderer," he cried, referring to Celestino Madeiros, who confessed the killing, "the man who slays and takes the consequences, knowing he faces a reprisal, or the mas who for $8 a day and who wants to satisfy a chief who wanted to become president of the United States and make money on the side, would send innocent men to death. One is safe. The other is dangerous."

Thompson said that he referred to the federal operatives then working on the case and the then Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer who later became a pre-convention candidate for president.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DEDHAM, Mass., Sept. 15.—Pity for Sacco's wife and children moved Madeiros to give his confession was brought out today at the hearing for a new trial for Sacco and Vanzetti at Dedham, Mass. In a deposition a hundred and forty-three pages long Celestino Madeiros, coademned murderer of a Wrentham bank cashier, gave the whole history of his life and all details of the South Braintree affair, in which he participated, thus exonerating Sacco and Vazzetti of this crime.

This deposition was taken last June 28 by lawyer Thompson and District Attorney Ranny when it was thought that Madeiros would be sentenced before the hearing.

Madeiros Unshaken.

Both lawyers, the defense and prosecution, had cross-examined him. His confession has not been shaken. He refused to give the names of the Braintree murderers but insisted that Sacco and Vanzetti were not the men. District Attorney Ranny read the cross-examination of Madeiros, but it did not change the situation.

Asks D. of J. Role.

In the afternoon session District Attorney Reony introduced twenty-one affidavits against the affidavits brought by Lawyer Thompson. The part of the department of Justice in the case was admitted today when Prosecuting Attorney Raony read an affidavit by former District Attorney Katzman who while drawing using a spy, admits that U. S. Agent Wise did speak to him about placing a spy in the cell next to Sacco and that he did not approve of it.

Arguments Continue.

Later a man came to see him who said he was sent by Wells, but Katzman in his affidavit says he did not suggest any plans to him. Ranay also brought an affidavit from Madeiros' sister, saying that Madeiros did not live in Providence at the time of the holdup.

The case will continue tomorrow. It is expected that the arguments for the case on the merits of the affidavits will begin tomorrow afternoon.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Sept. 15 — Pestilence and hunger threatened the Kansas flood district today and in Burlington where most of the flood damage occurred a second heavy rain was falling.

Small cyclones visited Hutchinson and vicinity last night causing thousands of dollars' damage. Waters had receded the most of the 100-mile long flood area.

Two Burlington railroad trains were marooned in Northwest Missouri this morning and heavy washouts had occurred near St. Joseph, Mo.

THE feelers sent out by the British government for a united campaign of the interested powers against China have been turned aside. Unofficial statements from Paris, Tokio and Washington say that those governments have no intention of intervening in China, at least not for the present. The stupidity of a British captain in turning over his consignment of arms to the Cantonese instead of to Wu Pei Fu's man, and the subsequent shooting, has exposed Britain in the role of quartermaster general to Wu.

BRITAIN may now make the best of a bad situation and recognise the Canton government equally with Peking. In which event Britain will only be changing her war policy. When Britain recognised Soviet Russia she did not discontinue her conspiracies against that country. She carried them on under the cloak of diplomatic relations. With things going from bad to worse for Britain in the Orient, it is not surprising that Winston Churchill could demand that Premier Baldwin return from his vacation in southern France and attend to business.

MUSSOLINI escaped again, but the "happy subjects of fascism" are almost certain to persevere in their efforts to make him happy by providing the "dnce" with that excitement he loves so well. Last Friday's news carried information that Mussolini intended to revamp the penal code in order to provide for the death penalty for attempted assassination of the king and the dictator. Evidently Benito expected something, and he was accommodated.

ITINERANT Americans who visit Italy find a ready market for their boosts of fascism in the columns of the capitalist press. But their efforts to show that the Italian people are happy under fascism are literally shot to pieces by bombs and bullets. The same issue of the Herald-Examiner that carried the news of the latest attempt on the life of Mussolini also contained an article by Vera Bloom, daughter of a New York congressman, which eulogized the fascist regime and told us how happy the Italians were under Mussolini. The lady spoke too soon.

MILL STRIKERS MARCH IN HUGE DEMONSTRATION

Parade Marks Entry Into New Union

By ART SHIELDS, Federated Press.

PASSAIC, N. J., Sept. 13.—The purple banner of the painters' local of Passaic and the red banner of the city carpenters' union shone bright in the afternoon sun as the old line A. F. of L. tradae led the line of march in the great demonstration that welcomed the woolen strikers into the American Federation of Labor.

Behind the building tradesmen, elated eight abreast, marched the strikers in a formation that stretched from Main avenue, by the railroad station in the center of town to a mile and a half out in the aristocratic outskirts where Julius Forstmann of the big woolen company that bears his name lives.

The boom of drums and the shrill music of the brass instruments kept time with the feet of the marchers as they sang their songs of solidarity and hope.

Others Join Labor.

It was a gala day parade that took in not only the entire labor movement but the Associated Societies and Parishes, the big Slavish Catholic organization grouping of Passaic; and a host of friendly organizations from other New Jersey towns and New York.

Flags and bands and the mighty throng at last came to a standing rest in First Ward Park where the people overflowed over acres of ground. And there they were addressed for the first time by Thomas F. McMahon, president of the United Textile Workers Union whose membership has nearly doubled with the addition of the hamming big local union No. 1603 that the united front committee that had been condneting the strike for its first eight months turned over to the A. F. of L. organization.

Sing "Solidarity."

The spirit of the audience was caught by the chairman, Edward F. McGrady, formerly legislative agent of the Massachusetts A. F. of L. as he called for that roneing workers' song, "Solidarity Forever." Charles Walsh, secretary of the Passaic central labor union, got applause as he promised that the rest of the local A. F. of L. and the strikers would be as one in the fight. Helen Todd, and Mrs. Hoshing, president of the Consumers League of New Jersey, applauded the strikers for the wonderful solidarity they had shown and Louis F. Budenz, editor of Labor Age, exhorted them to continue the fight till the company union in the woolen mills was buried "10,000 feet deep." A. J. Muste, of Brookwood Labor College, told of the fight of 1919 and said unionism must not be allowed to die. Alfred Wagan-

WALKER SEES DEPRESSION IN YEAR 1926-27

Tells Ill. Federation of Gloomy Future

(Special to The Daily Worker)

STREATOR, Ill., Sept. 13. — President John H. Walker of the Illinois State Federation of Labor in his report to the forty-fourth convention of the Illinois State Federation of Labor being held here brought out that immediately following the congressional elections he foresees the setting in of an industrial depression.

He points to the fact that many of the factories are now placing much of their produce in warehouses as there is a small demand for goods.

Six pages of his report are devoted to a denial of the charges made by Senator Carewer of Arkansas that Walker was paid to deliver the Illinois labor vote for Col. Frank L. Smith, winner of the republican nomination to the senate.

W. P. CAMPAIGN OPENS HERE ON SEPTEMBER 22ND

The whole question of the old parties and the workers in the coming elections will be gone into by the speakers. The congressional candidates, Sam Hammermark, Matilda Kalousek and Elizabeth Griffin will be present at the meeting. The admission charge is 15 cents.

CONFESSED SLAYERS' AFFIDAVIT PRESENTED FOR SACCO, VANZETTI

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DEDHAM, Mass., Sept. 13.—Two affidavits, one by Celestino Medeiros, convicted Wrentham, Mass., bank slayer and another by James F. Weeks, serving a life term in the Massachusetts state's prison for his part in the same crime today furnished a sudden turn in the plea for a new trial for Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti.

Medeiros, now awaiting execution in the Dedham jail, made direct admission of his connection with the South Braintree holdup, describing the operations of the gang involved and charging a certain gang of associates with the slayings. He refused, in the affidavit, to name the gang. He charged that he had been bilked of his share of the spoils and had been thwarted after having followed the accomplices to New York and then to Chicago.

Weeks, in his affidavit, said that Medeiros had told him of his connection with the South Braintree slaying while they were planning the Wrantham holdup.

Roy Tagney Jailed as Slayer of Landis Award Contractor

Roy Tagney, business agent for the Machinery, Safe Movers' and Riggers' Union Local No. 714, was arrested by Chicago police, after a raid on a south side apartment for the murder of Morris Markowitz, a Landis award contractor. Markowitz was murdered by an unknown assailant at his tool shanty at 37th St. and South Princeton Ave. August 3. Shortly after the murder police began a search for Tagney, declaring that Tagney was the murderer. Tagney denied he committed the crime and denied any knowledge of the attack on the open shop contractor, at the detective bureau.

The Employers' Association have spent many thousands of dollars in an attempt to locate Tagney.

CAL CHALLENGED TO OUST THREE MORE GRAFTERS

They Flourish Even in Alaskan Snows

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 13. — President Coolidge is severely criticized and blamed for the present widespread bootlegging, dope peddling and flourishing red-light districts in Alaskan cities, in a lengthy telegram sent by Basil Manly to Coolidge demanding that he remove two federal judges and a federal district attorney for their misadministration of Alaskan affairs.

Pres. Coolidge re-appointed Federal Judges Reed and Ritchie and District Attorney Shoup, alibo the senate judiciary committee disapproved of the re-appointment and pointed out that these men were wanted for crimes committed in various states. Judge Ritchie is a fugitive from justice in Utah.

These three were originally appointed by the red-baiting Attorney-General Harry M. Daugherty, who is now on trial in New York for accepting bribes to let the enemy alien estates illegally. While Daugherty was still in charge of the department before he was forced to "resign" because of the Teapot Dome scandal, these three had been the subjects of investigation.

When the question of re-appointment came up, the senate judiciary committee recommended their withdrawal so as to "avoid an expose" of Alaskan governmental conditions in the senate. One senator declared that the "conditions were too scandalous to be publicly discussed."

In spite of this opposition these three were re-appointed by Coolidge. They are considered excellent workers for the Coolidge-Mellon-Dawes combination in the open-shop republican party. This undoubtedly accounts for the staunch support they are now receiving from the Coolidge machine.

NEW FILIPINO MISSION TO COME TO UNITED STATES IN NOVEMBER TO WAGE FIGHT ON BACON BILL

MANILA, P. I., Sept. 13.—A new independence mission will leave the Philippine Islands in November. This new mission which is being sent by the supreme council of the islands plans to wage an active struggle against attempts to pass the Bacon bill thru the United States Congress in the 1926-27 session.

Governor-General Leonard A. Wood also plans a trip to Washington at about the same time.

TO SELL FIVE U. S. SHIPS AT $17,460,000 LOSS

Shipping Board Knifes Government Ownership

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 13. — Five passenger vessels in excellent condition are being offered by the United States shipping board to private steamship lines at a loss of $17,460,000 to the United States government. This does not include the sums that will have to be paid to the German owners of some of these vessels that were seized during the war.

The Leviathan which is being offered for $6,867,900 cost the government $11,342,030. $5,000,000 of this represents the actual cost of reconditioning. The George Washington is being offered for $2,146,300. It cost the government $4,309,049, $3,000,000 was spent on reconditioning. The Republic is offered for $2,240,800. It cost the government $4,442,287 of which $3,500,000 was for reconditioning. The President Roosevelt and the President Harding which were build by the shipping board at a cost of $6,000,000 apiece are to be sold for $1,787,000 apiece.

These appraisal values were placed on the ships by the shipping board and are now offered for sale with a guarantee of continued operation for a period of ten years. A minority of the shipping board opposed the sale of these five ships at these ridiculously low prices to private combines and are seeking to block attempts being made to sell the ships before their objections can be heard by congress.

NATIONAL AGREEMENT TURNED DOWN BY THE BRITISH MINE OWNERS

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Sept. 13.—Opposition to negotiations for the conclusion of a national agreement with the striking miners was registered by the district associations of the coal operators today, when the executive committee of the mining association met to consider reports from the various operators upon the proposal of Winston Churchill, chancellor of the exchequer, that negotiations be resumed with a national agreement as the objective.

The operators are standing out for district agreements, while the striking miners are demanding a national agreement. District agreements are desired by the owners as a measure to break up the union and its fighting solidarity.

Who Helps the British Miners?

DECLARATION.

MOSCOW.—(By Mail).—The Red International of Labor Unions has issued the following declaration on the British Miners' strike:

THE executive bureau of the Red International of Labor Unions affirms that the British miners' strike is at present passing thru its most critical period after four months of heroic struggle.

At home, in Britain, the mine owners, bourgeoisie and state are lined up against the miners. Come what may, the capitalists are determined to bring the miners to their knees. To this end the government is passing legislation for the introduction of the eight-hour working day for the workers below ground; government is threatening the trade unions with new laws that will render null and void the right to strike, and is thereby preparing to break up the trade union movement. Municipal relief for the strikers is being reduced and in many localities completely stopped; Joynson Hicks is carrying out mass arrests among the miners.

In order to carry disintegration into the united front of the miners, the coal owners for their part are submitting district agreements in the hope of smashing the courageous, resolute army of the miners. Having broken that army into separate sections, the mine owners will tighten up their pressure along the whole front thrown up by the miners, and this will be immediately made use of by the entire bourgeoisie to undertake an attack against the whole working class. The "compromise" memorandum of the bishops is one of the methods adopted by the government and the employers to shake the miners' ranks.

In face of this concentrated pressure of the bourgeoisie the behaviour of the working masses of the miners remains astonishingly militant. In spite of the fact that certain groups, including the miners' leaders, have

Chinese Masses Organize Their National Revolt

(Special Cable to The Daily Worker)

CANTON, China, Sept. 13.—The nationalist revolutionary movement of China is greatly developing since the occupation of Hunan province by the Cantonese armies. Mass organizations, labor unions, the Kuomintang party and the Communist party are growing rapidly.

The administration of the province is completely reorganized. Political inspectors are appointed for each district to superintend the activity of magistrates, administration and party affairs.

In view of the complaints of peasants of their oppression by the former rural militia, who were instruments in the hands of landowners, this militia has been dismissed and a new force is being organized.

Among other decrees published is one substituting the Canton flag for the old five-colored flag. All schools must dedicate a part of every Monday's sessions to the memory of Sun Yat Sen. School programs must contain an explanation of Sun Yat Senism and the national revolutionary movement.

Thruout the whole province popular meetings are arranged where Kuomintang speakers emphasize that the Kuomintang party does not intend to introduce Communism, but works jointly with the Communist party, the immediate problem of both parties being the same.

In connection with the victories of the northern expedition, great celebrations have taken place at Canton, with a demonstration staged by over 100,000 participants.

WOULD-BE SLAYER OF MUSSOLINI DENIES HE WAS SUPPLIED FUNDS

ROME, Sept. 13.—"Mine was a proletarian attempt," declared Gino Lucetti today when he was grilled by the police in an effort to prove that his attempted assassination of Premier Mussolini on Saturday was the result of a widespread plot.

"If I had been supplied with funds, as you suspect, I would have succeeded in my aim and also escaped," Lucetti boasted to the police.

Despite Lucetti's insistence that his act was that of an individual, the police continue to round up considerable numbers of anarchists and radicals.

SOMEBODY LIES ABOUT PRIMARY CAMPAIGN COST

Suspect Candidates Conceal Expenses

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13. —(FP)— While Pinchot and other standpatters are joining Sen. Reed of Pennsylvania in denouncing the "high cost" of senatorial primaries, the sworn statements of senatorial candidates, filed with the clerk of the senate, point to a very low cost.

Sen. Oddie of Nevada, an administration supporter, claims to have spent only $2,555 in his successful primary fight. Gooding of Idaho admits $1,850 spent. Williams of Missouri says his cost was $3,000.

L. B. Hanna, defeated Coolidge candidate against Sen. Nye in North Dakota, lists expenses of only $610, while Midbto, the independent candidate in the same race, spent $3.75.

In Oklahoma the democratic nominee, Elmer Thomas, spent $2,746, and Jack Walton, the loser, acknowledges $2,550 paid out.

President Coolidge and Sen. Butler, G. O. P. national chairman, are opposed to the primary election system, and attempted after the disclosures of million-dollar expenditures in the Pennsylvania senatorial race to make the facts of corruption an argument for a return to the convention system.

Slush Fund Collected by Open Shoppers to Fight Labor Measures

COHOES, N. Y., Sept. 13.—New York state employers organized in the Associated Industries, Inc., have collected a huge slush fund to defeat legislative measures favorable to labor, declared Joseph R. White, national organizer for United Textile Workers, to a mass meeting of Cohoes unionists.

Union representatives must appear at the hearings of the state industrial commission appointed to investigate the many laws proposed for and against labor in the last legislatures. Unions must state their cases to the commission to get any sort of action on the compensation bill and other measures backed by labor.

GERMAN PLUTE WHITEWASHING H. DAUGHERTY

Declares on Stand the Big Bribe Was Fee

BULLETIN.

NEW YORK, Sept. 13.—Richard Merton, German metal magnate, received $250,000 from the Socialist Suisse for his successful efforts in negotiating the return of $7,000,000 of assets of the American Metals company, held by the United States government.

• • •

NEW YORK, Sept. 13.—Richard Merton, German financier, so-called star government witness at the trial of Harry M. Daugherty, former attorney general, and Thomas W. Miller, former alien property custodian, charged with conspiracy, appeared virtually as a "white-wash" witness for the defense today under cross-examination.

"Did you have any reason to suspect that any government officials received part of the $441,000 retainer fee you paid John T. King for aiding your claim to the seized property of the American Metal company?" Col. William Rand, counsel for Miller, asked the former German army captain.

"I certainly did not," replied Merton emphatically.

"Did Col. Miller ever say anything to indicate he had any knowledge of the condition of your claim papers before they were filed?"

Had No Recollection.

"I haven't any recollection that he showed any knowledge." Merton replied after several evasive answers.

"Have you any knowledge that the attorney general knew the contents of the claim papers?"

"Not that I know of," answered Merton.

The witness related the "helping out" in arranging the claim papers by George Williams, of the alien property custodian's office as a "frank transaction." He said Williams made him rewrite his first papers submitted because they lacked certain substantial details.

Speading Up Fee.

He pictured the $391,004 given to King for "speeding up" the claim as a "fee," approximately five per cent of the $7,000,000 property wanted returned. Merton also explained $50,000 was given to King the time the claim was filed. The witness maintained that this "fee" was considered cheaper by him than the possible tax or fifteen per cent fee of lawyers.

Guaranteed Payment at Loss.

Merton testified he told Williams of the Swiss organization and the transfer that had been consummated from German to Swiss interests, he told him that the Swiss stockholders had been guaranteed payment of loss thru shares they would receive in American Metal company's assets held by the alien property custodian.

Picked Du Pont Hotel.

Merton said in reply to a question that the reason he picked the McAlpin Hotel as the place to talk with Colonel Miller in April, 1921, regarding means to be taken to effect the return of seized alien property was because he understood Miller was connected with the Du Pont family. The Du Ponts have a large interest in the McAlpin.

MEXICAN LAWS CONSIDER RIGHTS OF THE WORKERS

Lively Scrap Expected at A. F. of L. Meet

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13.—Reports persist that a group of delegates in the forthcoming convention of the American Federation of Labor will seek to force withdrawal of the A. F. of L. from the Pan-American Federation of Labor, on a pretext of economy but actually as a slap at the Mexican labor movement. A hot debate is in prospect.

With that situation in mind The Federated Press presents this week some extracts from the Mexican constitution of 1917, which is the work of the Mexican Regional Confederation of Labor and its allies, and is now under attack. That constitution differs from all others in the western hemisphere in one respect—it places the interest of the workers first. It is a working class instrument of self-emancipation. Rejection of affiliation with Mexican labor because of Mexican labor's identity with this constitution, made by and for the Mexican workers, may put the American labor movement in a strange position before the world.

Laws Relating to Labor.

Article 123 is labor's magna charta. It declares first of all that "The Congress and the state legislatures shall make laws relative to labor with due regard for the needs of each region of the Republic, and in conformity with the following principles, and these principles and laws shall govern the labor of skilled and unskilled workmen, employes, domestic servants and artisans, and in general every contract of labor.

"1. Eight hours shall be the maximum limit of a day's work.

"2. The maximum limit of night work shall be 7 hours. Unhealthy and dangerous occupations are forbidden to all women and to children under 16 years of age. Night work in factories is likewise forbidden to women and children under 16 years of age; nor shall they be employed in commercial establishments after 10 o'clock at night.

Hours For Child Labor.

"3. The maximum limit of a day's work for children over 12 and under 16 years of age shall be six hours. The work of children under 12 years of age shall not be made the subject of a contract.

"4. Every workman shall enjoy at least one day's rest for every six days' work."

Section 5 grants to working women three months' rest with pay preceding childbirth and to insure with pay after birth. Two half-hour periods for nursing the baby are granted for the ensuing months while nursing continues.

A Maximum Wage.

Section 6 provides that the minimum wage for a worker "shall be that considered sufficient, according to the conditions prevailing in the respective region, to satisfy the normal needs of the life of the workman, his education and his lawful pleasures, considering him as the head of a family. In all agricultural, commercial, manufacturing or mining enterprises the workmen shall have the right to participate in the profits." The determination of minimum wages and profit shares is to be made by special commissions to be appointed in each municipality, acting under the authority of a central conciliation board in each state.

Movie Actress Seeks to Find Out Where Her $1,500,000 Went

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 13.—The famous suit of Mary Miles Minter against Mrs. Charlotto Shelby, her mother, for an accounting of the $1,500,000 said to have been earned by the former screen star during her minority was recalled when J. Homer Reilly, father of the actress, filed a complaint in equity against Mrs. Shelby for a separate accounting of Miss Minter's huge salary.

The suit of Miss Minter against her mother is scheduled for trial next March.

Doheny Opposes the Cancellation of Lease

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13.—Edward L. Doheny, oil magnate, carried an appeal to the supreme court to prevent cancellation of his lease of the Elk Hills, California, naval oil reserve, and contracts for construction of a naval oil base at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, to be paid for with crude oil, a project involving the expenditure of the equivalent of $15,000,000. Doheny lost in the district and circuit courts.

TRADE UNION UNITY GAINING IN SPAIN AGAINST COMBINED FORCES OF S. P., ANARCHISTS AND POLICE

By A SPANISH WORKER.

MADRID (By Mail)—The national conference called originally for May 1, by the San Sebastian trade union federation to discuss the Spanish workers' movement for trade union unity, had to be postponed to August.

Now, the San Sebastian federation has once more been forced to postpone the conference. The police are holding up all mail in regard to the conference, have forbidden the Communist paper, "La Antorcha," to do any campaigning for the conference, and all sorts of violent suppression to obstruct the preliminary work necessary to the conference.

Discussion of adherence to the conference is not allowed to be heard in the trade unions by the reformist leaders.

Socialists Collaborate with Police.

The socialists are helping the police in their repression of the movement for unity by informing them of all Communist activity in the campaign.

The socialists now have a new opportunity to show their gratitude to the military dictatorship which expelled the Communists from all the workers' organizations of Viscaya. The socialist party and the police form a united front against the movement for trade union unity.

Persistent Struggle.

Notwithstanding, numerous organizations have favored and work for unity, in spite of the opposition of the Union General de Trabajadores, the central reformist organization, which has menaced with expulsion the trade unions that manifest adherence to the San Sebastian federation's call for conference.

The Confederation Nacional del Trabajo, the central anarchist organization, is also carrying on a violent campaign against unity.

The reformist leaders have even expelled union members who carry on propaganda favoring unity, distributing "La Antorcha," the Communist paper.

But the sentiment among the workers is for the conference of San Sebastian, and the campaign for the unity of the trade union movement is stronger each day.

Why not a small bundle of The DAILY WORKER sent to you regularly to take to your trade union meeting?

ENORMOUS PROFITS TAKEN BY LABOR BY GENERAL MOTORS CO., SHOWN BY WALL STREET JOURNAL

By LELAND OLDS, Federated Press.

Swollen fortunes, built up by capitalizing excess profits, are typically shown in a Wall Street Journal analysis of changes in the capital structure of General Motors Corp., which has just announced a 50% stock dividend. The purchaser of 100 shares of the original stock in 1911, if he exercised his various rights to subscribe to additional stock, has made a profit, including dividends, of $195,238 on an investment of $41,575.

A tidy 1,190 per cent, according to the journal's figures.

The original shares were first quoted on the stock exchange at $51.75 or $5,175 for 100 shares. In 1917 when the original New Jersey corporation was reorganized as a Delaware concern the owner of 100 shares received 500 shares of the new company in exchange for his holdings. In 1918 this stockholder could subscribe for 100 additional shares at $118 each, bringing the total shares he held to 600 by an additional investment of $11,800. His cash dividends up to that year had amounted to $18,500, providing him with plenty of money for stock purchases.

In 1920 the corporation added 15 shares to this investor's holdings by a 2½ per cent stock dividend, and then issued him 10 shares of no-par stock for each share in his possession. At this point he held 6,150 shares in place of his original 100 shares. The company then lot him buy 1,230 no-par shares at $20 a share, involving an additional investment of $24,600. It then issued two more 2½ per cent stock dividends.

7,753 Shares for 100.

Thus by the end of 1920 our original investor had put a total of $41,575 into the corporation and hold 7,753 no-par shares of the stock. His cash dividends so far had amounted to $32,736.

The last change in capital structure prior to the 1926 stock dividend was made in 1924, when General Motors issued one share of the present stock for each four shares then outstanding. Thus just prior to the 50 per cent dividend the original investor hold 1,238 shares of stock, for which he had paid $41,575. These shares had a market value of $225 each, so that the total market value of his stock was $436,050. His dividends to date total $100,860.

Fabulous Profit.

In the ten years 1916 to 1926 General Motors has made a profit of $482,864,299 with a plant which today is carried on the books at $290,370,705. In that period it has paid common stockholders $209,293,072 in cash dividends and has accumulated $246,262,441 in working capital, more than double the amount in its treasury in 1921.

The Same Elsewhere.

This picture of the way the rich get richer simply by holding their investments, while the workers labor to produce the wealth, might be duplicated in almost any important corporation. A Chicago Journal of Commerce article, entitled "1000 Per Cent Profit in Five Years" shows that 100 shares of Quaker Oats Co. common stock purchased for $7,300 in 1921 would now have a value of $74,000. In the meantime the company has issued four shares of no-par stock for each share of the original stock. The new shares have a market value of $155, equivalent to $740 a share for the old stock. In addition the company has paid cash dividends totaling $9,000, so that the total profit on the investment of $7,300 has been $75,700.

Biscuit Profits.

The Wall Street Journal gives a similar picture of how fortunes are made in a line one of these dividends recently declared by National Biscuit Co. According to the journal an investment of $11,600 in 500 shares of National Biscuit stock in 1900 would now be worth $315,000. If you had made such an investment your portion of the recent quarterly dividend of $1 plus 50 cents extra would be $5,250, which the journal thinks a very comfortable three-month rotnrn on an investment of $11,500.

'ETHYL IS BACK' TO FACE DAMAGE SUIT OF WORKER

NEW YORK, Sept. 13.—(FP)—Standard Oil company of New Jersey has a suit for $200,000 on its hands because a former worker at Bayonne claims he is the sufferer from his employment with tetra-ethyl lead. Henry Callis says that he is afflicted with a "serious disease of a nature not clearly established by medical science" as a result of his exposure to tetra-ethyl lead treated gasoline in September, 1924.

The worker says he has had to remain in bed since that time. Standard Oil company gave no warning of danger, provided no masks or gloves and did not have sufficient ventilation in the workplace.

Eleven Died.

Eleven workers in all are known to have died during various firms' experiments with tetra-ethyl lead gasoline. The scandalous list of dead and injured workers employed in the making of the supposedly "knock-proof" fuel finally brot a national conference under the United States surgeon-general and the ultimate promulgation of rules governing the manufacturing process.

May Poison Public.

Tetra-ethyl lead treated gasoline is now being made and sold generally. A Swiss scientist insists that widespread use of the fuel will mean the depositing of great quantities of lead dust on public highways and the possible poisoning of not only hundreds of thousands of workers but of the general population.

College Boy Scabbing Is Condemned by National Students' Conference

RICHMOND, Ind., Sept. 13.—"Be it resolved that this conference goes on record as against the practice of college students scabbing during industrial disputes." This resolution was passed unanimously at a conference of thirty young college students who have been spending their summer vacations as manual laborers in industry.

The conference, held at Earlham college, passed few other resolutions, being largely devoted to a discussion of the value of college students working in industry and what the various students could do in the coming year to establish closer contact between students and industrial workers.

Sixteen Colleges.

The students, both young men and women, represented 16 colleges and universities in the central west as well as two labor colleges—Brookwood and Commonwealth —and the Bryn Mawr summer school for workers in industry. With them were five young industrial workers, most of them working in organized trades and being members of their various unions, and several other active workers in the labor movement.

A committee was elected to carry the idea of the conference into the colleges next fall and to make plans for a larger conference next year to exchange ideas and experiences among those students who spend their vacation in industry. This was the first national student-in-industry conference and delegates came from as far west as Denver and as far east as New York.

REACTION IN CHINA SPLIT BY RIVALRIES

Japan Playing Her Own Game Against British

SHANGHAI, Sept. 13.—Although British marines have been landed at Hankow and the British in China are eager for intervention against the rising power of the Canton government, they admit that intervention is futile unless Japan and the United States participate.

Japan is in no hurry to aid the British, since Great Britain is her chief rival and a weakening of the British position leaves a freer field for Japanese trade, which Japan does not intend to lose by sharing in a British attack on China—not, at least, if she can help it.

Each Fears Rivals.

The United States is also in no haste to join in intervention, for fear that the Japanese would utilize their opportunity to send in enough forces to shut out America as well as the British. But the U. S., while claiming its neutrality, is watching the growth of the national revolution with great alarm.

The British are removing all nationals from the upper Yangtze region west of Hankow. The Japanese are strengthening their naval forces and Rear Admiral Araki has been sent to take command at Hankow of the Japanese units.

Cantonese Drive Onward.

There seems little likelihood that General Sun Chuan-fang will be able to check the Cantonese advance in the province of Kiangsi. Sun's commanders from Kiansi, Fukien and Chekiang provinces are in Shanghai to hold a council on the situation.

Sun has appealed to Wu Pei-fu for help, and the two claim that if they can reorganize Wu's scattered forces, they may together make an attack on Hankow to dislodge the Cantonese and recapture this industrially developed section of the rich Yangtze valley.

Marshal Chang Tso-lin, the Manchurian reactionary, is hastening to Peking to rally his troops against an expected attack from the Kuominchun army of Feng Yu-hsiang. The Kuominchun is again threatening the reactionaries from the northwest of Peking, and thus is diverting the forces of the reactionary allies from a concentrated counter-attack on the Cantonese to the south.

American Visitors to Soviet Union Ask Its Recognition by U. S.

NEW YORK, Sept. 13. — The delegation of American writers, educators, businessmen, churchmen and others headed by Sherwood Eddy, secretary for Asia of the national council of the Young Men's Christian Association, has returned to the United States after an extensive study of conditions in the Soviet Union, with the recommendation that America recognize the Soviet government.

This was the first American group to study from a capitalist viewpoint the economic, political, social and religious phases of life in the Soviet Union to determine the advisability of recognition of the Soviet government.

The commission admits that to the capitalist world Soviet government is decidedly objectionable, but points out that it has greatly benefited the masses of people and is one of the most stable governments in Europe.

Without passing on the merits of the Soviet form of government as a principle, the commission and its accompanying unofficial delegates recommend the recognition of the Soviet Union by the United States government. They state that the Soviet government permitted every access to institutions, industrial plants and governmental documents and data.

"Shoot to Kill" Is Police Order to Six Cops in Moron Hunt

Six Chicago policewomen have been assigned to the Hammersdale district with orders to "Shoot to kill" a man that has been lurking in this district preying on the women of the neighborhood. This action on the part of the police force was taken after a maid employed in the home of a wealthy plano manufacturer was assaulted about a block away from Mayor Dever's home.

Chicago within the past weeks has been forced to take drastic measures in an attempt to rid the city of morons that have been victimizing women in outlying parts of the city. The "curfew law," which provides that all young girls under 16 years of age must be in their homes by 10 o'clock in the evening, is one of the measures adopted.

Cigar Man Wounded in Hold-Up.

William G. Gerard, cigar store proprietor, was shot three times and probably fatally wounded in a revolver duel with two bandits who attempted to hold him up today. The bandits escaped, althe Gerard told police he believed one of them was wounded.

Mother of 7 Killed.

Mrs. Frances Schuler, 33, mother of seven children, was killed in front of six of them when an auto truck, piloted by one of the sons, on which the family was riding crashed into a post on the Dixie Highway.

Records Are Smashed By Industrial Gains in the Union of Soviet Republics

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

WALTER DURANTY, the Moscow correspondent of the New York Times, is getting worried about the conditions in the Union of Soviet Republics.

He is troubled by "the writing on the wall" of "clumsy peasant fingers" demanding "Give us goods!"

Yet Duranty admits that the Soviet officials are not as much troubled as he by the "assertiveness" of the peasantry. Duranty says:

"Stalin and his associates . . . do not ignore the growing clamor and do not, I believe, really regret the increased political consciousness and self-assertiveness of the peasants, embarrassing as it is at the present juncture. Considering that they have followed a policy of trying to educate and stimulate the peasants, it is quite illogical to suppose that they are unwilling to allow the expression of grievances which they know are genuine enough."

Duranty Worried.

Duranty is chiefly worried because "agricultural production has rapidly increased until now it has reached 90 per cent of pre-war at a general cost—which is an important point— not much higher than pre-war. Industrial production also improved satisfactorily enough, but— which is an even more important point—by the time the manufactured goods reach the peasant their cost is three to four times pre-war."

Thus the whole attack of the capitalist press has changed its front. The charge is no longer made that Soviet rule has plunged agriculture and industry into chaos from which neither can be extricated. That was the customary song of the anti-Soviet chorus. Duranty, a capitalist journalist friendly to the Soviet Union, now worries because agriculture is improving much more rapidly than industry, claiming that agriculture is making demands upon industry that the latter cannot meet. It was previously charged that everything was disintegrating under Soviet rule; now it is admitted that construction is going forward rapidly in both city and country, the latter a little bit more rapidly than the former. The only trouble is that the city-country teammates are not running abreast and pulling together to the best advantage.

But Duranty offers no encouragement to the czarist emigres in the western capitals of reaction, in Paris, Berlin and London. Instead of cheering up Soviet rule he pictures the peasants as saying:

"Hey, you comrades there in Moscow, don't forget that this is our country, too. When we were slaves to the czar or the landlord we were forced to suffer in silence, but this is a free country nowadays—you have said so, and you have made it so, and we have helped you and believed you—how we can say what we like, and we are saying it."

Their demand is for cheap goods, not cheap in quality but in price, and plenty in quantity. To answer that demand is the task of the city worker, who led the revolution to victory. How well they are succeeding is shown by statistics taken from the September, 1926 (this month) Russian Review, published by the Russian Information Bureau at Washington, D. C.

The Russian Review states:

"Industrial production in the Soviet Union registered big gains during the first half of the Soviet fiscal year, Oct. 1 to April 1, according to preliminary figures of the Supreme Economic Council. As compared with the same period of last year, production increased by 44.7 per cent.

"The average number of workers employed in industry increased 30.2 per cent and the average output per worker increased 11.1. Advances were particularly marked in the heavy industries."

Here are four big facts: (1) Production is increasing; (2) greater numbers of workers are being drawn into the industries; (3) the cost of production is falling; (4) marked gains are being shown in the heavy industries, the last to recover from the heavy blows of the world war, the civil wars and foreign intervention. The hopes and ambitions of the not long ago are even now coming to pass. But there are new problems.

The cement industry led the general increase, the output being 113 per cent greater than that of the same period last year.

The rubber industry increased 96.5 per cent and the output of cast iron gained 93.6 per cent.

The coal industry, which advanced very little last year, increased by 44.4 per cent during the period, with an output of 12,410,000 tons.

The tobacco industry increased 42.4 per cent, branches of the textile industry showed gains of from 37 to 46 per cent, the output of Martan steel increased by 62.2 per cent and of rolled iron by 71.4 per cent.

You may inquire as to where these production figures stand with relation to the pre-war output. What is the output of the industry under Soviet rule as compared to the output under the deposed czarist rule? Here are some of the figures:

The output of the paper industry advanced to nearly double the pre-war rate. The newspapers today have a far greater circulation than under czarism, books and pamphlets are being published in increasing quantities and illiteracy is being rapidly wiped out.

The linen industry has advanced to one and one-half times pre-war, and the match industry to one and a quarter times the figures for 1913.

The coal, oil, cement, textile and rubber industries each showed about 90 per cent of the pre-war output.

The most backward industry in the metal industry, the cast iron output for the period being 45.5 per cent of pre-war and the output of Martan steel 65 per cent. But this condition is rapidly mending, as is shown by the above figures for the current fiscal year.

The peasants looking toward Moscow, as Duranty points out, learn that industrial production in April (this year) broke all monthly records since the Bolshevik revolution. April production was 3.26 per cent greater than that of March, and 50 per cent greater than that of April, 1925. This is the first time in four years that the April output exceeded that of March. The increased output was accomplished despite a decrease in the workers employed by 1.3 per cent as compared with March.

As compared with March nearly all the principle industries showed increases in April, ranging in the case of the cement industry as high as 17 per cent. New records for monthly production were established in the oil, cement and other industries.

Another encouraging indication is the fact that the Soviet Union continues to take up the production of necessities that would otherwise have to be imported. Thus the Putilov Steel Works in Leningrad are being re-equipped in part for the purpose of turning out spare parts for Fordson tractors.

At the present time the number of Fordson tractors working in the Soviet Union is about 30,700, where there were none before the war. It is expected by the end of the proposed five-year period their number will increase to 77,500. This will nearly quadruple the present number.

The actual figures showing that socialized industry in the Soviet Union is winning the war against private industry, over which there has been so much argument, are as follows:

GROSS OUTPUT IN THOUSANDS OF GOLD RUBLES.

| | 1925-26 | 1924-25 | Percentage of Increase |
|---|---|---|---|
| Large Scale Industry: | | | |
| State | 3,346,822 | 4,915,404 | 44.5 |
| Co-operative | 304,481 | 394,400 | 93.0 |
| Private | 196,884 | 252,247 | 28.2 |
| Total Large Scale Industry | 5,746,427 | 5,860,312 | 48.4 |
| Small Industry: | | | |
| State and Co-operative | 200,802 | 232,234 | 16.0 |
| Private | 1,468,140 | 1,703,000 | 16.00 |
| Total Small Industry | 1,668,381 | 1,935,234 | 16.0 |
| Grand total | 5,414,773 | 7,495,507 | 38.4 |

The relation between the nationalized and non-nationalized industries is expressed by the following figures (in thousands of gold rubles):

| | 1925-26 | Percentage | 1924-25 | Percentage |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Nationalized | 3,750,970 | 69.3 | 5,546,900 | 74 |
| Non-Nationalized | 1,665,806 | 30.7 | 1,958,297 | 26 |
| Total | 5,414,776 | 100 | 7,495,507 | 100 |

Thus about three-quarters of the industrial output of 1924-25 were produced in state or co-operative enterprises.

Thus the workers and peasants, arm in arm in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, are well in the lead.

MILL STRIKERS MARCH IN HUGE DEMONSTRATION

knecht, who heads the Passaic strikers' relief committee that has been fetching thousands of dollars a week from the rest of the labor movement and conducting kitchens and children' camps teid of the long struggle that had built a new big local into the official labor movement and said the Passaic strikers would aid the union in all efforts to organize the million workers in the textile industry.

Applaud Weisbord.

Wild applause greeted the name of Albert Weisbord who resigned as the price exacted by the United Textile Workers' Union for its entry into the fight. The cheering came when Gustav Deak, the 22-year old Botany woolen worker, who is now president of the new local union, lauded the "splendid devotion and leadership of our former organizer, Albert Weisbord," and continuing said: "For seven months he led the strike and the fact that we are able to join the United Textile Workers of America with unbroken spirit and united rank is a monument to him, and in his withdrawal we have additional proof of Albert Weisbord's unselfish devotion to our cause and to the cause of organized labor."

McMahon Criticsi.

President McMahon did not respond in similar vein. He lectured the strikers on the propaganda that had been employed and said that he disapproved of the methods and in criticizing the mill owners and the police of the town. He argued that the strikers could not expect their leaders and their opponents to get together and eit at the same time in mutual recognition if criticisms that he charged were of a scurrilous nature were continued. He implied that a different leadership had come into the strike but said that the United Textile Workers was determined to win recognition for the union. Relief activities will continue to be carried on by the old Passaic strikers' relief committee.

Floods in Missouri.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Sept. 13—With telegraph and telephone communication to East Central Kansas points badly crippled or demolished and trains running hours behind schedule or tied up by washouts, the flood area around Burlington, Iola, Emporia and Neosho Falls, Kan., assumed a more serious aspect.

At Iola, south of Emporia on the Neosho river, water was rising and grave fears were felt for villages and towns along the river.

RAID ROOMS OF PEASANT MEMBER OF POLISH SEJM

Is Blow at Amnesty Work of Committee

(Special Cable to Polish Section International Labor Defense.)

By STANISLAW BALLIN, Deputy

WARSAW, Poland, Sept. 13.—The police invaded the apartment of Deputy Ballin, president of the inter-party committee for amnesty for political prisoners in Poland and, after confiscating documents and records of the committee found in the rooms, arrested seven persons who were there quite by accident, having no connection with the committee.

Protest Parliament.

Deputies of the Independent Peasants' Party immediately protested in the Sejm that the raids on Deputy Ballin's quarters had been made without the consent of the president of the Sejm and therefore violated the law of parliamentary immunity.

The evident purpose of the raids is to make impossible the work of the inter-party committee which is an alliance of the left parties in an effort to release the hundreds of political prisoners now in Polish prisons. The committee asks the workers of the world to protest against the most recent excesses of the reactionary Polish government.

6,000 Political Prisoners.

There are some 6,000 political prisoners in Poland. The Pilsudski government, which came into power thru a military coup in May this year refused to grant amnesty to these prisoners. This act raised a protest thruout the country that resulted in the formation of an inter-party committee in the Polish Sejm. Deputy Ballin, a member of the Independent Peasant's Party is the chairman of the committee.

Pangalos Under Arrest; Machine Guns on Guard To Uphold New Dictator of Greek Ruling Clasess

At the right is a picture of former Premier Pangalos being landed at Athens following his arrest by the new dictator Condylis. Above is a machine-gun detachment of troops whose loyalty to this or that military chief depends on promises of higher-ups. The so-called "revolution" in Greece simply means that one fascist dictator has been substituted for another.

ELECTION IN SPAIN A ONE-SIDED AFFAIR

You Vote for Dictator or Not at All

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PARIS, Sept. 13.—A so-called plebiscite is going on in Spain, with the object of giving the dictatorship of Primo de Rivera some semblance of popular support. The rules of the election prove how ridiculous it would be to expect anything else, in view of the fact that the catholic church, here a part of the state, is using its full influence to see that Rivera gets the support of its members.

A One-Way Vote.

There is only one vote allowed. Ton must vote for endorsement of the government. You cannot vote against it. Naturally, the result will be overwhelmingly for the dictator. The capitalist news services, which state that Rivera is "doing everything possible to obtain a free expression of the people," are simply lying.

The methods of the election shew how little it can be a "free expression." The government is posting troops at all election booths to see that no opposition votes are cast. The catholic church has thrown its whole strength behind the dictator. The women, allowed to vote for the first time, and most thoroughly controlled by the church of any section of the people, are under instructions to go to the polls and vote for the government.

Church Instruction to Aid Monarchy.

One of Primo de Rivera's officials proves this by remarking:

"Today is not the real day of the voting. The people are still unaware that they should vote. The priests will see to it to morrow morning, for from every pulpit the public will be summoned to go to the polls and vote for king and country."

By this maneuver it is hoped to strengthen the monarchy, since the vote for Rivera will be taken as a vote for king Alfonso, against whom there is rising a strong sentiment of republicanism.

Workers of Ecuador Slaves of Wall Street

GUAYAQUIL, Sept. 13.—In a manifesto published in the socialist weekly El Faro, the Labor Confederation of Guayas, Ecuador, explains to the workers of this republic how they are being enslaved by the Wall Street banks thru a process of money inflation. Controlling the monetary system of Ecuador, the Wall Street bankers, says the Labor Confederation, have been able to inflate the currency and then force loan after loan upon the government. In return for these credits the foreigners have received valuable concessions.

The government recently put in office has been restricting these operations, and a panic has followed, with almost daily bank failures. The socialist members of the Guayas town council, elected by the workers, have determined that a sub-committee of the council be created to watch over price manipulations that have robbed the workers of the purchasing power of their wages.

Who Helps the British Miners?

wavered, the majority of the strikers turned down the bishops' memorandum. Thereby the miners of Britain have given us all to understand that they will remain in their old positions: "Not a penny off the pay, not a second on the day! National agreements only!"

BUT, despite the furious attack of the entire British bourgeoisie, victory would be secured for the miners were the trade union movement of Britain and the whole world to actively support the strikers. Yet in this direction we are witnessing a treachery and open sabotage on the part of the General Council, the Amsterdam International and its affiliated body, I. a., on the part of organizations designed to defend the interests of the working class that is incredible in the history of the trade union movement.

No one any longer doubts but that the General Council broke the general strike at the very peak of that movement. No matter what excuses the General Council may make to the working class thruout the world, it cannot hide the fact that from the very beginning inside the General Council they were against the general strike and against the miners. It was only under tremendous pressure from the masses that the General Council adopted the miners' program of demands.

BUT as soon as it became plain that the carrying out of that program of demands would require a determined and daring struggle along the whole front of the labor movement the General Council shamefully sold the working class by taking their stand with the bourgeoisie, and proposed to the miners that they agree to the notorious Samuel memorandum, which at bottom stood for the salvation of capitalism at the expense of the working class, at the expense of wage reductions for the miners.

By turning down that memorandum the mass of the mine workers condemned the General Council leaders. In order to escape being just condemned, the General Council, by means of hypocritical promises to help the miners, moved that the Miners' Federation postpone the conference of executives appointed for June 25. Having got their way in this matter, the General Council forthwith turned front against the miners.

IN the name of the General Council, Bromley published an article in which he tried to prove that for all the General Council's treachery the people to blame were the miners, and that the General Council had never made any promise to support the miners' program of demands.

A still more manifest instance of the General Council's treachery we see in the last meeting of the Anglo-Russian committee in Paris. As the resolution adopted here by the Soviet Central Council of Trade Unions' plenum states, the British delegation "refused to go into the question of the miners."

AT a moment when an army of workers over a million strong were holding out against the incredible pressure of the united employers in splits of all threats, at a moment when distress among the three millions of the mine working masses had reached its highest point, the General Council refused to consider the question of helping the heroic fighters in Britain. Such a step is to be found nowhere in the history of the working classes' strike struggles.

No less treacherous is the behavior of the Amsterdam International and its affiliated bodies. Like the General Council, it, too, immediately put a stop to the assistance for the strikers that had been begun as soon as it knew the general strike had been called off. Like the General Council, the Amsterdam International isolated itself from the miners and tried to isolate the latter from the rest of the working class. But the miners' strike continued and the need for help grew. And it is from this need that the Amsterdam International and its affiliated organizations want to extract the maximmm material advantages.

Amstardam "nobly" proposed giving a loan, but demanded certain material securities for this loan from the miners. The Dutch Trade Union Federation, headed by the "radical" Stenhuis, is demanding 4 per cent for the loan, whilst the General Federation of German Trade Unions, headed by Leipart and Sassenbach, whose business acumen is higher, is demanding 11 per cent.

That is the way Amsterdam and its henchmen want to secure the prosperity of their funds by drawing on the blood of the miners out on strike, their funds being dearer to them than the interests of the British miners, than the interests of the spearhead of the working class.

Th majority of the international trade secretariats have shewn themselves no better in this strike. The miners' International has most outrageously sabotaged all support whatsoever of the miners.

Husemen, the president of the German miners, the most powerful section of the miners' international, has concluded an agreement with the German mine owners, Britain's chief coal competitors on the continent, with a view to making the most out of the British strike.

From Germany more than four and one-half million tons of coal have been imported into Britain. The British transport workers and railway men, as well as those on the continent, are transporting such coal into the European ports and bringing it over for British industry.

THE striking miners are thus surrounded by a close cordon consisting of the sabotage of the General Council and the Amsterdam International and its affiliated organizations, on the one hand, while on the other it is faced with the solid front of the united capitalists and bourgeoisie of Britain and the whole world.

Only these sections affiliated to the Red International of Leber Unions have fully carried out to the end their duty of international class solidarity. With unexampled enthusiasm, the revolutionary unions of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics responded to the British miners' struggle by sending them a large measure of assistance to the amount of over four and one-half million roubles.

The revolutionary unions of France and Czecho-Slovakia and the revolutionary working masses of other countries have given what they can of their scanty resources to help the strikers. It is only from the Red International of Labor Unions, its affiliated bodies, and all honest workers that the British miners have met with moral and material support. That support they will have right to the end.

THE executive bureau of the Red International of Labor Unions appeals to all its organizations and to the whole international proletariat steadily to continue the collection of funds.

The British miners are fighting in the forward positions of the working class. The economic significance behind this tremendous struggle is that of struggle against the feudal organization of industry. From the general class point of view the British miners' struggle represents a reflection of the pressure of capital which is threatening to go over to the general offensive not only in Britain but thruout the whole world. And any such offensive will mean not only a worsening of working conditions but also efforts to smash the entire trade union movement, will signify a strengthening of the reaction and a threat of fresh wars.

With their blood and with their need the British miners are advocating and defending the interests of the world proletariat. One and all, help the striking miners!

EXECUTIVE BUREAU OF THE RED INTERNATIONAL OF LABOR UNIONS.

Aged Civil Service Employes Complain Pensions Withheld

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13. —(FP)— Bitter complaint by aged civil service employes, because they have not yet received the increase in their pensions allowed by congress five months ago, has been echoed in the local press. In response, Secretary Work has issued a statement claiming that already 3,126 individuals have received their increased pensions.

There remain 1,331 other pensioners whose claims Hyes not been adjusted, while Work admits that several hundred more are part-way thru the red-tape process, and many are still waiting to be taken up.

The increased pension rate applies only from July 1, and affects 10,000 federal employes who have already retired.

DUCE RATTLES FASCIST SWORD IN ROME TALK

Threatens France in a Speech

ROME, Sept. 13.—Using as his text the unsuccessful attempt made to assassinate him with a bomb by an individual terrorist who had come from France, Premier Mussolini delivered a speech from the balcony of the Chigi Palace, in which he used very undiplomatic language in speaking of the neighboring republic.

Another Threat.

"We must put a stop to certain culpable tiresome conditions which we tolerate outside our own frontiers," said the Duce. "We would advise responsible governments to take note of this, because otherwise their friendly relations with the Italian people might become compromised."

Meant France.

This referred directly to France, a fact which none of the thousands of fascists who heard his speech overlooked. There is even talk in the press of Italy demanding of France the right to extradite all anti-fascist Italians living in France.

This speech of Mussolini can only be considered another sword-rattling demonstration to raise the nationalist pitch of the fascist followers. There can certainly be no desire on the part of Mussolini for war with France at this time. All other things equal, the French army could over-run Italy in short order. International complications would, however, make this a decidedly unfruitful thing for France to do. Knowing this, Mussolini makes his arregant threats and boosts his stock among Italian militarists free of charge.

Reactionary Chinese General Accused of Suppressing Unionism

PEKING, Sept. 13.—The People's Tribune, organ of the Chinese nationalist movement, which is supported by the radical government in Canton and the Feng forces northwest of Peking, has protested to Marshal Sun Chuanfang, military commander in Shanghai, against his suppression of trade unions. Sun has been a lieutenant of Marshall Wu Pei-fu, one of the two militarist dictators who control central and northern China, and who are favored by the American, British, French and Japanese.

"Recently," says the Tribune, "there has been in Shanghai and other places a reactionary suppression of popular rights. Public organizations, particularly labor organizations, have been closed down and public expression suppressed. In this the usual pretext of the exactions are employed, that it is done in the interest of public order.

"In acting in this manner Marshal Sun is acting contrary to the best interests of China. Public organizations and particularly labor unions are schools of democracy for the masses. Foreigners here may refer contemptuously to the incompetence of the Chinese of the art of democratic govarnment, and at the same time rage against the "dictatorship of the mob" expressed in the action of labor unions.

"They forget that the masses in other, democratic, countries acquired their knowledge of public administration precisely thru their trade unions and benefit societies, the right for existence of which they had to fight for as bitterly as the Chinese workers are fighting today."

French Labor Unions Find They Must Fight the Western Electric

PARIS, Sept. 13.—Vigorous protest has been made to the French public by the General Confederation of Labor of France against the proposal that the publicly owned telephone service should be taken over by the International Western Electric Corporation, which is backed by the Morgan banking group and is the European end of the General Electric trust.

The bankers' plan was that the French treasury should get a cash loan in Wall Street, in security for which a French telephone monopoly would be offered. The International Western Electric would organize two corporations—the International Telegraph and Telephone and the International Standard Electric—to handle the operating and the manufacturing ends of the business.

Western Electric has begun a widespread propaganda in France in support of this scheme. The national trade union center denounces it as dishonorable and dangerous to the nation that so essential a service should be taken from the hands of the government.

Spanish Officer Gets Life in Court-Martial

MADRID, Sept. 13. — The court-martial of officers of the artillery corps who participated in the recent uprising against the Spanish government opened at Corcuna today.

The prosecutor demanded life imprisonment with hall and chain for Col. Francisco Corenso, one of the artillery leaders. Three months suspension without pay was asked for soldiers of the artillery arrested.

THE CHILDREN'S MOVEMENT

Resolution of the Org.-Bureau of the E. C. C. I. on the Communist Children's Movement.

The Communist children's movement which developed in most of the large countries of Europe and America, and in the Soviet Union and also the Orient, is of the most importance to the Communist parties from the viewpoint of the training of a new revolutionary generation living under post-war conditions. For the Communist Parties the Communist children's movement is a question of the revolutionary cadres of the future. In addition the uniting of the active children under the Communist leadership offers the possibility of carrying the class struggle into the school, and thus in the struggle against the ideology of the bourgeois school, developing proletarian class consciousness in the masses of workers children. For this reason the Communist parties of all countries must devote particular attention to this field of work and aid the Young Communist Leagues to unite broad masses of toilers' children and train them in a Communist spirit.

2. The Communist Party directs the Communist children's movement thru the Y. C. L., which is able to assign to this work young forces close to the children, and which already possesses considerable experience on this field.

The organization bureau of the E. C. C. I. considers correct the organizational basis of the Communist children's movement laid down at the last session of the enlarged executive of the Y. C. L. (nuclei in the schools, attended by the children, and in the factories where children work; development of the most extensive initiative from below and firm direction from above). The transition from the present narrowly exclusive work within the organization to mass activity for the winning of the unorganized children, as well as those at present belonging to opponent organizations, must be the chief task in the current activity of the Communist children's movement. The mass work must be based upon concrete children's demands on the field of the school struggle and for the betterment of the material situation of the children. The combination of these concrete children's demands with the general proletarian demands, and the support of the children by the proletarian anti organizations are indispensable conditions for the success of this whole work.

3. The organization bureau of the E. C. C. I. records that the attention thus far devoted by most Communist parties to questions of the Communist children's movement has been utterly inadequate. It calls upon all the sections of the comintern to remedy this shortcoming in the immediate future. This attention, and the support to the Y. C. L. in its work among the children, must take on the following concrete forms:

(a) A systematic supervision of the work of the Y. C. L. among the children, by discussion of the questions of the Communist children's movement in the party executives (from bottom to top), special conferences of party members (particularly of teachers), party conferences with suggestions as to practical ways and means for the support of this activity.

(b) Stressing in our propaganda the importance and necessity of extensive work for the Communist training of the children; taking Communist children into the Communist children's organizations, printing in the press of articles by well-known party functionaries, special columns devoted to the Communist children's movement, publication of children's letters, etc.

(c) Assigning of party forces for work on this field primarily in the directing organs of the children's movement (in the children's bureau, children's commission, children's committees of the Y. C. L. committees).

(d) The training of active workers for the Communist children's movement by means of introducing questions of Communist children's work into the program of the party schools, and thru the opening of short-term special courses (district and central) for the preparation of Communist children's movement leaders from among the active members of the Y. C. L.

(e) Questions of the misery, homelessness, exploitation and cheuvinist training of the children should be raised by Communist parliamentary fractions, trade unions fractions, and fractions in the parent-teacher and similar organizations.

(f) Propaganda regarding the success of the Communist children's movement in the Soviet Union, and assistance in establishing contact between the children of capitalist countries and those of the Soviet Union, in conjunction with the general campaign on behalf of the Soviet Union.

(g) Material support to the activity of the Communist children's organizations by setting aside a definite percentage of the regular membership dues or of special assessments and collections. Money at the disposal of the Children's League should be applied to the publication of literature, support of children's newspapers and periodicals, and training maintenance of the chief active members (courses, conferences, discussions), and for the initiation of various mass campaigns (organization bureau of the E. C. C. I. is of the opinion that the Communist parties of those countries in which Communist children's organizations already exist, must, in the immediate future, get reports from the Y. C. L. on the status of this work and on their part adopt a series of practical measures for the indication outlined above.

5. In those countries in which there is as yet no children's organization, or in which it is still very weak (Poland, Czecho-Slovekia, Austria, Holland, Belgium, Italy, etc.), it is necessary that the Communist parties take all possible measures for the most rapid development of this work.

Cook's Telegram.

After the strike of the miners had been under way for some weeks, the International Workers' Aid received the following cablegram from A. J. Cook, secretary of the British Miners' Union:

"On behalf British miners, hearty thanks I. W. A. Collecting money is great assistance. This action unites workers in their opposition against great capitalists' offensive. British miners defeat will be followed by defeat of workers in every country. Therefore miners of Britain must not ha defeated. We appeal for further assistance. Trouble reached acute stage against united forces of British government and capitalists. Children suffer most under trouble. I. W. A. has been most helpful. We are using your funds to feed our children. They send you everlasting thanks. Our victory will ha victory for all workers of the world.

"A. J. Cook."

Upon receipt of this cablegram, the International Workers' Aid immediately doubled its efforts for funds for the British miners. It realized, however that its unassisted effort would not result in raising such aid as the British miners have a right to expect from the American labor movement and it therefore sent the following telegram to the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, asking it to take up the question of British Miners' Relief:

Letter to President Green.

June 12, 1926.

"Wm. Green, President,
"Executive Council,
"American Federation of Labor,
"Washington, D. C.

"International Workers' Aid thru its international organization and Secretary Cook of the British Miners' Union has received an urgent request to initiate a campaign in the United States for relief funds for the British miners. The International Workers' Aid has compiled immediately and will do all in its power to support the splendid struggle of the million striking miners thru rushing relief funds to them. It has already forwarded the first thousand dollars. We urge that the executive council of the American Federation of Labor come to the aid of the miners by issuing a call to all local unions, central bodies, and internationals to make contributions sending them if desired thru the American Federation of Labor. We will be glad to co-operate in such a campaign. Realizing that organized labor movement of this country can be put solidly behind the fight of the British miners thru your action we urge you to help them win under the slogan, 'Not a Penny Off, Not a Minute On'.

"International Workers' Aid
"Bishop William Montgomery Brown,
"Chairmen,
"Fred G. Biedenkepp, Secretary."

The executive council of the American Federation of Labor took no action until four or five weeks later when it finally sent a circular letter to the local unions asking them to aid the British miners, but made no organized effort to raise funds.

Aided Strikers From the Beginning.

Now, nearly four months after the strike began, the American Federation of Labor has finally been induced thru the dilatation of the British miners to take active steps to raise funds for the miners' strike. In contrast, the International Workers' Aid has carried on an extensive campaign from the very beginning in an effort to aid the miners in their splendid struggle.

We repeat, under these circumstances, it comes with ill grace from the Central Trades and Labor Council of New York which for nearly four months has ignored the British miners' strike to now make an attack upon an organization which has been aiding the miners from the beginning.

Even so, the International Workers' Aid welcomes the fact that at last the American Federation of Labor is really doing something to help the British miners. It will support all the strength of its organization the effort of the British miners' delegation to raise funds for the relief of the strikers.

Many Unorganized.

At the same time, it calls attention to the fact that there are millions of workers who are not organized in the trade union movement of this country who are not reached thru the trade union organization and that organized workers will aid the British miners in their situation if this situation of the miners is called to their attention. While lending every aid to the British miners' delegation to collect funds thru the trade union movement, it will at the same time continue in its work among the unorganized workers to raise money for the striking miners.

NEW YORK WOMEN SEEK TO RAISE MORE FUNDS FOR PASSAIC CHILDREN

NEW YORK, Sept. 13.—"Children of the Passaic strike" will be the subject of speeches by Elizabath Gurley Flynn, Leona Smith, Jeanetta Stuart Poynta, and several women strikers at a big open air meeting on Saturday evening, Sept. 18, at 110 Street and 5th Ave.

More than 1,000 children have been fed daily at the kitchens maintained by the United Council of Working class Housewives with the help of the United Women Conference in Passaic. A new kitchen must be opened soon to replace that at the playground which has just been closed. Funds are needed to carry on this work. Whether the strikers will attain the victory which now seems within reach, depends on the continued feeding of the children. If the children are left to starve, the strikers will be forced back into the mills.

Contributions for the childrens' kitchens should he sent to the United Council of Working Class Housewives, 80 E. 11th St. Room 436.

THE INTERNATIONAL WORKERS' AID ANSWERS ATTACK OF THE NEW YORK CENTRAL TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL

The International Workers' Aid in the following statement answers the vicious attack of the New York Central Trades and Labor Council on the I. W. A. for its activities in behalf of the striking British coal miners:

I. W. A. Answer

The Central Trades and Labor Council of New York has sent a letter to the delegates to that body attacking the International Workers' Aid for its collection of funds for the striking British miners. It is the opinion of the International Workers' Aid that such action comes with ill grace from the Central Trades and Labor Council in view of the record in regard to the question of support of the British Miners' Strike.

The International Workers' Aid is the American section of the Workers' International Relief, international organization thru which hundreds of thousands of dollars have been sent for the relief of the British miners.

MIN THE YOUNG WORKERS

CONDUCTED BY THE YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE

A SHORT STORY RAH, RAH BOYS OF COLLEGE LIFE

(Third Installment.)

A CITY living for the sons of the rich. The news of the world gives way to commencement day in the press. Not news of new scientists that are graduating with high honors, not news about professors' results of the year, but news about the football team, about the fifty-yard dash, about the rubber magnate who came all the way from his summer estate in Florida to be with his son at commencement.

A whole state is in the throes of a strike. Men and women are beaten down, children are starving. The news is silent on this.

A rich man's son won the football game for a rich man's school. Two columns in the daily press.

A country is on the verge of revolt. That's not worth printing.

A rich man's son pulls a funny stunt during class day. An entire column and a picture on the back page.

Two working girls are violated on a state road and they mention the names of a couple of students. Suppress it! Bleckmail!

The daughters of the rich weave a daisy chain and march thru their campus. Every paper in the country carries the picture and a story.

It is late at night. There is a sudden drunken singing on the streets, rioting, wild laughter. The city stirs in its sleep and smiles—"Those college boys. They are such a happy bunch."

It is late at night and the factories of the college town blink at the moon with their wan yellow lights. They are filled with children and young people doing hard and dangerous work, wearing their bones out to lay up a fortune that the owners might send their sons and daughters to college. It is the youth blood of these young people and children that fills the fat money purses of the owners. It is their blood that sends the owners to college. It is their blood that stains the wine and buys the champagne with which the rich man's son celebrates his commencement night. It is their blood that keeps him young just like it was the blood of the shrunken little street sweeper that flushed and filled the cheeks of the class of '81.

WORKERS WARNED OF VICIOUS OPEN SHOP CAMPAIGN

New York Commercial Issues War Cry

"Wherever possible, managements should take this opportunity to inaugurate the open shop," cries the New York Commercial, mouthpiece of the eastern financial interests, in an editorial July 19.

The importance to labor of this declaration of war demands its publication in full:

"Now is the Time to Open Shop."

"The immediate outlook is for a decided increase in the number and importance of labor disturbances. During the coming few months there will be an increasing number of strikes, and the number of demands for higher wages or shorter hours will be considerably enlarged. Evidence of this increase is even now visible, but today's visibility will prove, in our opinion, only the start to greater proportions that will probably reach their peak in September or October.

Caution Is Urged.

"In some cases or where particular conditions prevail it would not be wise for managements to precipitate open shop acceptance directly out of a clear, blue union sky. In a great many other cases, however, a demand for advanced wages or the threat of a strike would be all the justification needed to throw overboard the adherence to unionism and inaugurate the open-shop American plan.

Denounces Union Shop.

"Totally disregarding the merits of the open-shop system and the utter lack of merit of the closed shop, such action at this time would be backed by the fact that the status of the employed is better today then at any time since the slump of 1920; that the decline in commodity prices since the first of the year has more than neutralized the slight upward trend in living costs, and that the average number of hours worked and the average weekly earnings have been higher this year than at any time since 1922. All of which means that demands for advanced wages or decreased hours of work are entirely out of place at this time. That such demands will be made, however, abundant evidence indicates.

"That wherever possible managements should take this opportunity to inaugurate the open shop is also unquestioned by every one having at heart the welfare of American industry."—New York Commercial, July 19, 1926.

200 Italians Caught on Way Into Canada

HALIFAX, N. S., Sept. 13. — Canadian authorities have balked an attempt to smuggle about 200 Italians into Canada, it became known today with the arrival of the Italian steamer Dori.

Immigretion officials co-operating with the royal mounted police took the Italian immigrants into custody and seized the ship's papers. The immigrants, all of whom had paid heavily to be smuggled into Canada, had all been landed at Mill Cove, on St. Margaret's Bay, Nova Scotia.

De Rivera Declares Mutineers Will Be Severely Punished

MADRID, Sept. 13. — "The leaders of the rebellion are going to be punished severely," says Dictator Primo de Rivera, thus giving a different angle on the matter of punishment of the military mutineers, whom last week it was rumored the king had prevented de Rivera from excessively punishing.

Regarding the establishing of a parliamentary democracy in government, de Rivera is equally hard-boiled. He says:

"A parliamentary, democratic government may come eventually hut there is still much to do before the people are ready for it."

The "patriotic union" which is dragging out reluctant electors to force a vote supporting the government in the plebiscite now going on, reports that 139.541 "votes" were cast in the first two days. Rivera, who has arranged the rules of the game so that no votes can he cast against the government, claims a "great success."

DISCUSS LABOR PARTY QUESTION IN CONNECTICUT

Resolution Presented at State Convention

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DANBURY, Conn., Sept. 12.—The resolution for a labor party, introduced by the painters' locals of New Haven and supported by painters and other unions from all over the state, stirred the state convention of the American Federation of Labor.

Speak for Labor Party.

Morris Rubinsky of New Hevan, George Moffit of Stamford and John Vanlatly of New Britain led the fight for the adoption of the resolution. The speakers pointed out in a very clear way the need of an independent political party of the workers. It was pointed out by one delegate after another than right in the state of Connecticut the power of the government headed by both republican and democratic parties was used to break strikes by issuing sweeping injunctions.

In Willimantic it was shown an injunction crippled a strike that was very promising in the beginning. The famous case of the railroad strike, that of conviction of Schleifar was also recalled. The speakers also spoke of the infamous Danbury hatters decision.

Wire Pulling.

It was clear in the beginning that the resolution would have much support from the delegates when the old guard got on the job and began to pull the wires. The boogie man of Communism was immediately dragged out on the scene.

President O'Mera stated that he will fight any attempt at political action. O'Mera then charged that the whole scheme of the labor party was worked out by the Communists. Many of the trade union delegates who signed the resolution stated that they were not members of any political party and tha charge made by O'Mara is obviously not true.

In a Tight Fix.

O'Mera was in a very tight fix and had to lean on socialists for support. O'Mara stated that the socialist leaders such as Norman Thomas, when questioned by him at the lecture in New Heven, stated that it is industrial and not political action which is important, and that such of this type are welcome in the federation and not the Communists, who want independent political action. However, in spite of the treacherous act of the socialist party officials many socialist delegates voted for the resolution. The fraternal delegate of the socialist party had nothing to say.

Milwaukee Union to Levy Assessment for British Mine Strike

By GREGORY BRODONICH

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Sept. 13.—The Hod Carriers', Building and Laborers' Union, Local 113, are going to help the heroic British mine strikers, in spite of their own bad circumstances, and have carried a motion to assess each member 50 cents. A good spirit of solidarity was shown by the brothers and the assessment will net about $350 for the strikers.

Union Forces Chamber of Commerce to Quit

WAUKEGAN, Sept. 13.—Non-union clothing factories are no longer welcomed by the Waukegan chamber of commarce, its secratary indicates. The chamber has been kept busy by the trouble the open shop drives are having with the Amaigamated Clothing Workers' Union, which followed the runaway shops from Chicago. Members of the chamber also fear that the union spirit may spread from the needle trade to their steal wirs, asbestos, chemical, envelope and radio factories.

PULLMAN PORTERS' REFERENDUM WILL BEAT COMPANY SCHEME TO REPRESENT ITS OWN EMPLOYES

The Railway Mediation Board will very soon have before it the claim of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters for higher wages. The claim will involve the recognition of the union because the Pullman Co. which employs practically all the sleeping car porters and maids in the United States will claim that its company union is the proper representative of the men.

The law provides that an attempt of an agreement must be made by the carriers, the questionnaire demands whether the workers would like:

"Recognition by the Pullman Company of the right of their porters and maids to be repraesnted in collective bargaining by an independent union responsible to and supported by those employes alone, with representatives who are not dependent on the Pullman Company for their livelihood?"

Vote Going for Union.

And in order that there be no mistake or quibble, the porter or maid is invited, after voting on this question, to signify whether he or she would rather be represented by the "plan of employe representation of the Pullman Co." or by the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters.

It is already clear, said Secretary Price, that the thousands who have joined the brotherhood will vote for it, and most of the balance, who have not formally united with it, will also vote against the company union. The Pullmen Company will have something hard to explain when it gets before the mediation board.

Pullman Co. Lies.

In fact, the company is sufficiently uncertain of its legal grounds, or sufficiently fearful of the economic power of the Pullman porters, that it has resorted in vain to every form of slander, libel and subterfuge to stop dissension in the ranks of the union. It has had the assistance of a large section of the Negro press in this campaign.

In Chicago there is not one of the local Negro papers on which it can rely for aid, except the Negro Champion. Even the Chicago Bee, edited by Chandler Owen, an official of the union, cannot carry the defense of the union officials against the canards circulated by the Pullman agents because the owner of the Bee, Anthony Overton, is a pure and simple capitalist.

Overton is president of the Douglas National Bank, owner of the Overton building at 35th and State street, and has made a fortune out of the Overton Hygienic Co., manufacturing what are described as "High Brown Toilet Preparations."

By encouraging a slavish sort of imitation of white women among the women of the Negro race, Overton has accumulated the means to deny Negro men who happen to work for the Pullman Co. ability to publicly denounce those who utter infamous falsehoods against their union and strive to keep them in the worst sort of wage slavery.

Mass Meetings Soon.

The Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters expects to initiate a series of mass meetings in Chicago similar to those being held almost weekly in New York. The arrival during the month of General Organizer A. Philip Randolph will start the ball rolling. It will not be long, either, said Secretary Price, before the campaign will invade Canada. The members and officials feel that it is better to get more results in the states first, but Canadian roads are being investigated.

"Don't Need, But Want Mere."

The union takes in and desires to have all the work as porters or as maids on the railroads, said Price. "We have reached the point now where we do not need to have the men who have not yet joined," the secretary said, "but we want them. We want the maids as well as the porters. Women in this trade suffer from the same disabilities, as porters—low pay, etc., as man, and the union takes them in on exactly the same terms, with the same rights and privileges."

The aim of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters as it appears on the union's official stationery is: "More wages, better hours, better working conditions, pay for overtime, pay for 'preperation' time, abolition of 'doubling out,' conductor's pay for conductor's work when in charge, and manhood rights."

Organization Means Strength

By D. BORISOFF.

GARY, Ind., Sept. 13. — The new home of the Hod Carriers' and Building Laborers' Union of Gary, Indiana, Local No. 31, is finished. The local is moving into it Monday, Sept. 13, a lucky day for the local.

The local was started some time in 1917 as a sister local of the Hammond Local No. 41. At that time the membership of the local was about 30. The present membership is almost 1,000.

At the beginning some of the wage rates were as low as 25-30c per hour. The organization got to its strength was able to raise this miserable wage to $1.10 at the present time.

Local No. 31 unites within its ranks workers of different races, nationalities, languages. The strength of the local is in the fact that these workers recognized that they are brothers suffering under the same oppression of the exploiters of labor.

The credit for the achievements of the union belongs to the rank and file who were not afraid to organize, to present demands for better conditions and to cast aside the stupid racial prejudices, which are fostered by the enemies of the workers in order to divide them to keep them enslaved.

This is the time of prosperity. This is the time for the workers to see that at least part of the great profits reaped by the bosses be restored to those who are creating the wealth. Under militant leadership the workers no doubt could win better working conditions. The bosses realize that. They took the offensive and threatened some time ago to introduce the open shop. The offensive should be with the union and favorable time should be utilized to organize 100 per cent and win higher wages and lower hours in this seasonable industry.

MILWAUKEE.—(FP)—The Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, which strongly endorsed Rep. John C. Schafer of the 4th Wisconsin district (Milwaukee south side) for re-election, has revoked its action. Pres. D. B. Robertson has struck from Cleveland that Schafer, though a member of the brotherhood, can no longer have its official indorsement because he is supporting the Coolidge-forced faction against Gov. Blaine for U. S. senator.

G. O. P. WORRIED OVER LINEUP IN NEXT CONGRESS

Struggle Inside Party Ranks Dangerous

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 13. — The words of confidence are coming from the presidential summer White House at Paul Smith's it is no secret that the G. O. P. is worried over the outlook for a safe majority in the next senate.

The defeat of Lenroot in Wisconsin, a Coolidge stalwart, and the almost certain election of Blaine, an anti-world courter and anti-Volstead-ite is a severe blow for the administration.

Butler's Prospects Dark.

In Massachusetts an independent republican is liable to run against Senator Butler, the generalissimo of the G. O. P. This would give David I. Walsh, democrat a chance to win.

In New York, a dry republican threatens to run against Senator Wadsworth, making the election of the democrat candidate a possibility.

Tronhie also looms in Oregon where the defeated republican candidate for the senatorial nomination declares that his hat will be in the ring when the ballots are cast in November.

Campaign Strategy.

Democrats are charging the administration with holding off another tax reduction until 1927, so that the relief would be fresh in the minds of tax payers prior to the next presidential campaign.

Governor Alex J. Groesbeck of Michigan is seeking a renomination for fourth term on the G. O. P. ticket in the primaries next Tuesday. His opponent is Mayor Grass of Ionia. In view of the bitter factional struggle in the republican camp the democrats expect their man to smask in.

Would Hold Term.

Governor Ritchie of Maryland, democrat, is seeking a third term and is meeting with some opposition. Ritchie's name has been mentioned as a possible candidate for the presidency on the democrat ticket in 1927.

The Ku Klux Klan is lined up with the official G. O. P. machine in the bitter primary campaign struggle in Colorado. Charles W. Waterman is contesting the republican nomination with Senator Rice W. Means. The latter is directing head of the state K. K. K.

Majority of French Elementary Teachers Members of the Union

PARIS, Sept. 13.—A majority of the teachers in the elementary schools of France now belong to the National Union of Teachers, which affiliated in 1921 with the General Confederation of Labor thru the Federation of Employes in the Public Services. While the teachers' local unions have not in all cases, as yet, co-operated with local trades councils, they have taken out a number of cards of affiliation with the General Confederation of Labor.

This development, one of the most significant in French labor unionism since the war, is expected to stimulate the interest of French teachers and girls in the working class struggle which France anticipates in the next two decades.

Cotton Speedingup Is Cause of Depression

Increased productivity of cottonmill labor, more then curtailment of the market for cotton goods, is responsible for the wholesale unemployment and part-time which has characterized the textile industry since 1920, per capita consumption of cotton cloth has increased 9% from 66 yards in 1914 to 72.5 yards in 1923. But according to the Journal of Commerce, Textile Merchents of New York, the gain in productivity per worker since 1900 is about 22%. This has been due in considerable measure to a 500% increase in the capitalization of the industry, with each worker required to tend more machinery. The capitalization of the industry per worker is now about $4,000 compared with $1120 in 1900. Each worker is required today to produce enough surplus to pay a return on this larger capital.

Cottonmill activity throughout the country reached a low point for the year in July with the industry operating at about 75% of single shift capacity. This merks a curtailment of 25% from February when operation averaged 102.5% of single-shift capacity. It is 6¼% below July 1925, when the average was 84.6%.

Northern mills as usual were hardest hit by lack of sufficient orders. The average hours of operation during July in the antire New England group was only 116, compared with an average of 249 in the cotton-growing states where wages are low and hours of work long.

The extremely reduced activity in July is probably due in part to concerted action to limit over-production planned at a meeting of cotton manufacturers in June.

BAKERS' CONVENTION RECOGNIZES FIGHT ON FOOD TRUST AS MAIN PROBLEM; RELIES ON PUBLICITY

The nineteenth triennial convention of the Bakery and Confectionary Workers International Union of America has adjourned with all of the delegates impressed with the necessity for increasing the pace of the fight against the Ward Bread trust.

The general executive board in its statement to the membership of the union as the result of the convention does not hesitate to place the combat with the Ward octopus as the most important matter under consideration.

The joint report to the convention of its international executive officials and the general executive board declares that the main object in connection of the long struggle with Ward, and with his subsidiary concerns. It recites the fact that for at least eight years before 1917, the union carried on an organizing and publicity campaign against this greatest baking corporation, and with some measure of success, for the plants in Chicago and Newark were unfonlsed, though the rest of Ward's bakeries were open shop.

Ward Once Unionized.

The union reached its peak of growth during the war years and those immediately following, and brought such pressure on Ward that his whole system, plants in almost every large city east of the Mississippi was unionized, and this condition lasted until the open shop drive, and industries encouraged the constantly growing corporation to throw off its contractrual relations with the Bakery and Confectionary workers.

The failure of the local unions in the international to concentrate their negotiating power in the hands of the executive officials, and the latter's functional officials, helped the company in this effort to bring in the open shop.

Ward Goes Scab.

After minor skirmishing, the entire Ward system was declared open shop by its managers in 1923, and in spite of bitterly fought local strikes, which the international aided to the best of its ability, it has maintained scab conditions and wages appreciably lower than the union scale until the present.

The bakers' wage scale varies in different parts of the country but Chicago may be taken as a typical example, in Chicago the union shops use expert night men as mixers, and pay $40 per week for eight hours work per day. Ward's plants here pay their slaves who do the baking about $28 per week, but not on a weekly basis. They pay from 50 to 65 cents per hour, and no pay for hours not worked. The worker never knows when he comes to work if he will work or a day or if he is going to get out of it.

Furthermore, he comes to work under the Ward plan, which is a modified Taylor system for speeding the worker by running the mixing machines faster, shifting the rate of pay according to production, and working them in the Public Services. While the teachers' local unions have not in all cases, as yet, co-operated with local trades councils, they have taken out a number of cards of affiliation with the General Confederation of Labor.

This development, one of the most significant in French labor unionism since the war, is expected to stimulate the interest of French teachers and girls in the working class struggle which France anticipates in the next two decades.

Ward Hard Hit.

The wholesome publicity and other activities by the stern organization of the Bakery and Confectionary Workers' Union to Ward's various trustifying schemes has resulted in the collapse of the inflated prices of the stock of the parent concern, the Ward Baking company. Last year Class A stock sold at $188 per share, this year it is down to $50. Similar results show in the stock prices of the tributary companies.

The union is gaining members thru the fight; there are now about 8,000 members in Greater New York, and around 5,000 in Chicago. The Bakers convention does not elect officers.

AUTO FACTORY WAGES INCREASE JUST ENOUGH TO KEEP WORKERS IN SHOPS WHERE SPEED IS FAST

America's automobile workers averaged $26.27 a week in the autumn of 1925, according to a detailed survey of wages and hours in the industry by the U. S. department of labor. This is a gain of about 10% over 1922, the date of the department's previous survey. It means about $1890 for a full year's work if the wage earner is lucky enough to work 52 weeks without lay-offs.

The average hourly wage in 1925 was 72.3c compered with 65.7c in 1922. In both years the workers averaged just over 50 hours a week. The survey covers 144,349 employes in plants producing automobiles, bodies and parts. This is about one-third of the entire industry. Women employes number only 2417 of the total. Women averaged 46.7c an hour and $22.40 a week, compered with 72.9c and $36.67 for men.

The average weekly earnings of 18 important auto crafts, as ascertained by the government in 1922 and 1925, were:

| | 1922 | 1925 |
|---|---|---|
| Weekly Auto Wages | | |
| Assemblers, final | $32.82 | $36.63 |
| Assemblers, motor | 33.03 | 37.20 |
| Bench hands | 33.47 | 35.94 |
| Blacksmiths | 40.54 | 47.47 |
| Drillpress operators | 31.96 | 35.33 |
| Grinding Mach oper. | 34.47 | 38.33 |
| Helpers | 26.84 | 29.99 |
| Inspectors | 30.45 | 34.17 |
| Laborers | 24.86 | 28.72 |
| Lathe operators | 34.12 | 38.10 |
| Machinists | 35.78 | 40.30 |
| Milling Mach. oper. | 32.94 | 37.14 |
| Painters | 37.17 | 39.27 |
| Polishers and buffers | 38.08 | 44.21 |
| Punchpress operators | 35.31 | 35.41 |
| Sheetmetal workers | 32.92 | 39.39 |
| Tool and die makers | 38.47 | 43.82 |
| Top builders | 39.55 | 40.88 |

The survey was limited to plants in Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin. A table of average earnings for selected crafts by states indicates that Michigan pays the highest wages and Pennsylvania the lowest. Michigan wages undoubtedly reflect Ford's policy of super-speeding up by paying wages somewhat above the average.

Overtime work is regularly expected in certain seasons. As the workers are practically unorganized there is no regulation of pay for overtime. In 29 of the 99 plants investigated straight-time is paid for all overtime. In 38 plants time and a half is paid for overtime worked by time-workers only. A majority of the other plants pay an extra rate for overtime only after a number of extra hours here been worked, and usually only to certain classes of workers.

COMPANY UNIONS AND LABOR SPY IN SAME FAMILY

Many Corporations Use Both Methods

By ROBERT W. DUNN,
Federated Press.

LABOR spies and company unions are complamentary agrices used against trede unions by many American corporations. This fact is again emphesized by a series of articles now appearing in the Daily News, a Passaic, N. J. paper. The articles are written by Harvey G. Ellerd of the personnel department of Armour & Co. and are intended to bolster up the company union idea among the striking textile workers who refuse to return to the tyranny of "employe representation" of the Forstmann and Huffman mills, or to accept the offer of a company union now made by the Botany Mills.

"New Relationship."

ELLERD'S article of course make no mention of labor spies. Instead they reek with phrases touching on the "new relationship between employer and employe," "the rule of reason" and "co-operation and better feelings." He is describing the workings of the company union committees in the Armour stock yards, where undercover operatives and spies have been aiding the company union, during the last few years, and one of the last vestiges of the real labor unionism achieved in war days.

In Passaic likewise detectives and company unionism have been co-operating to liquidate trade unionism. Other great American corporations where the spy and the "newer methods of human relationship" have been used without any suggestion of inconsistency are many of the railroads, such as the Pennsylvania, the Santa Fe, the Union Pacific, the Union News and Lackawanna, the Long Island, the Boston and Maine, the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie, the Atlantic Coast Line, the Great Northern and the New York, New Haveo and Hartford. On the latter road the notorious Sherman corporation, Engineers — America's premier labor spy service, installed and developed the company union system among the shop craft workers.

Spies Everywhere.

LABOR SPIES of the open and company union systems are used side by side on some of the leading street and electric lines. Among such are the Interborough Rapid Transit company of New York, the Brooklyn Manhattan corporation of the same city, the Kansas City Railways, the Louisville Railway, and the City Rapid Transit Co. of Minneapolis, and the Milwaukee Electric Railway and Light company.

Of the more than 700 miscellaneous corporations that now employ the the latest "employe representation" devices to forestall and defeat trade unionism the following are known to have employed "industrial spies" or "welfare man," either hired directly or through one of the several hundred detective or engineering services now sharing in the spoils of the open shop drive: International Paper Co.; Sheffield Farms milk distributors of New York, Amoskeag Manufacturing Co., Wheeling Steel corporation and Consolidated Steel corporation. In the current issue of Labor Age Louis Budenz gives a close up of the company union plus spy system in the Lackawanna plant of Bethlehem Steel.

Same Mere.

OTHER company union and spy employers are The Penn. de Nemours & Co. of Wilmington, Delaware; Indian Farms Products Co. of New York; Davis Coal and Coke Co. of Maryland; Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. of Akron; Hooker Electro-Chemical Co. of Niagara Falls, presided over by Elon H. Hooker, president of the American Defense Society; the Interlype corporation of Brooklyn; Pacific Mills of Lawrence, Mass., Phelps Dodge corporation of Bisbee, Arizona; Pacific Steamship Co. of Seattle, the Standard Oil companies of New Jersey and Indiana; the Washburn-Crosby Co. of Minneapolis; the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co. of East Pittsburgh, and the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co.

The Pullman Co. employes the spy system as an auxiliary to the company union. In its efforts to organize the Negro workers the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters has run into dozens of spies and stools the Pullman Co. is using against the trade union and in behalf of the compahy organization.

The Blacklist.

MANY of the company-unionized corporations, such, as the Forstmann and Huffmann Co of Passaic, also use an effective blacklist in connection with the operation of the central spying and employment agency.

A few company uflon firms, such as the Dennison Manufacturing Co. of Framingham, Mass. and the Dutchess Bleachery of Wappinger Falls, N. Y., use no spies, their owners and managers being opposed to espionage on ethical grounds. But the great majority of companies with company unions have the spy adjunct, either employing undercover agents directly as a part of the plant police department, or hiring them through one of the big "labor engineering and survey" agencies, such as Sherman or the Corporations Auxiliary Co.

The Wrong Kind of a United Front

An International Labor News Service report informs us with joy that the Central Labor Council and the chamber of commerce of Streator, Illinois, have buried the hatchet of discord which they have been swinging at each other for several years and united to give a fitting welcome to the Illinois State Federation of Labor convention which will open its sessions in that city next Monday.

No doubt this action will be seized upon as a topic for soulful speeches on the growing love that is developing between "capital and labor." The corrupt hureaucrats who have sold themselves to Sam Insull and his favorite son, Frank L. Smith; the boon companions of the Peabody Coal Company tool, Frank Farrington; the errand boys of governor Len Small, will have little to say about the big issues mining regions, about the strike in Passaic, New Jersey, or the coal mining rgions, about the strike in Passaic, New Jersey, or about the treachery of the British Trade Union Council in betraying the miners.

They hold their yearly meetings to exhibit themselves to the capitalists and demonstrate that they are a force to be reckoned with when the politicians of capitalism are making up the payroll.

The progressive delegates to the state convention of the Illinois Federation of Labor have a splendid opportunity this year to put Walker, Olander and their confederates on record on issues that must appeal to every intelligent worker. The workers of Illinois would be interested to know whether Walker and Company still support Frank L. Smith, the exposed slush-fed political tool of Sam Insull or what they have to say about the sell-out of Frank Farrington to the Peabody Coal Company.

A united front between chambers of commerce and central labor councils is alright in the eyes of the labor bureaucrats. But a united front of all workingclass organizations to advance the interests of the workers thru industrial or political action is obnoxious to them.

Production in Soviet Russia

The March number of the Monthly Circular of the Labor Research Department, London, comments on the remarkable growth of production in Russia in contrast to the industrial stagnation which is evident in other countries of Europe.

The following excerpt from the above named official publication of the Trade Union Congress should carry more conviction than the doleful concoctions that appear in the capitalist press hostile to the Soviet Union:

"While unemployment in Germany, England and several of the smaller European countries has been rising steadily, and for several months has been at a level which affects a very large proportion of the workers in each country, the number of industrial workers in Russia has been steadily increasing."

We learn from the same source that the average monthly output of coal which was 1,315,000 in the year 1923-24, increased to 2,056,000 in the seven months from October 1925 to April 1926.

It is pointed out that this development in the coal industry has nothing to do with the British mining strike as the figures do not cover the period since the British strike started. And unlike the workers of other countries the Russian coal miners, and transport workers refused to dig or ship coal for England.

The level of coal production in the Soviet Union has now reached 86 per cent of the level of production in 1913 while British production before the present crisis was approximately only 85 per cent of the 1913 figure.

This development has taken place despite credit strangulation by the international bankers, who have spoon-fed the industries of all capitalist countries since the end of the war.

Even the population of Russia has passed the pre-war figure according to the Russian Information Bureau in Washington.

Allies of the British

A London dispatch to the New York Times contains the following two sentences which shed a revealing light on the kind of support the British imperialists rely upon to aid them in the fight against the growing power of the national liberation movement in China, as led by the Cantonese government forces:

"A further complication in the situation, moreover, is the fact that the Chinese engaged in the fight against the British naval units belonged to the faction favored by the British, since it is fighting the Cantonese 'red' government, to which Great Britain is unfriendly."

"The river pirates with whom British merchant skippers got into a wrangle a few days ago, thus precipitating the fight in which the British navy suffered casualties, are considered here as no better than ordinary pirates."

From which we are to conclude that river pirates are a degree better than ordinary pirates so long as they fight on the side of British imperialism. If they run amuck and shoot some British, they are just "ordinary pirates." But any old pirate will do to fight the Cantonese.

James A. Flaherty, supreme knight of the "kluxers" of Columbus, called on Calvin Coolidge with the object of inducing the administration to intervene in Mexico in behalf of the pope. Flaherty's name is suspiciously Irish, yet this papal crawthumper never lifted his voice against the terrorism of the Black and Tans in Ireland who were the instruments of "protestant England" in crushing the people of "catholic Ireland."

Earl P. Charlton, vice-president of Woolworth and Company and owner of cotton mills told President Coolidge that the country is prosperous outside of a few spots. The five and ten cent store magnate boasted that his stores are doing a $250,000,000 business this year. How much of this prosperity will go into the pockets of his miserably paid store girls?

A Whiff of Gas -

By T. J. O'Flaherty

Oscar McNopp was as fine a specimen of Scotch-Irish-American humanity as ever slung a hook over his shoulder on a dock or tipped a roll of print paper on a hand truck.

At the age of 26 Oscar looked forward to a long and happy life for no reason whatever. He was in good health and his unusual strength made him popular with every gang foreman in the freight sheds where he worked.

Up at six in the morning, with an hour for lunch, home at six in the evening, stopping for a bear on the way—that was Oscar's daily schedule. And what he had his supper in the boardinghouse and washed himself, he was off with the lads for an evening's quiet drinking or perhaps he would visit Molly Anderson, the Swedish living-out girl that Oscar met one day at the beach and got to know, as young people will.

There was nothing Oscar liked better in the line of work these days than to tackle a carload of hay with a good sang and empty it in jig time. In the freight sheds the hay gang was envied. But it was no job for weaklings. There were five in the gang and they had four cars to unload before noon. One man breaking out the hay—sometimes it is packed so tight and swollen with moisture that it is almost impossible to open the doors. Another man at the pits on the shed floor and three men on the trucks. With a good bunch of lads the four cars could be emptied by 11 a. m. and the boys could adjourn to MacHoolgan's pub and have the dust in their throats washed away by 12 noon when the whistles blew for lunch.

Oscar got tired of the boardinghouse grub and the social atmosphere after his nineteenth visit to Molly. He was a rather devil-may-care fellow and hated the idea of getting married. But he changed his mind. Indeed, it was Molly's charming society rather than what she served Oscar from her employer's larder that urged him to put a ring on her finger. Which he did.

The boys from the shed were at the wedding and Oscar was wished all kinds of good luck, including unlimited progeny. Oscar did not disappoint his friends. What could a poor fellow do? Neither one had heard of Malthus and both were catholics.

Settled down in a tenement flat within a ten-minute walk from the freight shed, Oscar started the second lap of his life. Things seemed much better now. The work was just as hard. The pay was just as small. "It is as easy to feed two mouths as one," Tim Mulligan used to say, but Oscar did not think so, after what over Molly had eated was gone. Not that Oscar was a spendthrift, but what could a fellow save out of $28 a week? He had his schooner of beer as usual, but he missed the weekly trips to the burlesque show. It was not the right kind of a place to take a decent woman to. So Oscar and Molly began to go to church on Saturday nights. It was a cheap way of killing time.

Molly often suggested to Oscar that other men were getting along and making money. Oscar was not dumb. He secured a job as a freight clerk, but the company did not raise his salary.

The boss said: "Oh, hell; anybody who can write his name can do this work."

It was a cleaner job and Oscar did not have to wear his overalls. He would stick his pencil behind his ear and exchange back-yard gossip with other freight handlers could see him. Molly was proud of this for a while. It was nice to have a "clerk" for a husband while the other woman had just laborers.

Pretty soon Molly began to get dissatisfied. She was going to have a baby and increasing the population is a costly luxury. The priest told Molly that god was kind to her. Oscar was rather proud of himself, tho there was nothing unusual about being the father of a child.

The baby came along. It was baptised. This cost money. The priest knew Oscar and Oscar had to celebrate. Yet everything was still good. Because Oscar was young and Molly was still desirable. She would meet Oscar at the door when he came from work and skip into the kitchen from whence came an agreeable odor of roast beef, or bacon and cabbage. Oscar would then feel that he amounted to something, tho he often felt like knocking the boss' head off when he hawled him out because the gang did not empty the car on time.

Oscar could tell those things to his wife sometimes. "I am no slave driver and nobody will ever see me pushing the gang." Oscar would say proudly. Molly would say nothing, but she thought much. Another child was coming, but Oscar's pay remained stationary.

* * * *

Year followed year and Oscar and Molly grew old. Seven children were born to them. The four eldest were now working. The girls were now stenographers and the boys worked in grocery stores. Oscar thought one of the boys should be a priest and the other a doctor. He thought the girls should become nuns or marry business men. Whatever they did was little good to Oscar, because they had their own troubles. Oscar was still working in the freight shed when he was 55.

By this time all his children were shifting for themselves. He did not know where most of them were. Only his youngest visited them occasionally.

One evening the general foreman in the shed informed Oscar that he would have to go on the night shift or get back on the truck, with a day gang. He was not getting any too as he used to be and there was not so much rush at night. Oscar was flabbergasted.

"Is this the way you treat me after all my years of service to the company?" he asked the foreman.

"It isn't my fault, Oscar," replied the foreman. "I am pushed for results and unless I push somebody else I get pushed out. Anyhow," he said, trying to be funny, "you are now an old man and you might as well work nights as be home, lashing Oscar in the ribs with a pencil.

Oscar had to take the night job. But he caught cold and almost died. When he was able to leave the house again, Oscar was a wreck of his former self. He went to the company's doctors and reported for work. The boss informed him that his place was filled, but if he waited a while there might be something for him.

Oscar haunted the company's employment office, but there was nothing doing. Strong young men, full of energy, laughing and joking, stood with hooks on their shoulders waiting for the 7 o'clock whistle to blow every morning, as old Oscar made his daily application for work. But why should the company hire an old man when young blood was available?

"Unless you get a job soon," said Molly to Oscar one morning after he returned from a fruitless quest for employment, "I don't know what we will do."

Tears came from Oscar's eyes. He thought of the distant days when he first saw Molly at the beach. How appealing she looked. Full of vitality. And how she admired him. What dreams they had. Health and youth was theirs. The future could take care of itself. They lived good lives. Brought forth children, were loyal to each other. But now they were old and

In the early hours of the morning on the Daily Messenger the night editor handed a news item to one of his subordinates.

"Slap a one-line ten-point rap boldface heading on it and mark the story six-point boldface for a filler."

The story read:

"Oscar McNopp, 60 years old, a laborer, formerly employed at the northwestern yards of the Chicago, Racine and Waukegan Railroad Company, was found asphixiated in his room yesterday. His wife, Molly, said he was despondent because he was out of work."

WILL AMERICAN CENSORS KILL THE GREAT HISTORICAL MOVIE OF RUSSIAN NAVAL REBELLION?

By ESTHER LOWELL, Federated Press.

NEW YORK, Sept. 13.—(FP)—Are American workers to see the film which has won Douglas Fairbanks highest praise? Repeatedly since the movie star saw Potemkin in Berlin he has declared the picture "the greatest ever made." Berlin audiences are seeing a modified version of the original playing in Russia. London and other English cities may suffer the same fate.

Journalists Enthusiastic.

New York journalists who saw the film in a showing arranged by Amtorg Trading Corp., Soviet American trading agents of the film, and the Film Arts Guild, were enthusiastic, but did not put their opinions into print to help batter down the censorship.

Potemkin is a page from history graphically and beautifully presented. The armed cruiser Prince Potemkin lay off Odessa when the 1905 revolution was attempted in Russia against the czar. The sailors heard of the stirring ashore and rebelled against their harsh officers, bad conditions and particularly the maggoty meat which the ship's doctor passed as fit food.

When the officers ordered the shooting down of discontented ones, one sailor cried out to the firing squad not to shoot their brothers and the fight was on. The sailors seized the ship from their officers and threw them overboard along with the wormy meat. They elected a committee of 26 to take charge.

Revolt at Odessa.

But the sailor who had cried "Brothers," had been shot dead by the chief officer before the latter was seized. The sailor's body was taken ashore at night—one of the finest pieces of photographic artistry in the film—and left on the fisherman's dock with an explanatory note pinned to his breast. All day long lines of workers, men and women, filed down the seemingly endless steps and out the breakwater to view the body.

Then the cossacks came, and all night there was firing in the town. Workers were shot down in cold blood—helpless mothers and children. When the sailors of Potemkin learned of it they turned their guns against the palaces on the hilltop and bombarded them until there was quiet among the sharpshooters and cossacks.

Movie Shows Navel Dash.

Officers from the ship had managed to swim ashore, however, and summoned the rest of the admiral's fleet. Potemkin turned its nose seaward and when within range signalled for the sailors on the other ships to join them. In fear the fleet officers ordered their ships to right-about.

The film ends suddenly with the sailors shouting, "Hurrah" to one another from ship to ship and only the final caption gives brief indication of the historical end of the incident. The caption says that Potemkin was finally interned in a Rumanian port.

Rakovsky Aidad Rebels.

What happened in history was that Odessa fell into the hands of the army and the sailors could not longer get food from shore. They steamed to a Rumanian port and were refused aid. They went back to Theodosia, a Russian port, and commanded food with their guns but when a group of the sailors tried to seize three coal barges for much needed fuel they were shot down.

Then they returned to Roumania and met Christian Rakovsky, now ambassador from Soviet Russia to France, who was then in Roumenia, the sailors negotiated the turning over of the ship to the Roumenian government.

Will U. S. Censors Kill It?

That is the story of the film and that is history, but whether it is acceptable history to the censors of movies in the United States remains to be seen. As for its being a work of art, censors seem to know nothing of art in their choice of what the American film public may see.

Potemkin is a thrilling working class picture of historical value as well as artistic value and American workers should demand that they not be deprived of this film made by Sovkino, the Russian movie trust.

delegate to the league of nations. The latter listened and twiddled his thumb. He heard that kind of thing before. After the various delegates threw their hats in the air and proclaimed that war was only a horrible memory, Stresemann, the German, and Briand, the Frenchman, agreed that all their disarmament and disarming were two different propositions. Then both got into a corner and discussed a Franco-German treaty. John Bull's agents cocked their ears and wondered.

JOHN THOMAS SCOPES, defendant in the famous evolution trial in Dayton, Tennessee, does not have to pay that $100 fine imposed on him by the trial judge after a jury of mountaineers found him guilty of teaching that said mountaineers were only separated from their gorilla ancestors by only a few million years. Somebody dug up an old provision from the state constitution which prohibits a trial judge from imposing a fine of over $50 on a defendant. Perhaps Tennessee has a stomach full of unenviable notoriety by now.

BETTER play with fire than get mixed up with Aimee McPherson! Mrs. Lorraine Wiseman, who offered herself as a sacrifice for Aimee by declaring she was the mysterious "Mrs. X" of the cottage by the sea with Aimee's radio operator, was arrested for writing worthless checks. Commenting on the arrest, Aimee said: "She seemed such a lovely woman and a fine character. I would have believed anything she said. I really can't understand it." We can, but we'll be blessed if we understand how Aimee got away with the money she swindled from her fool followers after telling them a fake story about her adventure.

NO doubt the association for the protection of the United States from the pope will jump on the story of the four nuns who were caught with $5,000 worth of dutiable goods crossing the Canadian border into the United States. The sisters at first declared they had nothing for the customs, but the ladies looked rather rotund, so they were searched. The officers found lace sewed into specially made petticoats. The nuns were at a loss to know how the lace got there. And the officers were considerably more amazed when they found babies' clothes with the lace, the priests garments and the table linens. Now surely, the New Masses will have something to gross about.

J. Arnold Ross is a wealthy independent California oil operator who was first Jim Ross, a teamster and then a merchant before he went into the oil business. Bunny, his son, is a sensitive boy, learning the oil business and next summer the men will be granted and Bunny will be happy.
going to high school. Dad has a field in the San Elido Valley on the Watkins they were both much younger. He liked Paul who had run away from home because he didn't like the religious discipline imposed by his father. Paul is now a carpenter in the new Watkins field and his sister Ruth is keeping house for him. The Watkins field is really Bunny's and he has been made very wealthy thru the bringing in of a great well which has grown to fourteen derricks, in the meantime war with Germany looms and the men in the oil field under the leadership of an organizer for the Oil Workers' Union, Tom Axton, persons to strike for an eight-hour day and a raise in wages. Paul becomes a leader of the strikers and a battle is on between the oil workers and the Oil Operators' Association, which supplies thugs and gunmen to the various operators, including Dad, during the strike. Bunny is back at school and receives the reports only thru the press. He is somewhat sympathetic to the strikers and doesn't believe the calumnies printed in the press about the strikers. Bunny goes back to the field and gets a chance to talk with Paul who has now become a strike leader and editor of the strikers' paper. He tells Bunny he is too soft to do what he would like to do, and with the strikers. That same day, news comes from Washington that because of the war the demands of the men will be granted and Bunny is very happy.

II

SUCH was the way of Bunny's initiation into the adult life.

Gone were the days of happy innocence when he could be content to sit holding hands with Rosie Taitor. "Holding hands" was now walking on a slippery ledge, over a dark abyss where pleasure and pain were so mingled you could hardly tell them apart. Bunny was frightened by the storm of emotion which seized upon him, and still more by the behavior of the girl in his arms; a kind of frenzy shook her, she clung to him in a convulsion of excitement, half sobbing, half laughing, with little cries as of an animal in pain. And Bunny must share this delirium, she would not have it otherwise, she was furious in her exactions, the mistress of these dark rites, and he must obey her will. The first time, the boy was overwhelmed by the realization of what he had done, but she clung to him, whispering, "Oh, Bunny, don't be ashamed! No, no! I won't let you be ashamed! Why haven't we got a right to be happy? Oh, please, please, be happy!" So he had to promise, and do his best.

"Oh, Bunny, you are such a sweet lover! And we are going to have such good times." This was her crooning song, wrapped in his arms, there under the spring-time moon, which is the same in California as everywhere else in the world. And when the chill of the California night began to creep into their bones, they could hardly tear themselves apart, but all the way over the dunes they walked arm in arm, kissing as they went. "Oh, Bunny, it was bold and bad of me, but tell me you forgive me, tell me you're glad I did it!" It appeared to be his duty to comfort her.

Driving back to Beach City they talked about this adventure. Bunny hadn't thought much about sex, he had no philosophy ready at hand, but Eunice had hers, and told it to him simply and frankly. The old people taught you a lot of rubbish about it, and then they scolded off and divided differently, and why should you let yourself be fooled by silly "don'ts"? Love was all right if you were decent about it, and when you had found out that you didn't have to have any babies, why must you bother to get married? Most married people were miserable anyhow, and if the young people could find a way to be happy, it was up to them, and what the old folks didn't know wouldn't hurt them.

Did Bunny see anything wrong with that? Bunny answered that he didn't; the reason he had been "such an old prude," was just that he hadn't got to know Eunice. She said that men were supposed to care for a girl who made advances to them; therefore, she added with her flash of mischief, it would be up to Bunny to make some advances from now on. He said he would do so, and would have started at once, only Eunice was driving at forty-some miles an hour, and it would be better to hurt her feelings than to upset the car.

Were there other girls like Eunice, Bunny wanted to know, and she said there were plenty, and named a few, and Bunny was surprised and a little shocked, because some of them were prominent in class affairs, and decorous-seeming. Eunice told him about their ways, and it was a good deal like a secret society, without any officers or formal ritual, but with a strict code none the less. They called themselves "the Zulus," these bold spirits who had dared to do as they pleased; they kept one another's secrets faithfully, and helped the younger ones to that knowledge which was so essential to happiness. The old guarded this knowledge jealously—how to keep from having babies, and what to do if you got "caught." There was a secret lore about the art of love, and books that you bought in certain stores, or found stowed away behind other books in your father's den. Such volumes would be passed about and read by scores.

It was a new ethical code that these young people were making for themselves, without any help from their parents. Eunice did not know, of course, that she was doing anything so limposing as that; she just talked about her feelings, and what she liked and what she feared. Was it right to love this way or that? And what did Bunny think about the possibility of loving two girls at the same time? Claire Reynolds said you couldn't, but Billy Rosen said you could, and they were wrangling all the time. But Mary Blake got along quite happily with two boys who loved her and had agreed not to be jealous. This was a new world into which Bunny was being introduced, and he asked a lot of questions, and could not help blushing at some of Eunice's matter-of-fact replies.

Bunny crept into the house at two o'clock in the morning, and no member of the family was the wiser. But he was equally as late the next night, and the next—had he not promised Eunice to "make the advances?" So of course the family realized that something was up, and it was interesting to see their reactions. Aunt Emma and Grandma were in a terrible "state," but they could not say why—such was the handicap the old generation imposed upon themselves. They both went to Dad, but could only talk about late hours and their effect on a boy's health. And Dad himself could not do much more. When Bunny said that he had been taking Eunice Hoyt driving, Dad asked about her, was she a "nice girl?" Bunny answered that she was the treasurer of the girl's basketball team, and her father was Mr. Hoyt, whom Dad knew, and she had her own car and even tried to pay for the supper. So there could be no idea that Bunny was being "vamped," and all Dad said was, "Take it easy, son, don't try to live your whole life in a couple of weeks."

Also there was Bunny's sister, and that was curious. Had some underground message come to Bertie, through connections with the "Zulus?" All that she said was, "I'm glad you've consented to take an interest in something beside oil and strikers for a change." But behind that sentence lay such an ocean of calm feminine knowledge! Bunny was started upon a new train of thought. Could it be that late hours meant the same thing for his sister that they had suddenly come to mean for him? Bertie was supposed to be dancing; and did she always come directly home, or did she also park by the wayside? Bunny had got over being shocked by the parking of Eunice's car, but it took him longer to get used to the idea of the parking of his sister's car. He began to notice, as he drove along the highways in the evening—what a great number of parked cars there were!

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

SIXTY-THREE affidavits in support of a demand for a new trial for Sacco and Vanzetti were submitted in court last Monday. Held on the threshold of death for six years for a crime of which the two workers are as innocent as the unborn, the latest sensational development in this historic case has again attracted nation-wide attention. A confession made by a condemned murderer exonerates the two Italian workers and whatever excuse the law may have been able to give in the past for doubting their innocence in the past their le nono left now.

IF anything was needed to convince the workingclass of the need for a labor defense organization such as the I. L. D. the Sacco and Vanzetti case should prove sufficient. But for the efforts of sympathetic organizations to rouse public opinion in behalf of these two persecuted workers it is safe to say that they would now be making dust. It is by no means certain that the confession recently made will save our comrades. I remember reading a story of the 1798 rebellion in Ireland where a leader of the revolutionists was charged with the murder of an English settler. The latter expecting the rebel to be properly hanged by this time strolled into the courthouse while the prosecutor was picturing the death agonies of the Englishman at the hands of the prisoner in the dock.

AS he was describing the death agonie of the allegedly murdered man, the phony attorney spied the settler and bald him before the bench. This was not enuf, however. The the "murdered" man admitted he was the person over whom the fuss was made the prosecuter insisted that it was only his ghost that was in the court and it took a rescue party to take the rebel Irishman out of the hands of the law. When the ruling classes want their pound of flesh they are insistent and persistent.

JOHN H. WALKER, in his report to the convention of the Illinois State Federation of Labor, sees an industrial slump ahead. Mr. Walker did not propose any appropriate policy to meet this situation. Neither did he have anything to say about the sellout of Frank Farrington to the Peabody Coal company. He did not express his endorsement of Samuel Insull's candidate, Frank L. Smith. He did use on several pages defending its honor against the charge of having benefitted materially from the Insull donation to Smith's fund.

EMPLOYMENT agencies sometimes employ novel tricks to separate the job seeker from the ten dollar fee which he is anxious to advance by appealing directly for his job to the factory. In the Daily News of September 13, the Shepherd Service had their regular advertisement listed under "Male Employment Agencies." On another page there was an innocent-looking advertisement calling for machine shop workers. "Mfrs. Distributors, 5 South Wabash Avenue, Room 1805." When workers want to apply for a job they discovered that this was the address of the Shepherd Service and the first question asked at them by the clerical staff was: "Have you got $10?"

ACCORDING to the worker who came into our office with this information, hundreds of workers jammed the elevators on the way to the room number given in the advertisement. The particular job paid from $16 to $22. And hundreds of workers were grabbing a chance to work at this starvation wage. It is a crying shame that something is not being done by the trade union movement to organize the unorganized workers. Without a union thru which they can sell their labor power the workers are helpless, outside of the very few who have exceptional training.

THE Aimee McPherson case will not die down. Last Monday's papers carried the news that the lady who confessed to occupying the cottage by the sea with Aimee's radio operator, confessed for the sake of the $5,000 that was promised her by Aimee for the alibi. It appears that Aimee's willing witness did not get the coin, so she had to resort to writing bad checks. Now she has admitted her part in the affair. The DAILY WORKER received more than one letter from Los Angeles taking exceptions to our treatment of the story. These dubs think the foxy Mrs. McPherson is the victim of a papal frame-up.

THERE is no difference between the Aimee McPherson type and the confidence men who sell the gullible real estate in the Carribean Sea, except that Aimee's followers are lower in intelligence than the suckers who fall for the real estate sharks. The catholic church has pulled off better-paying stunts than Aimee's, but the catholics get something for the money, be it only a splinter from the sacred cross.

DAUGHERTY GOT GERMAN DOUGH; THAT'S CLEAR

Witness Playing to Save Own Hide

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—Efforts to whitewash Former Attorney General Herry M. Daugherty and Colonel Thomas W. Miller of the charge of having accepted a bribe of $441,000 to facilitate the return of $7,000,000 worth of property of the American Metal Company, a branch of the German corporation known as the Metallgesellschaft, to the owners, is evident in the testimony of Richard Merton, German capitalist.

The assets of this corporation were impounded under the trading with the enemy act and Richard Merton, a German industrialist, visited this country and paid the sum of $441,000 to Daugherty, Allen Property Custodian Miller and John T. King, former republican national committeeman for Connecticut. The property was returned inside of 48 hours and Merton received a check for over $6,000,000 from Colonel Miller at a champagne party in Merton's quarters.

Shielding Daugherty.

The defense position is that the $441,000 was not a bribe but a fee. The German capitalist, who was the government's star witness, seemed to be anxious to absolve Daugherty and Miller of blame in the transaction.

Merton knew King was not a lawyer, but gave him the $50,000 retainer because of his influence with the administration, he testified. Merton received $250,000 from the metal corporation for getting the claim disposed of.

Fourth Day on Stand.

Today was Merton's fourth day on the witness stand. The brought here from Germany by Federal Attorney Emory R. Buckner is chiefly for the government. It was remarked in court that Merten seemed to feel more at ease under examination of defense counsel than when questioned by the United States attorney.

An effort to have the conspiracy trial of M. Daugherty, declared a mistrial was made before Federal Judge Mack today, and failed.

Judge Denied Motion.

Max Steuer, counsel for Daugherty made the motion. He asked the Judge to dismiss the jury. Such action would be equivalent to declaring the case a mistrial.

The judge denied the motion.

Lawyers Have Difference.

Another surprise developed when Steuer made it apparent that the two defendants, Daugherty and Miller, are not in accord on the legal tactics to be adopted during the trial.

Steuer said he could not "divine" what Colonel William Rand, attorney for Miller, was aiming at in his defense—in fact in Rand's previous examination of Merton, Rand had endangered the defense of Daugherty.

Car Porters Endorsed.

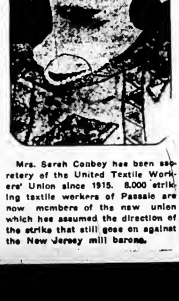
CLEVELAND — (FP) — Unqualified indorsement of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters was voiced by Negro Elks in convention at Cleveland. The Elks have 50,000 members

SECRETARY-TREASURER OF UNION THAT TOOK IN PASSAIC MILL STRIKERS



Mrs. Sarah Conboy has been secretary of the United Textile Workers' Union since 1915. 8,000 striking textile workers of Passaic are now members of the new union which has assumed the direction of the strike that still goes on against the New Jersey mill barons.

Fight for Their Freedom in New Court Battle

Presenting sixty-one affidavits which show conclusively that Sacco and Vanzetti were victims of a frame-up, attorneys for the defense in the world-famous frame-up case are appealing for a new trial to save the two Italian workers from the electric chair to which they have been unjustly condemned. Left to right are Vanzetti, Sacco and Mrs. Sacco.

FARRINGTON AND LEWIS GANGS UNITE AGAIN

Patch United Front to Fight Joe Tumulty

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Sept. 14.—Peace reigns again in the ranks of the officials of the United Mine Workers of Illinois today, with the announcement of state president Harry Fishwick, that State Senator William J. Sneed of Herrin has been appointed vice-president of the organization. Simultaneously, Sneed announced that he would be a candidate at the December election to succeed himself, foregoing the race for the presidency for which he had been an entry.

This action was taken with a view to winning control of the Illinois field to supporters of International President, John L. Lewis, it is believed.

Lewis Pleased With Deal.

Lewis, in a statement declares his pleasure at the turn events have taken.

Sneed states that the interests of the union in avoiding a political contest at this time prompted his action.

Feared Progressive Ticket.

What forced the officials of District 12 to unite their forces was fear of a progressive victory under the leadership of Joseph Tumulty, candidate for president. With the Farrington exposure fresh in the minds of the coal diggers, and with a candidate who has consistently fought the Farrington machine, Lewis, Fishwick, Sneed and the Peabody Coal company felt that this was no time for the followers of Farrington and the Lewis gang to indulge in the luxury of an internecine quarrel over the presidency of the Illinois Miners' Union.

PESTKOVSKY TELEGRAPHS DAILY WORKER DENYING REPORTED MEXICAN TALK

In the issue of September 9 The DAILY WORKER carried a telegraphed story from Mexico City saying that Alexandra Kollontai has been appointed to succeed Stanislav Pestkovsky, Soviet ambassador to Mexico, and that the latter had "attracted wide attention when he delivered a speech here attacking the United States" with regard to the Latin-American situation.

The DAILY WORKER has received the following telegram from Ambassador Pestkovsky concerning this story: "I did not deliver any speech here attacking the United States or make any declarations concerning Latin-America. Please correct your cable in the Sept. 9 issue." Signed Pestkovsky.

The DAILY WORKER is glad to print the correction and to state also that more recent dispatches sent from Moscow make denials of the report that Kollontai has been chosen to succeed Pestkovsky or that there has been any indication of a change in its Mexican representative.

The original story was received by The DAILY WORKER from its regular news service and was not cabled by a correspondent.

Speaks for Sacco and Vanzetti to Illinois Federation Convention

(Special to The Daily Worker)

STREATOR, ILL., Sept. 14.— Antonio Presi, of the Granite Cutters' Union of Chicago addressed the Illinois State Federation of Labor here today, speaking in behalf of Sacco and Vanzetti. He asked that the convention demand that a new trial be given to these two framed-up workers, the case of which he explained in detail. The question was referred to the resolutions committee for later report.

INSULL SLUSH ISSUE IN ILL. STATE UNIONS

Smith Has Friends at Streater Convention

(Special to The Daily Worker)

STREATOR, Ill., Sept. 14.— Delegate Al Obrill, representing the Chicago trucklayers at the Illinois State Federation of Labor convention here, has declared in a speech that because Frank L. Smith, republican, and Gen. Dennen, democrat both have friends among the delegates, labor should remain "neutral" in the senatorial election.

John H. Walker, renominated for president of the federation, will be opposed by John F. Geffigen of Springfield. Victor Olander, secretary-treasurer is unopposed.

STREATOR, Ill., Sept. 14. — The tedow of the publicly regulated utility corporation hung over the 44th Illinois State Federation of Labor convention which opened in Streator Sept. 13. While many issues are touched on in the comprehensive report of Pres. John H. Walker, the outstanding issue is in effect whether a public utility candidate for the U. S. senate shall have the backing of Illinois organized labor.

Smith Has "Friends."

Having received the endorsement of labor officials and boards before the revelations regarding the real source of his support, Frank L. Smith, republican nominee, is fighting thru his friends at the trade union convention to prevent the withdrawal of the endorsement.

Many labor men who do not favor Smith because the anti-labor utility czar, Sam Insull, is his paymaster, nevertheless think that George Brennan, his democrat rival and former

New Affidavits In Sacco Trial Prove Frame-up

By S. D. LEVINE.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DEDHAM, Mass., September 14.—That the department of justice was interested in persecuting Sacco and Vanzetti, that the names of the two radicals were on the files of the department some time before the arrest and that an understanding existed between the department of justice and the county authorities that information gained be swapped to help each other to get rid of the two radicals was disclosed by affidavits of former justice department men read by Attorney Wm. Thompson in the hearing for a motion for a new trial.

Next to the Madeiros confession and allied affidavits, this evidence in considered very important in the demand for a new trial. An affidavit by John Rusgamenti states he was asked by a department of justice agent to act as a spy in the Sacco-Vanzetti case, that he was to commit burglary. Get arrested and be placed in cell next to Sacco in order to get information and that former District Attorney Katzman, then prosecutor in the case, told him he had no evidence against Sacco and Vanzetti and it is for Rusgamenti to get it.

Co-operate With County.

Another affidavit by Fred Y. Weymond, former justice department agent, told of the assignment of men spying on the Sacco and Vanzetti case, and co-operation between the county authorities and the justice department. He stated that their convictions was the result of their being radicals, but that they were innocent of the crime. He also told of the fact that the names of Sacco and Vanzetti as radicals and evaders of the draft were in the files of the department some time before the arrest.

Evidence on File.

Lawrence Letherman, a former justice department agent, in an affidavit stated that the federal agents failed to get sufficient evidence to deport Sacco and Vanzetti and they thought the murder conviction a good way to dispose of the case. He said that there is a lot of correspondence between the department and District Attorney Katzman in the office of the department of justice which would show the preparation of the case. Attorney Thompson, in reading the affidavits, told the court that he asked for the files of the department of justice in order to sustain these affidavits but they were not given to him.

Confession Read.

The Madeiros confession was read. It states that he was in the South Braintree crime and that Sacco and Vanzetti were not there. The affidavit gives the particulars of how the murder was committed and the part he played in it. Madeiros' confession does not disclose the names of the murderers. But an affidavit of John Weeks, an associate of Madeiros in the Wrentham case, tells of a statement made by Madeiros, in which he named the "Morelli gang," a notorious Providence gang, as the ones committing the crime. Sixty-one affidavits were presented by Attorney Thompson. The court room is crowded with labor representatives and radicals of Boston. Many correspondents from different parts of the country are here.

Sacco and Vanzetti Not Present.

Sacco and Vanzetti were not present in court. Sacco's wife and six year old child were there watching the proceedings in which the fate of husband and father is being decided.

GERMANY SEEKS WITHDRAWAL OF FRENCH TROOPS

Disarmament Confab Indefinitely Shelved

(Special to The Daily Worker)

GENEVA, Sept. 14.—Herr Stresemann, representing Germany at the league of nations confab, has made a request of the French premier, Aristide Briand, that France withdraw her troops from German soil. This request of the German premier is made on the grounds that since Germany is a member of the league she should be trusted and as proof of the good intentions of the allied powers toward Germany these troops should be withdrawn. It is not known what action Briand or the French government will take. It is expected that France will offer to cut down the number of occupant, as an effort to elide step the question of withdrawing the troops.

The general disarmament conference has been put on the shelf for the year. It is not expected that any attempt will be made to hold a conference this year.

Non-permanent members of the council are to be elected Friday. It is expected that Chile, Poland and China will be given the three-year seats and Uruguay, Belgium and Holland the one year seats.

ELECTRICAL WORKERS' UNION OFFICIAL SAYS STRIKES ARE NO GOOD

(Special to The Daily Worker)

STREATOR, Ill., Sept. 14. — Edward J. Evans, of Chicago, executive official of the Electrical Workers' Union, speaking before an afternoon gathering, scored the strike as a weapon of organized labor.

"The strike hes become obsolete," Evans declared.

Evans advocated labor insurance.

CHICAGO FUR WORKERS FIGHT B. A. MILLSTEIN

Indignation Meeting to Be Held Tomorrow

The attempts on the part of Business Agent Millstein of Local 45, Chicago Fur Workers' Union, to manipulate the coming elections so that the slate which he is putting forward wins, has caused the president of the local union to issue a special call meeting of the union to take up the question of elections and to discuss the attempt of Millstein to strangle the expression of the membership in the coming elections.

Jam Thru Decision.

At a meeting of the executive committee Millstein and his henchmen jammed thru a decision that all ballots to be used in the coming elections must be cast in the office of the union and that the appointment of tellers and supervision of the printing of ballots and determining who is to go on the ballot is to be left to Millstein henchmen. The vote which put this decision thru was 6 to 4. Among the six voting for the Millstein proposal were several not entitled to vote. The four—among whom was International Vice President Ida Weinstein—left the meeting as an expression of their indignation at Millstein's high-handed methods.

Call Special Meeting.

The following call has been sent out by the president of Local 45, calling on the membership to attend the special meeting scheduled in attempt will be made to curb Millstein's activities:

"Sisters and Brothers.

"To those who were in doubt as to the methods pursued by Millstein & Co., the Executive Board in session held Monday, Sept. 13, passed a motion to hold an election contrary to the constitution by electing their own tellers and avoiding a meeting for election as was always conducted for the election of officers, namely, to have the membership come to the office of the union or some room and cast their ballot for people who Millstein would have elected to office. The ballots are being printed by himself. Various

We Must Keep The Daily Worker

By C. E. RUTHENBERG,
General Secretary
Workers (Communist) Party.

THE DAILY WORKER has launched a campaign for $50,000. Of this amount $10,000 must be raised during the next two weeks and the whole $50,000 during the next three months.

The life of The DAILY WORKER depends upon the success of this campaign. We started The DAILY WORKER on the basis of a $75,000 fund which the members of our Party, its sympathizers and the militant workers generally subscribed in order to give the revolutionary movement in this country a militant, fighting organ which would voice its ideals and support its program. We have kept The DAILY WORKER alive through the contributions made by these same workers in raising a fund of $35,000 in 1924 and again in 1926.

AN American daily working class newspaper cannot live upon the income it receives from subscriptions and advertising at the present stage of the development of the class struggle in this country. It can only be kept alive to voice the ideals and program of the revolutionary movement through the willingness of those workers who are committed to these ideals and that program coming to its aid each year through contributions to its sustaining fund.

THE capitalist daily newspapers are sustained through the advertising which they receive from the capitalists. The capitalists are sufficiently class conscious not to support a working class, revolutionary paper which is fighting against the capitalist system with their advertising, and advertising matter from working class sources is not sufficient to replace the income which is thus denied a working class daily.

The only way this deficit in income can be made up is through contributions through a sustaining fund. The capitalist system has been obliged to resort to appeals for such a sustaining fund, and the militant workers who stand behind it have given that fund. They have kept The DAILY WORKER alive. They have made it possible for it to continue its service to the workers' cause.

Is The DAILY WORKER Worth Keeping?

THE question we have to answer in relation to The DAILY WORKER campaign for $50,000, is whether The DAILY WORKER is worth keeping? Are its services to the revolutionary working class movement sufficient to warrant the militant workers coming to its aid to the extent of raising $50,000 to "KEEP THE DAILY WORKER"?

NO ONE WHO KNOWS AND READS THE DAILY WORKER WILL QUESTION WHETHER IT IS WORTH THE SACRIFICE NECESSARY TO RAISE $50,000 "TO KEEP THE DAILY WORKER."

The DAILY WORKER is worth even greater sacrifices to the revolutionary working class movement.

The DAILY WORKER is today the heart and center of every movement which expresses a militant struggle against capitalist exploitation and oppression.

IT is The DAILY WORKER which is fighting for militant left wing trade unionism, which would make the trade unions really organs for the workers' fights for better wages, better working conditions and a higher standard of life.

It is The DAILY WORKER which brings the stories of the workers' strikes to the masses of this country

ARRINGTON AND LEWIS FLAYED BY ILLINOIS MINERS

Demand Reinstatement of Expelled Members

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Sept. 14.—Local Union 1471 of the United Mine Workers of America passed a resolution condemning Frank Farrington, deposed president of District 12, as an agent of the Peabody Coal Company, as proven by the disclosure of a contract with the company at a salary of $36,000 a year, and, for other acts of his, in conjunction with the district executive board and John L. Lewis, international president, which hurt the interests of the Illinois miners and weakened the U. M. W. of A.

Local 1471 furthermore accuses Farrington and the district board with having given moral and financial support for the purpose of railroading the Zeigler miners to jail and demands the reinstatement of certain expelled members and support of the Zeigler miners.

The resolution reads:

"Whereas, the exposure of Frank Farrington as a paid agent of the coal operators, a charge made for so many years by the progressive element in District No. 12, has been complete, resulting in his own admission that he is in the employ of the Peabody Coal Company; and

"Whereas, through the activity of this agent of the coal operators and with the active support and assistance of the district board and John L. Lewis, a number of the most active members of the union have been blacklisted, suspended, and many of them expelled; and

Trouble With Openshoppers.

EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill. (FP)—Open-shop troubles in the building trades spread to East St. Louis when a contractor recently imported laborers from Chicago and attempted operations on the Broadview hotel. The other trades tied up work for two months. Differences were adjusted when the contractor agreed to pay the union scale.

CANTON CHINESE GOVERNMENT IN PROCLAMATION TELLS POPULACE AIMS OF NATIONAL REVOLUTION

By LAURENCE TODD, Federated Press.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 14.—Documents showing just what promises are being made to the Chinese people by the radical government in Canton, whose forces are now sweeping across the country toward Peking, these documents are borne on by later press cablegrams from the scene of civil war. They indicate that the objects of the present campaign are the creation of an actual national government, the destruction of the militarism of rival feudal chiefs, the driving of foreign imperialist exploiters from the country, and the liberation of the workers and farmers from economic misery due to continuous military feuds and reactionary government.

The Canton nationalist government has issued a proclamation which says, in part:

Oppose Imperialists.

"With the exception of those who live in territory under direct control of the nationalist government, all people in China are suffering terribly at the hands of the militarists. Farmers, laborers, merchants are living in miserable conditions. This is the direct result of imperialist exploitation of China and the high-handed rule of the militarists.

"During recent years the imperialists (foreigners) have repeatedly shot down patriotic Chinese in Chinese territory. They are shamelessly declaring that they are helping the Peking government in the suppression of the nationalist movement. Openly they help the militarists against the people's army. They are now doing things they would not dare a few years ago.

To Restore Rights.

"The influence of the imperialists in China is rising. If such a state of affairs be allowed to continue China would soon be converted into a colony. It would then be difficult for the people to make any liberation movement. A national revolution would be hopeless. The nationalist government seeks to restore the lost rights forcibly taken by foreign powers.

"Therefore everybody should do his share to support the expedition. . . . The responsibility almost for the people at the rear is more important than those fighting on the battlefield. Farmers must unite to drive out reactionary elements. They must do their best to suppress banditry in their respective districts.

All Must Unite.

"Laborers should work at topmost capacity in furnishing out war materials for the front. They should not stage any strikes during the period of the expedition. Strike at this hour is suicide. Merchants should offer their unreserved support and must not believe rumors spread by reactionaries. Students must make impressive propaganda to the public."

The Whampoa Military Academy cadets at Canton, comprising the organization of young highly-trained officers of the nationalist forces, issued a similar statement.

Emissaries of the Canton government have gone to Shanghai and other distant cities where great strikes have occurred, urging the workers to prepare to take part in the new regime when the militarists shall be overthrown.

So widespread is this agitation, and so general are the signs that the Chinese masses are rising to the nationalist call, that foreign papers in the northern ports have begun to declare that Canton is justified, and that there is no "red menace" in its successful march northward. Earlier in the summer this foreign press was denouncing Canton as an agency of Moscow and the Third International.

INTERVENTION THREATS FLY AS CANTONESE ARMY ROUTS FOREIGN TOOLS

Here is a map of the critical zones in the present struggle for Chinese independence from foreign imperialist domination. Northern armies under Wu Pei Fu, British puppet, have been driven out of Hankow (1) by the Cantonese and are retreating to Honan (4). At Canton (2) British forces have clashed repeatedly with the Cantonese. Foreign interests at Shanghai (3) are becoming extremely worried about the successes of the nationalist troops.

It is The DAILY WORKER which expresses the struggle of the Negro against racial discrimination and for industrial, political and social equality.

It is The DAILY WORKER which is carrying on the struggle against American imperialism, for independence for the Philippines and Porto Rico and the right of self-determination for other American colonies.

The raising of $50,000 for the "KEEP THE DAILY WORKER FUND" will not only keep The DAILY WORKER alive, it will put it in a stronger position than ever before. It will enable it to increase its service to the workingclass movement.

The supporters of The DAILY WORKER, the members of the Workers (Communist) Party, its sympathizers, the militant fighting workers, have three times raised the necessary funds to give the revolutionary workingclass' movement a militant voice. They raised the initial fund to start The DAILY WORKER. They raised the necessary sustaining fund in 1924 and in 1925. They can "KEEP THE DAILY WORKER" by raising the $50,000 necessary to assure its publication for another year.

THE campaign for the "KEEP THE DAILY WORKER FUND" is the most important work now before the movement. NOTHING COMES AHEAD OF THE WORK NECESSARY TO RAISE THE $10,000 The DAILY WORKER needs immediately and the total of $50,000 which must be raised in the next three months.

partner of the late utility boss, Roger Sullivan, is even worse.

Minority for Christensen.

A minority at the convention are battling for endorsement of Farley Parker Christensen on the progressive ticket. Christensen was the farmer-labor candidate for president in 1924. Christensen will address a meeting in Streator during the convention. The utilities shadow gets peculiar emphasis from the fact that Streator is the old home town of the late Glenn Plumb, who spent his life in an effort to have the railroads nationalized and democratically administered, under what became universally known as the Plumb plan.

Walkar's Recommendations.

Recommendations to the delegates by Free, Walker include further agitativity in curbing injunctions, modernizing the factory inspection laws, prevanting dumping on the market in Illinois the convict products of Indiana, Wisconsin and Iowa, supporting the 22 labor papers of the state and organizing a women's bureau affiliated with the state federation of labor.

Futura Not so Bright.

"The conditions in the mining industry are somewhat improved in this state over a year ago," Walker summed up, "they are still far from satisfactory. In the building industry our brothers have had another fairly satisfactory year. Union labor has demonstrated its desire for a minimum of strife and a maximum of labor peace. Illinois has less labor trouble than any important industrial state.

"Prospects for the future are not so bright. I look for a decline in industrial activity which will become apparent soon after the congressional elections."

Walker Mum on Farrington.

Walker publishes considerable material regarding Secretary Caraway's speech of June 26 in which the Arkansas senator said, "I want to know how much money was given to John Walker and Frank Farrington. Labor men who are said to have handled the labor vote in Illinois" in the senatorial primary.

He repeats his own denials and tells of his vain efforts to appear before the senatorial slush committee in Chicago. He says nothing of Farrington, deposed president of the Illinois Mine Workers, who has since been shown to have secretly signed a $25,000 year contract with the Peabody Coal Co., leading operator in Illinois and extsive operators in Kentucky and other open shop districts.

TORONTO—(FP)—Locals of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters & Joiners have rejected the wage offer of 85c per hour made by the Toronto Builders exchange, though the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters, a branch of the English organization, has accepted it. In 1924 the contractors enforced a wage reduction.

There Has Been No "Era of Honesty" at Any Time in All America's History

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

WORKERS and farmers are being told, even by some who claim to be their friends, that the prime necessity in the parliamentary struggle today is "a return to honesty." "Honesty!" and "Justice!" are words put upon the political winds by the Victor Berger socialists in Wisconsin in the hope that they will return laden with votes on election day. Then there is Farley Parker Christensen, presidential candidate of the Farmer-Labor Party in 1920. Last week he returned to Chicago to inaugurate his campaign for United States senator on the progressive party ticket declaring "a return to honesty" to be the major plank of his platform. Then there are the hysterical appeals from the whole human flood of candidates in both the old parties, all of whom proclaim "Honesty and efficiency" as their mottoes as if they were sent down from on high, to succor a benighted world.

All this insane adoration of the past takes it for granted that "honesty" is like rare old wine long kept in storage. All that is necessary is to hunt it up in the cellar, sweep the cobwebs off, knock in the bunghole and enjoy it.

Yet the truth is that there is no honesty on top here in the United States, or anywhere else that has been the pride of oppressors over an oppressed class. The oppressing class now as always uses deceit, corruption, bribery, lies and all other diabolisms of device to maintain itself in power. There has never yet been a golden epoch of honesty in the United States since there has always been a horde of pirates, bandit ruling class in the United States.

The LaFollette campaign in 1924 reverted to the slogan of "Back to 1776" as if that period possessed some attributes desirable at the present time. To be sure it witnessed a revolution that might well be duplicated under the conditions of the present period, with the working class of today taking the place of the rising industrial and trading class of 150 years ago. But the LaFollette followers want no revolution today. They, like others, only want "a return to honesty." With this "honesty" like the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow is only a myth.

For instance, in grasping at the revelations of the senate slush fund committee, especially in Pennsylvania and Illinois with their Mellons and Insulls, one need only quote from McMaster's book, "With the Fathers," meaning the revolutionary fathers of 1776.

Turning to page 71, in the chapter on "The Political Depravity of the Fathers," we find this 100 per cent historian declaring:

"A very little study of long forgotten politics will suffice to show that in filibustering and gerrymandering, in stealing governorships and legislatures, in using force at the polls, in colonizing and distributing patronage, . . . in all the frauds and tricks that go to make up the worst form of politics, the men who founded our state and national governments were always our equals, and often our masters.

Is this the "honesty" that the liberals of today seek?

The Boston Gazette, for instance, in those revolutionary days, came out with a startling headline, "Bribery and Corruption!" that would have made a present-day Hearst succumb to envy. The Gazette charged that large sums of money were brought into Massachusetts to buy support for the constitution that the youthful capitalist class of that time was trying to mould to its own purposes.

Space will not permit of an extended digging into the past. But it might be well to recount the activities of the ruling classes in their own wars. Much is made of the fact that worker and farmer soldiers froze, starved and died thru a terrible winter at Valley Forge during the revolutionary war. School children today are not told that this was due to the fact that the food gamblers and profiteers,—supposedly "loyal,"—of the time were busy selling what the revolutionary army needed, to the British army quartered in Philadelphia and able to pay good prices.

Is this the honesty that is to be restored?

A. M. Simons, writes of the civil war in his "Social Forces in American History":

"So tremendous was the graft in connection with contracts for military supplies that most historians draw back in horror when they have lifted but a corner of the thick blanket of concealment that those who profited by the plunder have drawn over the mess. One congressional committee, headed by Robert Dale Owen, son of Robert Owen, the utopian socialist, uncovered frauds of $17,000,000 in $50,000,000 worth of contracts.

"Graft rendered the very weapons of warfare as dangerous to those who held them as to those against whom they were supposed to be directed. Carabines, that before the outbreak of hostilities had been condemned by the war department, and sold as condemned weapons at the almost nominal price of $3.50 each, were resold by the buyers to the very government that had condemned them for $22 each."

It was thru this graft that the House of Morgan, international bankers, got its start.

Is this the honesty that the so-called progressives seek to restore out of the past?

Coming down to later days, there is the ensalmed beef scandal during the Spanish-American war, which leads up to the American participation in the world war with its wholesale scandals too numerous to mention.

The trial of Harry M. Daugherty, former red-baiting and anti-labor attorney general in the republican administrations of Harding and Coolidge, reveals nothing especially new on American politics. There have been Daughartys in all administrations since the government began.

The Insulls and the Mellons have also left a broad trail all thru the pages of the nation's history.

The sums paid out today appear large. B. C. Forbes, financial writer for the Hearst press, says that $10,000,000 per annum must go to Samuel Insull. Probably less than $1,000 meant to John Hancock, the "prince of smugglers," who was the first to sign his name to the American Declaration of Independence from British rule.

The era of honesty lies in the future not in the past. Men can only be honest when they have no incentive to cheat and rob their fellowmen. That can only come under a social order where classes have been abolished, where no class remains to plunder an oppressed class, being forced to establish its own tyranny to protect and safeguard that plunder.

Honesty comes with the abolition of capitalism with its dishonesty and class rule. Honesty can only be an attribute of workers' rule culminating in the classless society based on Communist principles. For the workers and farmers there can be no fraudulent "return to honesty." They can only go forward by joining the march toward Communism.

COOLIDGE SAID TO VEER TOWARDS RECOGNITION OF SOVIET UNION

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PAUL SMITH'S, N. Y., Sept. 14.—Pressure of big industrial interests for a resumption of diplomatic relations between the United States and Russia is having its effect on the president according to reports freely circulated here. Those reports have not been contradicted by the president's unofficial spokesmen who is quick to kill rumors that do not correctly represent Coolidge's position on questions of foreign and domestic policy.

The report of the Sherwod Eddy commission to study conditions in the Soviet Union is said to have made a big impression on the president. Not that Coolidge has softened towards the Soviet regime, but that he is convinced there is not the remotest likelihood that the Bolshevik leadership will be substituted by any other and that Russia is the most stable government in Europe, offering a rich market for the surplus commodities of the United States.

The Soviet Union is doing a bigger business with the United States than before the war and manufacturers believe that a diplomatic accord between the two countries would increase this trade.

HOODED KNIGHTS STAGE BIG DUD IN WASHINGTON

Run on Bed Sheets Is Now on Toboggan

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 14.—The much-touted parade of the Ku Klux Klan turned out to be a dud. Instead of the 75,000 klansmen that were expected to march down Pennsylvania avenue, less than 10,000 appeared.

This was taken by the politicians as an indication of the passing of the klan as a decisive factor in national politics until the next crop of morons ripens in the United States.

Bigots Out of Funds.

Some journalists predicted that the Eucharistic Congress held in Chicago recently would spur the bigots into renewed activity and that the sale of hichishirts, hoods and tar and feathers would take an upward turn. But the suckers haven't got the money and those that were formerly in the klan are beginning to think that between the Knights of Columbus and the K. K. K. there isn't much to choose.

Klan Leaders Disappointed.

Klan officials were disappointed with the fiasco and showed it. So were the police who expected a large turnout. Klan orators, however, insisted that they would control the next congress and predicted that before long, laws would be enacted prohibiting immigration, registration of aliens already in this country, and "putting the holy bible into every school in the country." The assembled klaxers applauded those sentiments.

Politicians who were shivering in fear of the klux pincers in the election fight are breathing more easily today but laundry magnates who looked forward to a big dirty shirt business in the coming campaign are not so cheerful.

FOES OF MEXICO FRAME PLOT TO KIDNAP YANKS

Catholics Incite Sonora Indians to Revolt

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 14—The kidnapping of Jacob Rosenthal, a capitalist of New York, by a bandit gang and the arrest of Father Pro-Juarez Obregon by Yaqui Indians in Sonora, is considered here as part of the catholic church strategy to secure the completion of the work of embroiling the United States in a war with its wholesale scandals too numerous to mention.

Catholics Incite Bandits.

Mexican politicians under the influence of the catholic church are believed to have engaged the bandits to kidnap Arthur Lane, under-secretary of the American embassy in Mexico, in order to give the anti-Mexican elements in the United States an excuse to reopen the agitation for a break with the southern republic.

Held Up Wrong Car.

The bandits made a mistake and held up the wrong automobile.

General Obregon was held up while traveling thru the state of Sonora. The general returned to his home uninjured after the experience.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Sept. 14—That there would be no police interference with the opening of the Communist congressional campaign here tonight in Carnegie Hall became evident when it was learned that city solicitor, Charles A. Waldschmidt, had advised Edward E. Eggers, custodian of the hall, that police permits were unnecessary for indoor meetings.

The police broke the International May Day demonstration planned for this hall last may, claiming that no permit had been secured. An application had been made for permit but it had been denied by the police.

PORTO RICANS RESENT 'NAVY' RULE OF U. S.

American Corporations Hold Monopoly

By VICENTE GEIGEL POLANCO
President Juventud Nacionalista de San Juan, P. R., Member of Nationalist Party, Member Executive Committee Porto Rican Section All-America Anti-imperialist League.

THE imperialist war fought by the United States at the end of the nineteenth century brought Porto Rico within its zones of exploitation. In twenty-eight years of colonial government we are not indebted for a single act of justice. In Porto Rico there is no such a thing as liberty. There is what might be called a sort of political tolerance; that is, we are allowed to say, just to say certain things. Freedom of speech? No, indeed. A mere trick to deceive naive minds. The essentials of democracy, the fundamental principles of representative government are beyond our reach. The Jone's act, our Organic Law, is one of the most oppressive pieces of legislation congress has ever passed. Compared with the Autonomous Charter we enjoyed under the Spanish regime, the latter reveals a higher sense of justice, a purer conception of political liberty. And that was a law of monarchical Spain!

Dependency of War Department.

PORTO RICO is a dependency of the war department. The welfare of the whole country rests on the whim of an imperialist body as is the bureau of insular affairs. Congress forced upon the Porto Rican American citizenship: a citizenship meaningless to our spirit, useless in our social life, deprived of the meral significance it has in the states. The new status of citizens of the great republic has not changed in any sense our abnormal political situation. As a matter of fact, the American citizenship was granted to the Porto Ricans not as an act of justice to a community highly civilized, but, as voiced by the haircut of insular affairs, as a conclusive demonstration of the permanent occupation of the island. In other words, American citizenship, the purest expression of political rights for a loyal American, was used as a tool for imperialistic machinations.

American corporations hold such a monopoly over the land that more than 40,000 small landowners have already disappeared. Our economic situation is becoming worse. We have no industries. And the fate of our agricultural production depends on the humor of Wall Street.

Imposs Foreign Tongue.

PORTO RICO is a Spanish-speaking country. Our traditions, culture, mode of living are essentially Spanish. The imperial government has tried, in vain, to change these conditions. The fight against the language—that is the highest expression of our personality—has been continuous and merciless. Public instruction, practically from the kindergarten to college, is conducted in English. If teaching in a foreign tongue is not a pedagogical crime, I do not know what it is. Spanish, our vernacular language, is taught as a special subject! In the University of Porto Rico there are courses on the history and literature of practically every country, with one exception—Porto Rico. Perhaps the authorities think that the knowledge of our historical development and the formative elements of our nationality might endanger their schemes for the Americanization of the island. Porto Rican youth must ignore the doing and thinking of our great men, but she must know by heart the most trivial facts about Jefferson, Lincoln and the rest of the American national heroes. The official policy consists in keeping our youngsters in complete ignorance of everything that is related to our life as a people of a different race.

Americanization A Failure.

IN spite of these tyrannical measures, Americanization in Porto Rico has been a failure. And that is so due largely to our cultural resources. The first civilized community was before the foundation of Jamestown. And from that date on our standards of living have been essentially European. Spanish is spoken thruout the island. We have a literature of our own.

THE failure of Americanization is also due to the governmental policy of imperial America. Porto Ricans thought that America stood for liberty, democracy and similar slogans, powerful enough to lure the crowds. But when we realize that the United States stands in Porto Rico for both economic and political exploitation; when we realize that political corruption has been the most remarkable product of the new regime (the politicians being by-products), the sentiment of national independence has conquered the public mind in such a way that the Porto Ricans will never be satisfied with any concession from the United States short of their complete freedom as a people.

MANVILLE, R. I.—(FP)—After a conference of Gov. A. J. Pothier with mill officials from Manville-Jenckes Co. mills and United Textile Workers heads, it was announced that a settlement of the strike of cotton workers had been reached. The workers have yet to ratify or reject the plan, which provides return in work at the Manville Mill and of sympathetic strikers at Nourse, Globe and Social mills and reinstatement of union leaders.

Poland--The Land of White Terror

One Case Amongst Thousands.

SYLVESTER BOGANSKI of the village of Kustiki in the community of Kostanlowo in the district of Vilelle was arrested, together with his sister by the Defensive. During the search in their house nothing was found. After the search several pieces of the equipment of the house disappeared.

On Dec. 24th, 1924 Boganski was transported, together with his sister to the town of Krasni in the administration of the tenth batallion of the frontier guard.

On Dec. 25th Boganski heard from the neighboring room the voice of his sister; he heard a conversation, then laughing, singing and finally crying . . . Boganski's sister was made drunk with alcohol. In the morning one heard again crying and terrible lamentation. As Boganski heard afterwards, pins were pushed under the foot nails of his sister and her hair was torn out in order to induce her to sign a statement.

Beaten Savarsly.

On Dec. 26th Boganski was called to the office and the examination began: The sergeant and a certain Stachek attacked Boganski and beat him with their revolvers. After one and a half to two hours they undressed him completely, bound his hands and feet, fettered him to a bench and began to beat him with sticks. Then they beat him with iron wire and with a sapper's spade. The police agent, Stachek forced a wet rag into Boganski's mouth and then they beat him with sticks on his feet. Boganski fainted and when he regained his consciousness, he was examined again.

When he gave no answer, he was again fettered, thrown against the floor several times and beaten with wires and iron sticks till he fainted again. Then they poured water over him, fettered his hands to his breast and fetched two new sticks because the others were broken. The whole procedure was repeated once more till Boganski lay on the floor unconscious for the third time. They took him to the guard's room where he passed the night with terrible pains and asked the soldiers to shoot him.

No End to Torture.

On Dec. 27th Boganski was again asked to come down for examination, again tortured and maltreated and left in the guard's room.

On Dec. 28th he was tortured for the fourth time. His hair was torn out and the sensitive spot behind the ear crushed.

On Dec. 29th he was again tortured and the sergeant and Stachek ordered him to write a letter to his wife in which he said "I accuse nobody to have caused my death." Then a hot fluid with a powder in it was poured into his throat. He fell down like dead. His sister was led into the room, her brother's letter was given to her and her brother's naked body uncovered. With the scream: "Beast, why do you murder an innocent man?" She fainted.

The Polish rulers are the tools of British imperialism.

On the evening of the same day he was beaten on his feet and breast. Then he signed two statements: 1. That everything in the minutes is true. 2. That all persons mentioned by the sergeants had participated in the attack. In the beginning Boganski resisted and refused to sign, but they began again to beat him and the sergeant himself signed the statements with Boganski's hand. Then they turned out the light and lit pine chips, forcing him to look into the blinding light. After that Boganski lost his eyesight for some time.

On Dec. 30th Boganski was tortured for the eighth time, his hair was torn out and he was beaten on his head and feet. Then the agents opened the window and tried to shoot Boganski "whilst attempting to escape." Boganski anticipated this because the officer who was present said to the agents: "Do with him what you like, I take the responsibility." Then Boganski asked for a revolver to shoot himself. Stachek gave him one which Boganski turned against his own breast. However, the revolver was not loaded. The hangmen laughed brutally and continued to beat Boganski.

On Jan. 1st and 2nd Boganski was again tortured in the same way, this time by five agents. Boganski was thrown on the floor, Stachek sat on his breast and held his hands. A second agent held his head. The third sat on his feet. Then Boganski was forced to drink urine mixed with petroleum, five full bottles.

On Jan. 4th the execution of Boganski and two peasants was staged. The soldiers were placed in rows and only in the last moment they were sent back under the pretext that the telegram of the president ordering the execution had not yet arrived.

On Jan. 6th Boganski was informed that he would be transported to Wilkia where he might be acquitted, but he was warned to keep secret what had happened to him here, otherwise there would be ways and means to repeat the tortures.

On Feb. 3rd Boganski was released in Wilcika . . .

GORKY GREETS RUSS WORKER CORRESPONDENTS

Famous Novelist Drops Good Suggestions

Maxim Gorky, the great Russian novelist, is of the opinion that moralizing is poor propaganda. Ridicule is a better weapon, he thinks.

Recently the editor of the Workers' and Peasants' Correspondent, the official organ of thousands of worker correspondents scattered all over the Soviet Union, sent Gorky a complete file of the paper, with a request that he give his opinion of it. The following letter was received from the noted novelist, which gives the lie to the stories that have been circulated by enemies of the workers' republic, to the effect that Gorky was against the Soviet regime:

Gorky Works Long Hours.

"Comrades, we cannot accomplish very much by means of correspondence. It would be difficult for me to write long articles picking your correspondence to pieces word by word. And just now I am working no fewer than ten hours out of the twenty-four. If I were in Moscow, we could arrange some face-to-face meetings. I should learn something from you and, perhaps, you would learn something from me.

Kill With Ridicule.

"Many of you like to moralize. This kind of activity is not profitable. It is better to kill with ridicule. A harsh word must be hurled out abruptly, like a blow; but in passing judgment you must remember that you are judging comrades whose life is very hard and who as yet do not understand the enormous demands of the present historic time. It is hard for them to understand this, because they haven't the time to learn.

No Time to Get Wise.

"Not all fools are ignorant because they are lazy, some might have been wise, but time was lacking. The roads that I have traveled are filled with the wrecks of those who did not have enough time to make themselves real men and some of them were mercifted than I. These wrecks I shall never forget.

"I give you a hearty handclasp. I wish courage to all of you and close friendship. Stand close together and learn to aid one another to live thru these grave hours and days.

(Signed) MAXIM GORKY.

Blasco Ibanez Says Spain Will Reenter League of Nations

GENEVA, Sept. 14.—Spain will immediately re-enter the league of nations once the regime of General Primo de Rivera is ended, declared Blasco Ibanez, Spanish novelist and leader of opposition to General de Rivera, in a note to President Nintchitch of the league of nations assembly today.

Lumber Man A Suicide.

SPANISH LABOR, PERSECUTED BY PRIMO DE RIVERA, ASKS WORKERS OF THE U. S. TO MAKE PROTEST

(By a Spanish Worker)

MADRID, (By Mail).—Since the Spanish Communist Party was constituted, a virulent and brutal persecution has been endured by its militant and leading members. Seventy-five per cent have been in jail for varied questions and the prisons of Madrid, Barcelone, Bilbao, Oviedo and Valencia have always held Communists.

Frame-Up Gives Nine Years.

Some days ago Comrade David Rey was tried by the military court. He was accused of writing an insulting letter to Generale Primo de Rivera, Martinez Anido and Milans de Bochs, and was condemned to nine years' imprisonment.

It was proven that the letter could not have been written by Comrade Rey, since when it was written he was held incommunicado in prison. It was probably written by police spies in order to rob the party and the working class of one of their best militants.

The Red Aid in Action.

The press has not published any information on this outrageous case. The censorship will not allow and severely and brutally stops any news of this nature.

The Red Aid of Spain, (Socorro Rojo) has initiated a very active campaign in behalf of David Rey, publishing illegally a manifesto explaining his case and demanding the Spanish proletariat show its solidarity in his behalf. The manifesto is being read in all factories thruout the country.

The Garraf Case.

Those indicted for the offense against the royal train near the coast of Garraf have been condemned to death, imprisonment for life and other minor penalties by the military judges. All the indicted are affiliated with the Catalunian separatist party.

It was proven at the court-martial that the plot was prepared by the police in order to accuse the separatist party, which is strong and powerful in Catalonia and has always shown violent opposition to the present government.

Many Death Santances.

The separatist movement of Catalonia and the Communist activity among the workers are the two real enemies of the military dictatorship. Both have to endure the brutality of police persecution.

In three years of the military dictatorship the number of death sentences signed by the government exceeds the total executions since the beginning of the century. Many working class militants are in jail awaiting sentence.

Ask International Help.

The Spanish proletariat demands help against its outrageous persecutors from the workers of other countries. The working class of the United States could make their protest against this cruel persecution of their Spanish fellow workers heard by registering their resentment at the Spanish consulates in the United States.

TERNATIONAL LABOR DEFENSE CONFERENCE SETS FORTH VIEWS ON DEFENDING CLASS-FIGHTERS

Call to the Workers of America by the Second Annual Conference of International Labor Defense.

t the prisons of America today, from one end of the country to the other, there are close to one hundred workers who are erving long terms for no crime but their economic or political pinions, or for their activities in the interest of the working class. hey are the chief victims of the struggle for life and freedom of he workers against the capitalist class.

In addition, there are several hundred workers involved in cases hat are pending, workers who are out to come to trial, or hose appeals are pending before igher courts, all of them threatened ith prison sentences or with deportation. These workers are not criminals. In the greatest majority of the ases there is not even an overt act harged against them. They are held ly because they are devoted to the ause of the workers, because of their pinions, their activity in strikes or heir work for the movement of labor.

These workers who languish in capitalist prisons or who are menaced ith such imprisonment represent arious political and economic opinns and organizations. Among them re members and officials of the American Federation of Labor and the Industrial Workers of the World, socialists and Communists and anarchists. hey are pickets from the strikes of he Passaic textile workers, of the New ork fur workers and cloak makers; hey are from the miners in Zeigler who have fought militantly against ick and slim and the coal operators, as well as the corrupt agents of he operators in the ranks of the nion; they are members of the I. W. W. in the harvest fields or in California whose sole crime was membership in a labor organization; they are Communists who are charged on the basis of belonging to the Communist arty.

These workers are among the most alert and devoted in the labor movement. They are the ones who help to inspire and organize the working class to renewed heights of struggle against exploitation and misery and injustices. hey are the prisoners of the working lass.

TO the already large number of class war prisoners is being added daily rom the ranks of the working class. The arrests in the Passaic textile workers' strike and the strike of the New York cloak makers give daily vidence of this. The conviction of Edward Horacek in Pittsburgh and he threatened imprisonment of his 2 comrades, is followed by the conviction of George Papcun because of his activities in organizing the Spanish-Ama coal miners. In Fall River, Massachusetts, three Portuguese workers are threatened with a "sedition" harge and deportation. The supreme ourt of the country is soon to rule n the case of C. E. Ruthenberg, and his will affect the freedom also of seventy-four other workers in the Michigan criminal syndicalism" cases. A California court will soon decide the fate of Charlotte Anita Whitney, who is charged under the infamous "criminal syndicalism law" which has been used to strangle the labor movement in that state as in the others.

Tom Mooney and Warren K. Billings are still imprisoned altho the frame-up against them has been universally acknowledged. The shadow of death hovers constantly over the lives of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, despite the protests thruout the world of workers and public men who have adjudged them innocent. Mary Schmidt, J. B. McNamara, Edgar Combs, the Centralia I. W. W. prisoners, the California I. W. W., Paul Crouch, and scores of others still rot in the prisons of American capitalism. Pious wishes and obscure representations have not secured their release. Only united protest and organization of all honest workers and progressives of the country can free these splendid labor fighters from the living death they must endure.

For a record of the results of the NEP instituted by LENIN in 1921 read

THE INDUSTRIAL REVIVAL IN SOVIET RUSSIA

Clothbound $1.00

IT was the persistent protest of the workers of America and Mexico which really secured the release of Charles Cline, Jose Rangel and their brothers from Texas prisons. Only the mass demonstrations and prompt protest of the workers in every part of the world has prevented the textile barons and their kept judiciary in Massachusetts from executing their dastardly plan of death against Sacco and Vanzetti.

The fraternal aid of our brothers in other countries in the campaign of protest against the threatened execution of Sacco and Vanzetti has demonstrated to us the value and need of international solidarity for the cause of labor defense in all lands. Just as in America, so in the capitalist countries throughout the world, the war against the workers and the peasants grows sharper and more bitter. Thousands of the best fighters for freedom in Europe have been cruelly murdered. Other thousands have been tortured and imprisoned under the most horrible circumstances. In some parts of the world whole countries have become a great prison for the workers and peasants.

The workers of America who have stretched out the hand of fraternal solidarity with the cause of the Hungarian, Polish, British and Lithuanian workers threatened with death or imprisonment in the last year, must continue their splendid work of aid and protest in behalf of the flower of the European fighters for liberation. In China and South America, and in the colonies and semi-colonies of American imperialism like Haiti, Cuba, the Philippine Islands, Hawaii, San Domingo, the prisoners of imperialism depend upon us to aid them in their battle for liberty.

THIS condition calls for generous aid and swift action. Our imprisoned brothers and comrades must be released from capitalist captivity. Their dependents must be relieved of their sufferings. The workers who are threatened with imprisonment or death must be snatched from the hands of their prosecutors and saved for the great struggle of the working class. To the class we look for aid, and those who are menaced with prison we must show a great solidarity.

This is a time when every worker must join his voice and strength in a mighty movement for the defense of labor. The signs which point to reheaved attacks upon the workers and their conditions of life, against their unions and their political organizations, against their right to strike and to organize, make it imperative that such a movement be built into a great weapon for the working class.

Such a movement was formed at the first conference of International Labor Defense a year ago. It was the object of I. L. D. to fraternally unite all elements and sections of the labor movement into a powerful non-partisan movement for labor defense. Now, after a year of its activity, the Second Annual Conference of International Labor Defense has been a foremost champion of the cause of the class war prisoners. It has shown and will continue to show its united and non-partisan character in every field of its work. In its campaigns for the Passaic strikers, for Sacco and Vanzetti, for the Pittsburgh Communists, for the Fall River anarchists, for the Zeigler miners, and the numerous other workers whose defense it has led, it has shown not only the need of a working class defense organization but also its advantage to workers engaged in a struggle for better conditions.

ONLY swift and united action of the workers can prevent the capitalist class from achieving their ambition to railroad to prison every active fighter for labor's cause. The penetrating and informing light of publicity must be continually thrown upon the attempts of the bosses and their judges to frame up workers because of political or economic opinions or affiliations. Unjust sentences and inhuman and brutal treatment of class war prisoners must be bared to the eyes of the whole working class. Legal aid must be provided for those workers who fall into the hands of capitalist injustice. Prison relief must be provided for them and relief for their dependents. Campaigns must be conducted for the release of those workers who are already imprisoned. Work must be carried on persistently for the elimination of the vicious "anti-sedition" laws on the statute books, which are used to break up the solidarity and organizations of labor. Aid must be extended to our class brothers on other sides of the ocean who are being imprisoned and persecuted for their class solidarity.

International Labor Defense has already begun this work. It has marshalled the forces of big sections of the labor movement for the fight for labor defense. It has proved many times over the need of the American workers of a mighty shield to protect themselves from the ever-present menace of prison and death for labor activity.

More aid is needed and greater solidarity. Every worker must unite fraternally on the basis of uniform and partisan labor defense which recognizes no basis other than that of the need of fighting for the lives and freedom of workers who have been seized by the capitalist enemy.

WE must build a strong shield of the working class of America.

We must defend the men and women of labor who are fighting for the cause of labor.

Our Second Annual Conference issues a call to all workers, without regard to their political opinions or affiliations to unite in the international Labor Defense.

Fight against the continued imprisonment of active labor fighters!

Demand the freedom of all class war prisoners!

Fight against the anti-labor laws that are used to strangle the labor movement!

Unite for the Defense of Labor!

International Labor Defense.

"COLOR LINE" AIDS THE BOSS TO DETRIMENT OF THE WORKERS

By WILLIAM PICKENS.

The primary lesson for black and white workers to learn in the United States is that a "color line" is of no use to them. Color lines and other mere racial lines are institutions for the classes, not for the masses. A color line may bring some distinction to plutocrats, but can bring only division and weakness to the ranks of those who labor. In a society where the primary aim is profits, color will never be permitted to tie the hands of the profiteers in their dealings with the laborers.

A millionaire who affects a mania about "color" in his own social ranks will use any color whatsoever in the interests of his business if he regards it as being in the interest of his business; he will break the strikes of any color by the use of any other color; in a war on laborers he will break the heads of any color by the strong arms of any other color; he is interested in color prejudice among the workers only because it keeps them divided into a majority and a large minority germ, hostile to each other—with the black and resentful minority always ready to undercut the white majority when the latter demands too much or refuses to be submissive.

Must Unite Forces.

There can be no real emancipation for black people, nearly all of whom are in the working class, and no permanent security for white workers until these two groups understand their mutual interests, can camp and work together in harmony. For the blacks this division in the ranks of the workers is a desperate situation indeed, for they become a easy tool of th employers, who use them to beat down the status of all workers, including the black workers. And to the white workers these blacks present a direct menace. Thus the blacks have friction on the very plane where it would profit them most to have accord, for they must live and compose on the economic plane of these poorer whites. of the working whites. As workers and consumers the laboring whites are their group—but the employer whites

Having great faith in heaven and other vast and unseen powers, the negro has been expecting either God or these rich white people to settle his affairs and do him justice or see that justice is done him. He has even been in the habit of thinking and charging all his woes to the opposition of the "po' whites." It seems seldom to occur to him or to the poorer whites that there is but one real interest in this country for poor people, for working people, of any color, and that they must pursue, defend and sustain that interest together, with no thought of color. Every one of the so-called "interracial" movements in this country recognizes this truth in fact if not in creed. They go on the assumption that white and colored people, of the various classes even, have the same interests regardless of race and color. Surely, then, the poor who suffer the same lack and are pinched by the same need ought to see the community of their interests.

Colored workers in America need not expect white employers to defend black workers against white workers, except when the employers are at war with the white workers. When the war is over the blacks are to be the chief losers every time.

Do Away With Color Line.

But in any and all cases a division of labor on a "color line," or any other irrelevant line, is a loss to all the laborers every time.

The common cement of workers should be their labor, and neither politics nor religion nor the ancient superstitions about "race" should be permitted to divide them.

BISHOP BROWN SPENDS HIS 71ST BIRTHDAY PUSHING OVER STATE

GALION, Ohio, Sept. 14. — Bishop William Montgomery Brown, when asked how he intended to celebrate his 71st birthday, said that he thought he would spend it pushing over the government.

I want to be tried for something, he said. I do not suppose it makes much difference what it is. I was almost dead when the church first brought me to trial for heresy, and look at me now. I have lived more in the past five years than I did in the previous 66. If I could only manage to be brought to trial for my Communism, I think I might live to be as old as Methusaleh.

When the church brought me to trial for heresy, he went on, it discovered that every churchman was a heretic; and if America were to bring me to trial for my Communism, I think it might discover that every American is a Communist.

Not many Americans will agree to that, he was told.

New Book.

They will, he chuckled; they will when they read this. He held up a copy of his new book, "My Heresies," just off the presses of the John Day company, New York.

Of course, I do not advocate Communism, he said, any more than I advocate evolution or the sunrise, or the fact that it is warmer in summer than it is in winter. Life is too short to advocate anything. The truth does not need to be advocated, and when we advocate lies, we only find ourselves going to war or trying other folks of hers. All the truth needs is to be pointed, and I cannot help pointing that America is the most Communistic civilization that ever was.

The only trouble with America is that she has not noticed this. She is trying to be laid siegelistic in a Communist order, just as the church tried to be orthodox long after orthodoxy was impossible.

Nobody can be individualistic in America. It takes the labor of millions now to keep each one of us alive, and if anything is wrong with anybody, something is wrong with everybody. People may still have individualistic theories, but they cannot live by them. The church tried it, and failed. The government is still trying it and is failing fast.

Getting Into Mess.

The government imagines that American interests thruout the world can somehow be distinguished from human interests; and just look at the mess that we are getting into. We are trying to be great and we are becoming a great nuisance. We are encouraging everybody to fear us; which, of course, means that they will hate us. We are doing about everything we can to manufacture ill-will and war.

Just now, for instance, in company with the other little minded big nations, we are trying to assert American interests in China—putting it up to the Chinese to look out for Chinese interests. It is an utterly wrong point of view. America has no business in China except to look out for Chinese interests, nor in Europe except to advance European interests. If we were to follow that policy, we would make friends instead of enemies, and that is the only way, in a Communistic order, that one's own interest can be served.

For human nature is Communistic. It wants to serve; and when it is freed from the theory of individualism, it devotes itself to the service of the other fellow. Service begets service and love begets love. The teachings of Jesus, as given in the gospel, the world's greatest human drama, are not lofty sentiments and noble notions as to how life ought to be lived. They are straight-forward statements of the truth about human life, showing the only possible way that it can be fully lived; and anyone who pursues the policy of individualism instead is sadly misinformed.

Opinion on War.

National government, as we know it today, inevitably leads to international war. Just as our notions of domestic government inevitably lead to social war. We are making war, for instance, on the so-called criminal element in all our American cities; and the harder we wage this war, the more crime there is. As a matter of fact, there is no criminal element. A criminal is merely a little brother with an individualistic outlook. He is not bad. He is not inhuman. He is quite as human as a preacher, and the chances are that he got his individualistic outlook in the first place from the church.

The church may have got him to thinking that the biggest business he could engage in was the salvation of his own little individualistic soul; and not getting any satisfactory self-expression out of the method the church laid out for him to use, he set out to save it with a gun. This does not mean that he changed his point of view. He simply changed his methods. If he knew anything, he would know better than to try to express life in any such individualistic way. But we can hardly expect him to know any more than the church and the government do.

Crime Question.

These gunmen are dear fellows, and we ought to find a way to do something for them. I am sure they would respond all right. The trouble is that we want them to quit being gunmen, while we are unwilling to quit being gunmen ourselves. We go after them with guns. We actually imprison and hang them, by way of showing our fine, fraternal feeling, and then seem surprised when they develop something of the same attitude toward us.

Do you not believe in a police force? the white haired heretic was asked.

Oh, yes, he answered, and I believe the police should be well armed. Not with guns and clubs, however. They should be armed with understanding. They should be men and women whom nobody could possibly fear. They should inspire friendship and confidence and courage. They should understand that every human being is trying to realize a human life, and they should be passionately interested in helping him.

Punishment, of course, would be out of the question. Jails should be abolished altogether. There should be compulsory education, of course, and compulsory work, but not by the present method. Instead of compelling the prisoner or the boy to an uninteresting school, or to take an uninteresting job, the school and the job should be compelled to become so interesting that crime could not possibly break away from them.

Pushing Our Government.

That is the human way to fight crime, and it is the way the average American employs, in so far as he is able to, in dealing with his own children. It is effective, too. Children who are given that sort of attention seldom become criminals. When we realize that we are all one family after all, we shall try the same method on everybody's children; only, of course, by pooling our knowledge and our resources, we can look for considerably greater results. The main thing that seems to stand in the way is our notion of government. As a patriotic American, I should like to do my part in the next election, or undermine that notion, and push it out of our way. Do you suppose that I could get myself tried for pushing over the government?

WITH THE YOUNG WORKERS

CONDUCTED BY THE YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE

One of the teams of the Red Star Sports Club, New York.

Mass. Students Out to Organize League

NORWOOD, Mass. On Sunday, Sept. 5, 1926, representatives of the various Young Workers Leagues in District 1 met here. Norwood, Maynard, Gardner, Milford, N. H. and Worcester were among the units represented, with the addition of a few party representatives from different locals.

Comrade Ray, district organizer, called the meeting together, after which all representatives reported on the activities of the different Young Workers Leagues. Judging from most of the reports, the units have not been quite as active as could be expected, but this is, in a large measure, due to the summer lull in the movement activity.

This, however, will be remedied by more intensive educational and organizational work. The organizational end of this work will be taken care of, in part, by a committee of five, selected from the students of the Y. W. L. Summer School, these students being Paul Martiffa (Worcester), Eero Laakso (Fitchburg), Jerma Kangas (Keene, N. H.), Veliamo Jobuson (Worcester) and Sirkka Lolja (Maynard). Their five weeks' training at summer school has fitted them for this work, and they are more interested in the movement than ever, and if they are successful, and we are sure they will be, in instilling some of this enthusiasm in some of the other young comrades, all Young Workers Leagues will be on the upward grade.

The expenses incurred by this organizational committee will be defrayed by a series of entertainments between the different leagues, and it is hoped that these entertainments will be beneficial, inasmuch as they will create an interest in the work.

Youth Appeal in Labor Day Paper

By LOUIS BLUME.
Young Worker Correspondent.

BOSTON, Mass. A grand old custom was resuscitated here this year when some union members paraded on Labor Day while a cold drizzle fell. One striking milk wagon drivers, against whom an injunction is in force, marched in front, clad in jumpers and overalls. President John Kearny of the Boston Central Labor Union upset precedent by walking naturally. The Workers Party are not those who would let the revival pass unnoticed. So the Boston Worker was set up and printed for Labor Day distribution.

The platform of the Workers Party of Massachusetts occupied a prominent place in the makeup. As opposition on our mill-owning senator, Wm. Butler, and an appeal to the young workers of Boston were featured. And very important, the labor history of the notorious democrat, David F. Walsh, was laid upon

The distribution of these papers were expertly handled and 5,000 of them were gone in an hour. It was good to see workers on cars to get the paper. One sympathizer into whose hands a copy chanced to come, cried "Souvenir of Labor Day—some Souvenir!"

CHICAGO FEDERATION OF LABOR—PAST AND PRESENT.

By ARNE SWABECK.

MILITANT speeches may yet stir the Chicago Federation of Labor to its depths despite its recent big swing towards strictly old line conservative craft union collective bargaining policies, promotion of respectable schemes of labor banking, labor insurance, and support of successful so-called labor friends on the capitalist party tickets—successful because of their bigger slush funds.

This happened, for instance, at a recent Chicago Federation of Labor meeting when Paul McKenna delivered a ringing message from the British coal miners. He spoke as the representative of a group of strikers, doggedly determined not to succumb to the dastardly attacks of British capitalism. The rebel spirit of the British coal miners struck a profoundly sympathatic note in the Chicago Federation of Labor. As a result the local trade unions are now giving splendid donations to the British coal miners.

Stirring Fights.

STIRRING also have been some of the fights of late, created by the demands of progressive delegates, that the federation adhere to its one time progressive position and adopt the methods and policies required by the growing consolidation and growing militancy of the forces of the employers. However, stubborn opposition and bitter denunciation have been met with by the federation leadership!

The Chicago Federation of Labor in the past established a splendid tradition, but a couple of years ago it was thrown on the scrap heap. Up until then its record was one of leading progressive measures strengthening their ranks. Of course the policy of an organized body is reflected by its leadership, so also with the present change.

Past Record.

AMONG the past activities of the labor movement in which the Chicago Federation of Labor took the initiative and practically the leadership must be mentioned particularly such great undertakings as the organization of the stockyards workers in 1918 and the organization of the steel workers in 1919. The Chicago Federation of Labor in that period was the warm friend and real champion of the political and class war prisoners. It gave real support to the campaign for the freedom of Tom Mooney; even organized mass demonstrations. It gave support to Sacco-Vanzetti. It supported the campaign for the prisoners taken in the raid at St. Joe, Michigan, and other victims of the class struggle.

THE Chicago Federation broke with the policy of Samuel Gompers of support of so-called labor friends within the capitalist parties and launched the labor party of 1918. It gave real support to the splendid parade of 140,000 Chicago workers protesting against the notorious Landis award. It supported the movement for amalgamation of the trade unions. It went on record repeatedly for recognition of Soviet-Russia. Even the recent accomplishments of establishing the first labor radio broadcasting station in the country, despite the policies which are now dominating and naturally will be voiced over the radio, shows what organised labor can do.

Wide Influence.

THE influence of the Chicago Federation of Labor has extended far and wide, undoubtedly due to the progressive policies pursued in the past. The rank and file trade union members, the local unions in the whole of the middle west, chafing under reactionary autocracy of the late Samuel Gompers, his administration and in many instances the executives of the international unions, found encouragement in the rebel note sounded in those days by the Chicago Federation of Labor.

HOWEVER, when in 1923 the national labor party movement was pushed ahead to accomplish a nationally unified party for the coming presidential elections, but too rapid for its slow development amongst the broad masses of workers, the Chicago Federation of Labor succumbed to the pressure of Samuel Gompers. The labor party organized by them had become part of this movement. The change following the anrrender became rapid and complete. The Chicago Federation of Labor now adheres to the reactionary political policy of support of candidates amongst republicans and democrats. The labor party is tabooed.

THE Chicago Federation of Labor went on record to support Frank L. Smith, chairman of the Illinois commerce commission, for candidate for senator of Illinois, whose election was secured thru the immense slush funds made available by the utilities corporations, who depend on this commerce commission for favors—favors detrimental to the interests of the rank and file workers. The Chicago Federation of Labor has completely renounced its support for amalgamation of the trade unions.

No Organizing Effort.

ITS path entirely away from progressive policies is particularly expressed in the attitude of the federation leadership towards the existing drives to organize the unorganized workers. The present prosperity period should be the real opportunity for organization. The federation leadership at the present gives no initiative whatsvar. In Chicago two organization drives are being carried on, on a local scale, that of the machinists' and of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' unions. The latter have met nothing but expressed hostility from the federation leadership, while the international Ladies' Garment Workers are pursuing militant methods of organization. A number of shops have already been signed up and a healthy change takes place since the downward trend following its strike in 1925, when left wingers were expelled from the union by the reactionaries who were then, in power.

WHEN members of the Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, mostly mothers leaving their children behind, were thrown into jail to serve the terms of defying the injunction issued by the Chicago Federation of Labor leadership failed utterly to measure up to any past record. Never did it attempt even the mildest efforts the American Federation of Labor declaration to completely disregard injunctions and openly defy such usurpation of power during the strike. And when the victims landed in jail the federation policy became the one of silence publicly and backdoor dickering with capitalist politicians.

AT the time when mass demonstrations were necessary to arouse the workers to recognize the dangers of the injunction weapon and to help defeat it, this leadership turned its back upon the prisoners and contented themselves with a formal plea for a pardon from Governor Small. Why no, as could be expected, failed to act, they got busy excusing him, and to further cement their present alliance with the particular corrupt set of politicians of the republican party headed by Governor Small.

Future events will undoubtedly further test the leadership of the Chicago Federation of Labor and surely they will ultimately help strengthen the ranks of the militants.

MR. FORSTMANN 'REORGANIZES' HIS COMPANY UNION

His Tool Is Rusty; Needs Repair

By ROBERT DUNN.

PUZZLE problem for labor economists:

If it takes a 31-weeks' strike to make Julius Forstmann, millionaire woolen magnate of Passaic, to "reorganize" his company union, how long will it take Mr. Forstmann to recognize a real labor union affiliated with the American Federation of Labor?

Union is Rusty.

YES, Julius Forstmann is repairing his company union. It has rusted badly and just about fallen to pieces since the textile workers left Mr. Forstmann alone with it and en empty mill last February, when he is picking up the pieces and trying to put it together again. He is trying to blow new life into the corpse. Will he be successful in reviving it? We think not. All of the F. and H. workers except the few scabs think not, too. And if they keep thinking that way, and striking that way, it will not be 6 months or 7 weeks, and possibly not even 7 days, before Forstmann quits trying to play tricks on his workers and decides to deal with the Passaic local of the United Textile Workers of America.

FORSTMANN has had this company union on hand for several years and it's one of the most undemocratic, powerless, stupid company unions it has ever been my duty to examine. A joint committee type of "representative assembly" with meetings of the sucker members four times a year. Even the puppet company union at the Italiatic National Industrial Conference Board have regarded Forstmann's company union as a joke and failed to include it in their surveys on this subject. They knew that it was even more than the usual 100 per cent company and 0 per cent union.

Polishes Machine.

NOW Forstmann, at the eleventh hour of the Passaic strike, is trying to repaint his toy. After years of spying, blacklisting, bribery, bullying and outright violence thru the old company union he wants to polish up the old deceptive machine by having a committee of three non-labor citizens act as mediators and settle differences that the company can't compose with its intimidated workers.

There is nothing new about such a proposal. Some of the most ruthless company unions have been signed up and a healthy change takes place since the downward trend following its strike in 1925, when left wingers were expelled from the union by the reactionaries who were then, in power.

Too Late.

NO, Forstmann is too late. The company union cannot be reconstructed to fool the workers. It may "go down" with the wage slaves who fight for Forstmann in Prussia, but not in Passaic. That is the position of the American Federation of Labor after careful study of hundreds of these worker-misleading plans.

Neither will Forstmann's other proposed patch help his dummy union at all—the proposal to have only elected "representatives" instead of both elected and appointed ones as at present. This may also look to Forstmann like a good joker to put over on the workers, but it gives them not one iota more of economic power or independence.

THEY still have no treasury, no meetings off the company property, no meetings without Forstmann Reinhold being present, no functions such as a labor union performs when it is free from the dominance of management. Scores of the old company unions in America have this straight elective committee system. The Interborough "Brotherhood" of New York, the Pullman Plan, used to betray and defeat the Pullman portars, and other various plans are exactly of the type Mr. Forstmann now proposes in his latest effort to trick his workers back to the shops.

Desparate Situation.

THIS Forstmann maneuver indicates the desperate situation in which the company finds itself without workers to turn out the fall business. It serves also to clarify the central and cardinal issue of the strike: Real unionism vs. company unionism. No more important issue confronts the whole American working class today. To support the Passaic strikers is to take an effective whack at the rapitle company union in its typical form. Workers everywhere should send increasing support, and send it quick. Bread for Passaic strikers is a telling blow, not only at this particular Forstmann feudalism, but at the whole company system. Contributions should be rushed to the General Relief Committee, Textile Strikers, 745 Main Ave., Passaic, N. J.

WORKERS, and believers in real labor unionism, help the Passaic strikers defeat the company union.

NOTES OF LABOR AND LEFT WING ACTIVITIES IN THE EAST

By JOSEPH ZACK & CHARLES KRUMBEIN.

AN outstanding achievement of the left wing leadership in the Furriers' Union in New York was the organization campaign carried on among the Greek workers engaged in the industry here. Immediately after taking control of the union, the left wing officials, with the support of the rank and file, launched a drive to organize the bloc of Greeks who, unorganized, constituted a menace to the organized workers. The result was that, after a very short strike, they organized about 1,000 or 1,100 workers and won almost all the Greeks in the fur industry.

The left wing leadership in the I. L. G. W. U. also carried on an organizing campaign, thru which some 3,000 new members were added to the union.

THE organization campaigns in both of these unions were carried on in a manner very different from that which had been used by the reactionary bureaucracy in the past. The left wing leadership drew the membership of the unions into the campaign, and rank and filers, organizing on the job, were to a large extent responsible for the success of the drives.

Organizing Textile Workers in Passaic.

THE organization methods employed in Passaic were very different from those used in the organized textile trades. In Passaic there was no organization, not even the semblance of a union. The objective conditions, however, were ripe for organization and struggle. A number of militant workers employed there proceeded to organize councils in the textile mills. These councils were later organized on a mass basis—in one instance involving eight or nine hundred members. They began to propagate demands for the improvement of the workers' conditions, with the result that strikes took place.

THE procedure followed was this. One strike was called—in the Botany mills, and then these workers were used to picket other mills, with the result that within a few days mill after mill came out. The first day forty or fifty would come out, the second day half of the entire mill would follow suit; by the third day all the workers in the mill would be out.

The United Front Committee was then formed, consisting of representatives of the various councils. In this way thousands of workers were organized in a completely unorganized textile city.

In the Building Trades.

THE building trades are more or less well organized that is, insofar as new work or buildings is concerned. There are a number of crafts however, that have no organization.

One of them is the plumbers' helpers. The policy followed by the militant workers there was to organize clubs of plumbers' helpers. A mass meeting was called and a committee elected to go to the plumbers' shops and demand that the helpers be organized. As a result of the propaganda and agitation carried on by the helpers the plumbers have been forced to take some action. They called a meeting of the helpers and the prospects are that steps will soon be taken to organize them into the union.

ANOTHER unorganized craft in the building trades is that of the hardware setters. The hardware setters come under the jurisdiction of the carpenters. But while they work with carpenters they work piece work, are driven at top speed, and receive less wages for longer hours than do the carpenters, who are organized, on the same job. These hardware setters have organized themselves into a club and demanded better conditions. When these demands were turned down they went out on strike. The policy being followed by the militants among them is to prevail upon the carpenters' union to take them into the organization, and methods are being employed similar to those used by the plumbers' helpers.

A FURTHER organizational step was undertaken in the case of the mill men—inside carpenters, glaziers, etc.—who went out on strike for better conditions.

Organizing Clubs.

THIS policy of organising clubs as a means of exerting pressure on the external trade unions to take in unorganised workers was followed also in the case of a strike of mill men—inside carpenters, glaziers, etc. There are four international unions existing to which these mill men are eligible. Had the strikers depended only on the internationals to carry on their struggle and they gone into the different unions individually the result would have been either neglect of the situation by one or the other of the internationals for their own particular craft, thus demoralizing the strikers. The decision, therefore, was to form a club, and that this club act as an organization to negotiate with the bosses. Victory was obtained and the bosses recognised the club. The plan then was to strengthen and increase the membership of the clubs so as to force consideration from the strikers thru the pressure of numbers, and thus compel the international to organize these workers. This plan is being carried out.

Thus the unorganized workers in the building trades, thru the action of the militants among them, are gradually compelling the existing unions to take them in and conduct organization campaigns.

THERE is a drive now going on to organize the unskilled workers in Greek restaurants in Newark. The situation in these restaurants has been the internationals or else e been most deplorable, especiely because of the employment system used. The owner of the restaurant, in most cases a Greek, brings some of his countrymen over, pays their expenses, and then ties them down to 12 or 15 hours of work to meet this outlay. They get the worst kind of food to eat. Naturally these conditions made organization possible.

Clubs of unskilled workers were established and strikes called. This had to be done since the A. F. of L. local of food workers in Newark takes in only skilled workers—cooks and waiters—giving no consideration to the unskilled. This union, however, has been giving the clubs whatever aid they could, at times even office space, speakers and other moral support which is essential in the situation.

THE striking workers attempted to put economic pressure on the restaurant owners by prevailing upon organised workers not to patronize these restaurants. The result was a series of injunctions against the strikers. As yet, injunctions have not been issued of $400 to $500 the owners sustained considerable financial loss. Several of the smaller restaurant owners yielded the strikers' demands. The big restaurant owners, however, are backing the drive against the strikers, and now the bosses have organized an association. At the present time the strike is still going on. About 250 workers have joined the clubs.

In the Metal Trades.

IN the metal industry of New York and vicinity we find that about 80,000 metal workers are unorganized. There are two unions existing in this country—the international Association of Machinists, with a few thousand members, and the Amalgamated Metal Workers, with a few hundred members. The existence of these two competing organizations, and the fact that both are, is a hindrance to unionization. The problem is one of amalgamation of the two unions. Steps are being taken now to this end. The fight for amalgamation in the metal industry is being strongly pushed by the T. U. E. L.

Among the Bakers.

HERE we have also two organizations in the field—bakers' locals of the Amalgamated Food Workers and of the American Federation of Labor. Both are mass organizations. The conflicts that take place between these organizations, however, even when they carry on joint campaigns, makes amalgamation of the two unions essential. The question is now being taken up with good prospects for success.

Shoe Industry.

A CAMPAIGN for the amalgamation of the American Shoe Workers' Union and the Shoe Workers' Protective Union has been carried on by active militants of the T. U. E. L. The Protective Union has about 2,000 members, the American has about 6,000 members. The latter is a bosses' union, but thru the activity of the militants in the industry the rank and file members are being gradually won over and we are beginning to see company union gradually transforming into a union for struggle. This will give considerable aid to the movement for amalgamation. These two unions are now on the verge of amalgamation.

Expulsions.

WHILE the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union was the first to start the policy of expulsion of members of the T. U. E. L. and active militants generally, it was the last. The same policy has been tried by other unions then those in the needle trades.

The Association of Machinists decided on the expulsion policy and proved so unsuccessful, however, that they tried to back out. The opposition to the expulsion policy proved so unsuccessful, however, that they tried to back out. The opposition bloc formed in the union with a program which had as one of its planks opposition to The expulsion policy. The result was that the policy was stopped.

THE painters at a recent convention decided to put a clause in their constitution to expel all Communists, all members of the Workers' party, all members of the T. U. E. L. This policy, however, cannot be put into effect until it is approved of by a referendum vote of the membership. Meanwhile an active campaign is being carried on against this policy.

Boston Waitresses Get Average Wages of $8 Beside Tips

BOSTON, Sept. 14.—Witresses' conditions in Boston are among the worst in the country, reports Bee Tumber, International organizer for the hotel and restaurant employes' union. There are 3,000 waitresses in Boston, she said, and the average gets only $8 a week in wages and has to depend on tips. This side money sometimes amounts to only $6, $7 or $8 extra. Where wages are better the rules sometimes forbid acceptance of tips and girls are compelled to pay for their own meals.

III

All this was near the end of the strike; and also it was when America was going to war. So the excitements of sex were mingled in Bunny's mind with those of patriotism. The two were not so far apart as you might think, for the youth of the country was preparing to march away to battle, and that loosened sexual standards. You might not come back, so it made less difference what you did in the meantime. The girls found their hearts softened towards the boys, and the boys were ready to snatch a bit of pleasure before it was too late.

Bunny was too young for the first draft, but he went to drilling at school, which cast the military halo about him. There was a high school corps, provided with old rifles of the state militia, and the athletic field was covered with groups of lads marching, "Hep, hep!" and keeping the grim look on their young faces. Soon they would have uniforms, and so would the girls of the nurses' training corps. Boys and girls met in school assembly, and sang patriotic songs with fervor.

Yes, it was war! "Whole fleets of cargo vessels were taking supplies to England and France, and brigades of engineers and laborers to prepare the way for the army. The President was making speeches—wonderful, glowing, eloquent speeches. There was a race of evil men, the Huns, who had risen up to threaten civilization, and now the might of democratic America was going to put them down. When this job had been done, there would be an end to all the world's troubles; so the duty of every patriot to take his part in this last of all wars—the War to end War—the War for Democracy. Statesmen big and little took up the chorus, the newspapers echoed it a million copies every hour, and a host of "four minute men" were trained, to go into factories and theaters, and wherever crowds were gathered, to rouse America for this crusade.

The Ross family, like all other families, read and listened, and argued. Bunny, the young idealist, swallowed every word of the propaganda; it was exactly what he wanted to believe, his kind of mental food. He would argue with his cool, slow-moving, quietly dubious father. Yes, of course, Dad would say, we had to win the war; we had to win any war we got into. But as to the future, well, it would be time to decide about that when we came to it. First, Dad was occupied with getting the strike settled, and after that, with selling oil on a constantly rising market. There was no sense giving it away, because the government wanted more wells drilled, and how were they to be financed, unless the product was paid for? The government was paying generously, and that was patriotism enough for Dad; he would see to the spouting of his wells, and leave the other kinds of spouting to the politicians.

Aunt Emma considered that a shameful way to talk to a boy, and she scolded vigorously, according to the privilege of "in-laws." Aunt Emma would go to the clubs and listen to the patriotic lady-orators, telling about Belgian babies with their hands cut off, and ammunition depots blown up by German spies, and she would come home in a blaze of militarism. Bertie was even worse, for her young man who took her to the jazz-parties was active in one of the defense societies, and knew the names of all the German agents in Southern California, and the villainies they were planning; so Bertie was full of dark hints, and a sense of awful responsibilities.

You could never tell how this war excitement was going to hit any one person. For example, could you have imagined that a perfectly respectable old lady of way over seventy, brought up on a ranch, and supposed to be wrapped up in painting in oils, would suddenly blossom out as a Hun sympathizer? Such was Grandma, who declared that she had no use whatever for this war; the Germans were no worse than any of the other people concerned, they were all stained with blood, and all there was to the atrocity stories and spy rubbish was to make people hate the enemy. But Grandma wasn't going to hate anybody, no matter how much Emma and Bertie and the rest might rage; she proceeded to show her defiance by painting a picture of some Germans in old-time costumes drinking beer out of painted steins. She wanted to hang this in the dining-room, and there was a great row, with Aunt Emma and Bertie trying to persuade Dad to forbid it!

All this was part of Bunny's education; he listened and learned. From his quiet, steady old father he learned to smile reliably over the foibles of human nature, and to go on gathering the dollars. Talk was all right, but after all, what was going to win the war was bullets and shells, and to get them to the battle-field you had to have transportation. The oil that Dad brought up out of the ground was driving big trucks that were carrying munitions up to the front; it was moving the biggest and fastest cargo-ships, and the swift destroyers that were protecting them; it was lubricating the machinery in the factories, and more and more was being called for. As soon as the strike was over, Dad proceeded to sign contracts with the government, and to put down a dozen new wells in the Paradise field. The one thing that was troubling him was that he could not make three times as many contracts and put down three times as many wells; the big fellows, who controlled the banks, would not let him have enough money—at least not unless he would go in with them and let them hog most of the profits. That was a different kind of war, one going on right at home, and there was no prospect of its being ended by presidential speeches. Dad would explain that to Bunny, as a reason for the limitations in the "idealism" of a business man!

President McMahon's Peace Plan

President McMahon of the United Textile Workers, speaking at the great demonstration which followed the affiliation of the Passaic strikers to the union which he heads, made at least one statement which cannot go unchallenged.

He said that the criticism of the mill owners and the Passaic police had been too drastic—"scurrilous" is the word he is reported to have used—and stated that mill owners and workers could not get together if such criticisms continued.

To us such statements have but one meaning, and we believe that the strikers who were being starved, clubbed and jailed while the U. T. W. officials were making up their minds as to whether the strike was any business of theirs, will agree with us. The meaning is that President McMahon believes that by abandoning the militant methods which have made the strike a success the bosses will be placated and induced to make some sort of a settlement with the workers.

No bigger mistake could be made. It has been principally by reason of the unbesitating exposure of the mill barons and their police and judges made by the United Front Strike Committee, that hundreds of thousands of workers thruout the United States have been rallied to the support of the strike. The publicity given to the brutalities of the Passaic police, the proof that they were carrying out the orders of the mill owners, the unity between textile capitalists and the local government—these are the facts which brought forth the tremendous response from the rank and file of American labor.

To abandon these methods and begin to truckle to the mill owners and their lackeys means just to confuse and demoralize the strike and second to start the Passaic union of the U. T. W., born in the heat of the struggle, with a defeatist policy which can do nothing else than influence adversely its future existence and extension.

The Passaic strikers should, and we have no doubt that they will, show President McMahon that they do not agree with his method of bringing peace to Passaic.

Peace for the workers in Passaic will come when they increase their power and their pressure on the industry and this cannot be done by catering to the bosses and their thugs.

Absorbing Insurgents

The Coolidge machine, having been soundly trounced by the insurgents in many key states, is preparing to absorb them. Brookhart made peace with the republican state committee and now the announcement is made in Washington that Coolidge will not agree to the proposal to contest the election of Blaine in Wisconsin with an administration candidate.

The acceptance of the insurgents by the Coolidge machine as an official part of the party organization will tend to make them still less aggressive and their program, weak as it is, weaker still.

The illusion will spread among those not too intelligent left wing republicans that the party machinery is almost within their reach and, afflicted with the incurable ailment of all such middle class elements, they will let up on the struggle instead of intensifying it.

Even the Coolidge is weakened to the extent of being unable to force endorsement of his candidacy in 1928 it will mean simply that Wall Street will have to find some less odious exponent of its policies, one whom a majority of the insurgents will accept. This will not be difficult.

Lacking any program except one of opposition to "big business" and afraid to make any direct appeal on basic issues such as withdrawal of all armed forces from the colonies, abolition of the military training camp system, nationalization of key industries with full freedom for the workers to organize, complete disarmament, liquidation of farm mortgages, etc., these insurgents, operating within the republican party, express in a very weak form the conflict between the dominant financial group, the industrial capitalists and the small business groups.

That the official American labor movement gives its allegiance to such groups instead of organizing a party of its own shows only that it has a middle class rather than a working class conception of the struggle between working class and capitalist class in the United States.

Socialist Party Fights Unity of Action of Workers

By C. E. RUTHENBERG, Exec. Sec'y, Workers (Communist) Party.

THE National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party has sounded a note of alarm to the locals and members of that organization and made what the St. Louis labor terms "an important request" to the units of the party.

This "important request" is nothing less than a seven point warning to the locals of the Socialist Party not to permit themselves to become part of united action of the workers in their present day struggles.

THE locals of the Socialist Party according to the request of the National Executive Committe should not enter the fight for the protection of the foreign-born workers by participating in the organization of councils for the protection of the foreign-born. They must not join in a united fight against discrimination from which the Negroes suffer. They must remain away from the united movement for the release of political prisoners nor should they old workers in a strike.

The Reason For This Warning

THE reason for this warning of the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party is that the Communists are often the leaders and the initiators of united front movements to fight in the workers' interests. For the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party, it is a crime for the socialists to join with trade union organizations, workers' fraternal organizations and Communists in a united front struggle to prevent the foreign-born workers from being registered, photographed and fingerprinted or to fight against racial discrimination from which the Negro suffers or to take action to help workers who are fighting the bosses for higher wages and better working conditions thru a strike.

THIS warning has however, a deeper significance than the usual. The action on the part of the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party that the members or units of that organization may really participate in the struggles of the workers. Many local organizations of the Socialist Party have ignored the policy of the National Executive Committee of keeping the workers from uniting to fight their immediate battles against the capitalist exploiters. There are, in the Socialist Party, many sincere workers who still believe that the Socialist Party is an organization fighting in the workers' interests. Branches of the Socialist Party in which such workers predominate have in spite of all the past warnings, and denunciations by the leaders of the Socialist Party, joined in united front action in the interests of the workers. Some of those actions were initiated and led by Communists. These working class members and units of the Socialist Party dominated by such ideas do not fear to be associated with Communists in a common struggle to aid striking workers or to protect foreign-born workers against deportation which would register, fingerprint and photograph them like criminals.

SOCIALIST locals have joined with trade union representatives, with representatives of the fraternal organizations of foreign-born workers and with the Communists in forming Councils for the Protection of the Foreign-born Workers. It has been thru the mass pressure of these councils that the enactment of these exception laws by congress has been prevented. Now the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party warns its locals to keep out of such a struggle to protect the foreign-born workers.

THE same has been true in relation to the great struggle of the striking textile workers of Passaic. Many socialist locals could not be prevented from joining in the united front movement to support the Passaic workers in their heroic strike. The socialist locals have joined with trade unionists, Communists, workers' fraternal organizations in forming relief committees for the Passaic strikers. The National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party tells the socialist locals to get out of these relief committees and let the Passaic workers fight their own battles.

SOCIALIST locals have been found themselves in united front political conferences formed for the purpose of promoting independent political action and participated in by trade union representatives, fraternal organization representatives and Communists, in addition to the socialists. The National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party is opposed to such a movement to break the workers away from the republican and democratic parties and to organize them for an independent political struggle thru the formation of a labor party it warns its locals to keep out of such organizations for united action on the political field.

THE National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party is even against the united front movement to win complete political, educational industrial, and social equality for the Negroes of this country. The socialist locals must not participate in united action to fight against racial discrimination against the Negro.

Will The Socialist Locals Abandon The Workers' Struggles?

THE instructions of the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party to its locals, places before those locals made up of workers who wish to participate in the workers' struggles in this country, the question, whether they shall abandon the class struggle or whether they shall abandon the Socialist Party.

There could be no greater confession of bankruptcy so far as fighting for the workers' interests in this country is concerned, than this seven point statement constituting "an important request" by the National Executive committee of the Socialist Party.

THE National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party endeavored to confuse the issue placed before the socialist locals by reference to financial domination of these organizations by the Communists. But no workers will be deceived by this. The instructions to the socialist locals actually mean that these locals must keep out of every movement of the American workers which represents a fight on the basis of the class struggle, because every such struggle in this country has been either initiated, or is being led or supported by the Communists.

The issue before the socialist locals is whether they will participate in such united action by the workers against their capitalist exploiters or give up the idea of the class struggle.

THE National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party will fool no one by its reference to the Communist leadership of such united front movements. Where the Communists have become the leaders of the united front movement of the workers, it has been because they have won the confidence and support of the workers thru their services in the common struggle. If they have initiated united front action thru which the workers have been able to make a better fight against the capitalist bosses, that is to their credit. The fact that this is so, shows that the Communist program today is a program thru which the workers can achieve results and relieve themselves from some of the oppression and exploitation from which they suffer and against which they are struggling at the present time.

What Does Debs Say?

THERE is another phase of this statement of the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party that deserves attention. Eugene V. Debs is the chairman of the National Executive Committee. It is not likely that he participated or approved of the statement of the Socialist Party. He is reported ill at his home in Terre Haute.

But the workers of this country will want to know the opinion of Eugene V. Debs of this statement of the National Executive Committee of which he is the chairman.

THE workers have heard Debs make eloquent appeals for united action against the capitalist exploiters. For more than twenty-five years, he has been an advocate of unity of the working class in their struggle against the capitalist class.

Will Eugene V. Debs approve of the instructions of his National Executive Committee to refuse to join in united action for the protection of the foreign-born workers, for the fight against discrimination against the Negroes, for the fight to release political prisoners and in support of the strikes of the workers?

THE socialist locals which, in spite of the reactionary policies of the National Executive Committee of their party, have joined in these workers' struggles will want to know where Debs stands on these questions. The workers generally who honor Debs for his years of struggle in the workers' cause in spite of his continued adherence to the Socialist Party, will want to know his stand on the effort of the National Executive Committee of his party to divide the workers in place of uniting them.

EUGENE V. DEBS should not permit such a stain to be placed upon his name as has been placed there if he permits the action of the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party, of which he is chairman, to go unchallenged.

The self-respecting workers in the locals of the Socialist Party, if they are sincere in their desire to fight the workers' struggles will repudiate this action of the National Executive Committee to divide the workers in place of endeavoring to unite them for the class struggle.

CHAPTER II.

THE STRUGGLE OVER OUR GENEALOGICAL TREE.

In recent years these interesting experiments have been continued by other physiologists and pathologists, such as Professor Uhlenhuth at Greifswald and Nuttall at London, and they have proved directly the blood-relationship of various mammals. Nuttall studied them carefully in 900 different kinds of blood, which he tested by 16,000 reactions. He traced the gradation of affinity to the lowest apes of the new world; and Uhlenhuth continued as far as the lemurs. By these results the affinity of man and the anthropoid apes is long established by anatomy, has now been proved physiologically to be in real "blood-relationship."

No less important are the embryological discoveries of the deceased zoologist, Emil Selenka. He made two long journeys to the East Indies, in order to study on the spot the embryology of the Asiatic anthropoid apes, the orang and gibbon. By means of a number of embryos that he collected he showed that certain remarkable peculiarities in the formation of the placenta, that had up to that time been considered as exclusively human, and regarded as a special distinction of our species, were found in just the same way in the closely related anthropoid apes, tho not in the rest of the apes. On the ground of these and other facts, I maintain that the descent of man from extinct Tertiary anthropoid apes is proved just as plainly as the descent of birds from reptiles, or the descent of reptiles from amphibians, which no zoologist hesitates to admit today. The relationship is as close as was claimed by my former fellow-student, the Berlin anatomist, Robert Hartmann (with whom I sat at the feet of Johannes Muller fifty years ago), in his admirable work on the anthropoid apes (1883). He proposed to divide the order of primates into two families, the primarii (man and the anthropoid apes), and simiae (the real apes, the catarrhine or eastern, and the platyrrhine or western opas).

Since the Dutch physician, Eugen Dubois, discovered the famous remains of the fossil ape-man (pithecanthropus erectus) eleven years ago in Java, and thus brought to light "the missing link," a large number of works have been published on this very interesting group of the primates. In this connection we may particularly note the demonstration by the Strasburg anatomist, Gustav Schwalbe, that the previously discovered Neanderthal skull belongs to an extinct species of man, which was midway between the pithecanthropus and the true human being—the homo primigenius. After a very careful examination, Schwalbe at the same time refuted all the biased objections that Virchow had made to these and other fossil discoveries, trying to represent them as pathological abnormities. In all the important relics of fossil men that prove our descent from anthropoid apes Virchow saw pathological modifications, due to unsound habits, gout, rickets, or other diseases of the dwellers in the diluvial caves. He tried in every way to impair the force of the arguments for our primate affinity. So in the controversy over the pithecanthropus he raised the most improbable conjectures merely for the purpose of destroying its significance as a real link between the anthropoid apes and man.

Even now, in the controversy over this important ape-question, amateurs and biased anthropologists often repeat the false statement that the gap between man and the anthropoid apes is not yet filled up and the "missing link" not yet discovered. This is a most perverse statement, and can only arise either from ignorance of the anatomical, embryological, and paleontological facts, or incompetence to interpret them aright. As a fact, the morphological chain that stretches from the lemurs to the earlier western apes, from these to the eastern tailed apes, and to the tailless anthropoid apes, and from the direct to man, is now uninterrupted and clear. It would be most plausible to speak of missing links between the earliest lemurs and their marsupial ancestors, or between the latter and their monotreme ancestors. But even these gaps are unimportant, because comparative anatomy and embryology, with the support of paleontology, has dissipated all doubts as to the unity of the mammalian stem. It is ridiculous to expect paleontology to furnish an unbroken series of positive data, when we remember how scanty and imperfect its material is.

I cannot go further here into the interesting current researches in regard to special aspects of our simian descent; nor would it greatly advance our object, because all the general conclusions as to man's primate descent remain intact, whichever way the constructed hypothetically the special lines of simian evolution. On the other hand, it is interesting for us to see how the most recent form of Darwinism, so happily described as Ecberich as "ecclesiastical evolution," stands in regard to these great questions. What does its astutest representative, Father Erich Wasmann, say about them? The tenth chapter of his work, in which he deals at length with "the application of the theory of evolution to man," is a masterpiece of Jesuitical science, calculated to throw the clearest truths into such confusion and so to misrepresent all discoveries as to prevent any reader from forming a clear idea of them. When we compare this tenth chapter with the ninth, in which Wasmann represents the theory of evolution as an irresistible truth on the strength of his own able studies, we can hardly believe that they both came from the same pen—or, rather, we can only understand when we recollect the rule of the Jesuit creation: "The end justifies the means." Untruth is permitted and meritorious in the service of God and his church.

The Jesuitical sophistry that Wasmann employs in order to save man's unique position in nature, and to prove that he was immediately created by God, culminates in the antithesis of his two notions. The "purely rational conception of man," which has been established beyond question by anatomical and embryological comparison with the ape, is said to fail because it does not take into account the chief features, his "mental life." It is "psychology tho the best fitted to deal with the nature and origin of man." All the facts of anatomy and embryology that I have gathered together in my "Evolution of Man" in proof of the series of his ancestors are either ignored, or misconstrued and made ridiculous by Wasmann. The same is done with the instructive facts on anthropology, especially with the rudimentary organs, which Robert Wiedersheim has quoted in his "Man's Structure as a Witness to his Past." It is clear that the Jesuit writer lacks competence in this department, that he has only a superficial and inadequate acquaintance with comparative anatomy and embryology. It was soon had studied the morphology and physiology of the mammals as thoroughly as those of the apes he would have completed, if he were impartial enough. Certain it is, however, that in 37 out of 38 cases of living and 2,000 fossil species of mammals, including the human species

Railroad Labor Begins to Move

By A Railroad Worker.

FOR the first time since the wage cutting and union-smashing campaign of the railroad capitalists in 1921-22, railroad labor is beginning to move.

The intervening period of four years from the defeat of the great shopmen's strike up to the present time, the unions have been in full retreat before the victorious companies and have suffered heavy wage cuts and tremendous losses in membership. Based on 1920 rates of pay, the total loss in wages to the workers during this period amounted to more than $500,000,000. At the same time over a half million members were dropped from the various organizations.

Company Unionism.

IMMEDIATELY following the strike company unionism swept the industry at a startling speed, until at present they exist on 64 of the country's largest railways, numbering tens of thousands of workers in their ranks. Scarcely in the many struggles of the American railroad unions have they met such bitter attacks by the companies and sustained a greater setback than during the last four years.

This retreat at last has been halted and a forward movement begun. The unions are slowly rallying their forces and preparing to resume the ground lost since 1921. This movement is now proceeding on three fronts: 1st, to secure wage increases, and, to organize the unorganized, and third, to fight the company unions. These are inseparably connected and those organizations which cannot do the one will fail in the other. The drive for wage increases is now taking shape. All standard organizations are conducting educational work among their own members, as well as creating large committees of unorganized and these organized by the company unions. The unions are coming to the realization that the company unions are one of the greatest handicaps to secure a raise in wages and to build and strengthen those organizations, and that they must be destroyed eliminated.

A GENERAL wage increase movement has all railroad workers, organization of the unorganized workers into the standard unions, and the elimination of the company unions are the immediate issues confronting railroad labor. To be successful in these tasks for the solid support and backing of all trades.

Wage increases.

WAGE increases are now a live topic of discussion among a large section of railroad workers. This has brot about definite steps to secure a substantial raise in wages by several of the unions, particularly the four transportation brotherhoods and the Switchmen's Union. The demands of these organizations amount to practically a restoration of the 1920 wage scale, the increases ranging from $1.00 to $1.61 a day. Several of the other unions are preparing for similar action.

Organization.

IN the industry as a whole, a total of 1,000,000 workers belong to no unions at all or are affiliated to the company associations. This large body of unorganized presents a definite problem to the organized section of the workers in their efforts to secure wage increases. To build and strengthen the workers' organizations before increases of prime importance. Some of the unions, such as the Shopmen's, Telegraphers, and others, have been for some time conducting extensive organization drives and making encouraging gains. At the recent convention of the Railway Employes' Department, representatives of the railroad unions, a resolution was unanimously adopted calling for a united organization drive in these unions. This campaign will soon be under way, and if concerted action and the united support of all other unions solidarity results will be obtained.

The Company Unions.

TOGETHER with the unorganized, the company unions constitute a most serious factor to the progress of the organized workers. Being under the complete domination of the companies they will be used to them to check the wage increase movement among certain classes of railroad labor since 1921. This movement is now proceeding on three fronts: 1st, to secure wage increases, and, to organize the unorganized, and third, to fight the company unions. These are inseparably connected and those organizations which cannot do the one will fail in the other. The drive for wage increases is now taking shape. All standard organizations are conducting educational work among their own members, as well as creating large committees of unorganized and these organized by the company unions. The unions are coming to the realization that the company unions are one of the greatest handicaps to secure a raise in wages and to build and strengthen those organizations, and that they must be destroyed eliminated.

A GENERAL wage increase movement has all railroad workers, organization of the unorganized workers into the standard unions, and the elimination of the company unions are the immediate issues confronting railroad labor. To be successful in these tasks for the solid support and backing of all trades.

Lowell Brents

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

ILLINOIS labor leaders, the bona fide variety so-called, desire to remain neutral in the contest for United States senator between George E. Brennan, democrat, and Frank L. Smith, republican. So far serious consideration has not been given in news of the Streator convention, to the candidacy of Parley Parker Christensen, who is running against both, but on no tangible platform except a vague back-to-Jesus one. If Parley deserves any friendly co-operation from the christian labor leaders who dominate the A. F. of L. around here he will have to orientate towards Samuel Insull and keep away from Mount Calvary.

SINCE Frank Farrington accepted the $25,000 yearly retainer from the Peabody Coal Company there is a saying around here that a politician whose neck is not built to wear an Insull or a Peabody collar has a poor prop for his head. The political aspirant who claims to wear no man's collar nowadays does not even get credit for honesty from the voters. He is looked on either as a hypocrite who "got his" and is trying to cover up or as a simpleton who does not know enough to turn his umbrella upside down when the golden shower is falling.

OUTSIDE of candidates who run on a working-class platform and on a working-class ticket, I never had the pleasure of meeting a capitalist aspirant for office who impressed me as being honest except one, and he was a native of South Boston, Mass. We will call him Mr. Bung. His opponent shall be known as Mr. Tung. Mr. Tung was a candidate to succeed himself. Mr. Bung's plea was that Mr. Tung was well fixed financially and had enough political honors for any one person.

MR. BUNG was a poor man and had needed the money. Why not give a good boy who was brought up around Flood Square a chance? Despite Tung's loud huwis at what he considered an attempt on Mr. Bung's part to pollute the streams of legislative purity, Tung went down to defeat under an avalanche of votes and Bung was elected. Such honesty is very rare indeed in capitalist politics.

THE Nizam of Hyderabad holds the world's record for all time, almost, for being the possessor of the best stocked harem in history. The exception was Solomon's, and I am beginning to suspect that Solomon's press agent overstepped the mark—even for a press agent. The most intriguing story about the Nizam is not the number or pulchritude of the Nizam's feminine furniture, but the fact that the British government takes care of all his foreign relations, in return for which the Nizam undertakes to furnish certain troops for empire defense. Outside of that the Nizam is as free as one of his concubines.

THE British, always willing to carry the dark man's burden, thought the Nizam had his work cut out for him in looking after the interests of his lady friends, so the empire, thru the Indian office, added a number of officials to the Nizam's staff and the latter hasn't much to do besides amusing himself and acting as referee between his warring wives. The funny part of it is, or should be, that England is quite a moral country and stands squarely on a monogamous platform. Why, even Queen Mary refused to recognize an American actress at a Buckingham palace reception because the stage star's garters peeped out occasionally. But the Nizam! Business is business.

THIS discussion takes us from Hyderabad to the episcopal church in the United States. Our spiritual herders can never give themselves a rest from worrying about the precarious condition in which national virtue is at a particular moment. One of the reasons given for imposing the Volstead law on the nation was the necessity for placing obstacles in the way of Old Nick, who was a couple of laps ahead of Jahovah in the harrowing soul-grabbing contest. But what is the result of the work of the prohibition advocates, the bootleggers and the ku klux klan.

THIS column is too considerate of the sensibilities of its readers to quote the exact words used by a writer

MINE WORKERS IN OHIO FEAR BOSS ATTACK

West Virginia Is an Object Lesson

This is the first of a series of articles on the crisis of unionism in the coal industry written by prominent labor writers.

By HARVEY O'CONNOR,
Federated Press.

COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 16.—Attacked simultaneously on six fronts by the coal operators, Ohio's 40,000 union coal miners are holding the fort for the United Mine Workers of America in a crucial struggle which may determine the fate of the national organization. Besieged from one to three years by unemployment resulting from the countrywide effort to ruin the union, Ohio has become the critical point in the battle to save the soft coal industry for unionism.

Largely successful in West Virginia and western Pennsylvania in wresting control from the union, the operators, backed by Wall Street financial interests, mean to force the breaking of the national Jacksonville agreement—and the union—in the heart of the central competitive field.

Born in Union.

Ohio would have capitulated long ago if her coal diggers had not been born and reared in the union. Both the American Federation of Labor and the United Mine Workers were founded in Columbus and District 6 dates from April 15, 1890. Consequently unionism has become a tradition, a way of life for the men and women in the Ohio and Hocking valleys, the main mining districts.

A swing around the coal fields fails to reveal the slightest weakening on the part of the workers altho the operators, both individually and thru the newly-organized Ohio Coal Operators' Association, are constantly attempting non-union operation. So far they have succeeded in opening not more than half a dozen big mines, mostly in Pomeroy Bend, and do not employ more than 2,000 miners. In the past month six of the bigger companies have made

Save the Mine Workers' Union!

The crisis for unionism in the coal fields is becoming acute. Beginning today, The DAILY WORKER will publish a series of stories released by the Federated Press describing the condition of unionism in the more important coal fields of the country. Today's article is by Harvey O'Connor on the Ohio district. Following this will be articles by Art Shields on Pennsylvania and West Virginia, Ernest Chamberlain on the southern fields, Frieda Reicher on the Rocky Mountain district and others to be announced later. These articles will be of special interest to members of the United Mine Mine Workers' Union.

Ask Senate Committee to Oust Coolidge's Alaskan Appointees

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—(FP) — Appeal has been made by the Peoples Legislative Service in a public letter to Senators Borah, Morris and Overman of the senate Judiciary committee to help force President Coolidge to remove Federal Judge Ritchie and Reed and Dist. Atty. Shoup in Alaska. The committee unanimously refused last spring to approve reappointment of the three officials when their official records were exposed.

LIBERALS WIN ELECTION IN CANADA OVER TARIFF ISSUE ON U. S. PRODUCTS

ARTHUR MEIGHEN

W.L. MACKENZIE KING

Above is Arthur Meighen, premier of the conservative government of Canada, who went to the people for a protective tariff to Canadian industry, what there is left to it was defeated in his own constituency, while Mackenzie King, leader of the liberal party, was re-elected on a low tariff platform and will assume the premiership at the next session of the dominion parliament. Three labor members of parliament were re-elected.

ELECTION IN CANADA GOES TO LIBERALS

TORONTO, Ont., Sept. 15.—The returns from the Canadian elections, the incomplete, indicate a victory for the liberal party over the present conservative government, headed by Premier Arthur Meighen.

The new government will be led by the liberal Mackenzie King, and will consist of liberals, progressives, laborites and independents.

Premier and Five Ministers Beaten.

Premier Meighen and five of his cabinet were defeated at the polls. The liberals so far are conceded 112 seats, the conservatives 87, progressives and liberal progressives 18, United Farmers' Alliance, a progressive element, 10, Labor 3, and independents 2.

Two political issues overshadowed minor matters in the elections. Those were the tariff and dominion rights within the kingdom. The conservatives were for a high protective tariff as against the United States, the liberals for a policy of low tariff in trade with the United States.

Tariff With U. S. An Issue.

The budget of the King government, which held power up to a short time before the election, provided for a 15 per cent reduction on American automobiles and reduced income and general taxation. The conservatives urged practically a tariff war with the United States.

In the matter of dominion rights, the liberals raised the issue of constitutional rights because Baron Byng, governor-general, appointed by the British king, refused to dissolve parliament at the time King was premier, failed to be sustained by a vote of parliament.

British King's Agent Played Tricks.

This forced King to resign. When Meighen succeeded him, Meighen, too, was defeated in parliament. This trick by the agent of the British crown left the control of the election machinery in the hands of the Meighen conservatives, and the liberals attacked it as an infringement of the dominion rights by the British crown.

The counter-charge of the conservatives was that the liberals sought to annex Canada to the United States.

BRITISH KILL 5,000 CHINESE AND BURN CITY

Fire and Slaughter Is Used on Civilians

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SHANGHAI, Sept. 15. — More details of the fight between the British and Chinese partisans of Wu Pei-fu under his subordinate, General Yangsen, say that at least 5,000 Chinese were killed by the British at Wanhsien, 1,200 miles up the Yangtze river, when the British tried to recover by force the British ships seized by Yang-sen who was angered by the British delivering arms by mistake to the Cantonese that were meant for Yang's use against the Cantonese.

Camouflage Attack.

The British need a merchant ship, the Wiewo, as camouflage, arming it and loading it with marines. The boat was run alongside the British ship Wanhsein, held by Yang-sen's soldiers, who shot down a boarding party of British marines attempting to recapture the ship.

Fire City of 150,000

The British gunboats then opened fire not only on the Chinese aboard the Wanhsien, but upon the city of Wanhsien, which has a population of about 150,000, setting it afire, practically destroying the city and killing 5,000 people, besides the 300 Chinese soldiers on the boats and lining the shore.

The American Counsel General at Hankow, Frank P. Lockhart, has cabled Washington that General Yang, commander of the Cantonese now in control of Hankow, has issued an order forbidding the firing on foreign vessels in his jurisdiction.

Americans Safe at Hankow.

A wireless from Admiral C. S. Williams, commander of the U. S. Asiatic fleet, on board the flagship Huron, states that all Americans and British at Hankow are safe. The message was relayed from the U. S. gunboat Monocacy, at Chunking, a Chinese city on the Yangtze 1,400 miles in the interior, still further inland than the scene of the clash between the British and Chinese at Wanhsien.

The United States has five gunboats, two destroyers and two mine sweepers in the Yangtze river.

British Send Another Cruiser.

LONDON, Sept. 15. — The British cruiser Carysfort has been ordered to leave for China.

Conflict at Canton Eased.

HONGKONG, Sept. 15.—It is reported that the Canton government has undertaken to protect at British behavior at Canton, where the anti-British strike boycott has been going on for many months.

The British take for granted this means a prohibition of strike pickets, and have acceded to the demand of the Canton government that British gunboats be withdrawn from the river where Canton has jurisdiction, but claimed the right to send them back if picketing is continued.

We Need The Daily Worker; It Needs Us

By MAX BEDACHT

THE most important weapon in the hands of the capitalist class is the capitalist press. This press is manufacturing and falsifying public opinion. It is this "public opinion" upon which the powers of the state base their interference against the workers in all of their struggles.

To be sure those powers would move anyway in the defense of the bosses' interests. But they would have to move with greater difficulties if they did not have "public opinion" on their side, or, at least, neutral. They would have to move in the face of mass resistance. As it is they move against detached battalions of workers who happen to be engaged in battle against their bosses. And the rest, the masses, stand idly by.

THIS is the fruit of the poison of the capitalist press. The weakness of our press is a constant danger to its existence. It is our foremost duty to remedy this weakness. Weak tho our press may be, but it is a weapon in our hands. Better than throw away a weak weapon is to attempt to strengthen it. We need our press—there can be no question about that.

BUT because of its weakness our press needs us.

Our "DAILY WORKER" is now nearly three years old. It is a vigorous youngster. It is a formidable fighter. But it still needs our closest attention and support. Without that it cannot grow up and grow stronger. "THE DAILY WORKER" IS OUR MOUTHPIECE. Without it our party and our movement would have little voice in the public. We must preserve and strengthen this voice at all cost.

"THE DAILY WORKER" IS OUR ORGANIZER. Without it our party and our movement would be deprived of an effective propagandist. We must preserve and strengthen this propagandist at all cost.

"THE DAILY WORKER" IS OUR TEACHER. Without it too many of us would be delivered over helplessly to the poisonous vapors of the capitalist press. "The DAILY WORKER" tells us the truth. It teaches us to understand our problems and our fights. We must preserve and strengthen this teacher at all cost.

Without "The DAILY WORKER" our party and our movement would be crippled to more helplessness. We need "The DAILY WORKER."

But at this moment "The DAILY WORKER" needs us. It is in immediate danger. We must meet its difficulties and must secure its existence.

Comrades! Let us all pull together. The task is to put over our campaign for "The DAILY WORKER" one hundred per cent.

August Gordon Seeks Support in Fighting Farrington Machine

BELLEVILLE, Ill., September 15.—August Gordon, member of Local No. 4650 of the United Mine Workers of America, announces his candidacy for the scale committee in the Ninth Scale District of District 12. In the following appeal he calls on the various locals to nominate him and to support him in his fight:

"Belleville, Ill., Sept. 1, 1926.

Left Wing Leader Flays Walker's Report

STREATOR, Ill., Sept. 15.— The slumbering pyrotechnics broke forth today at the sessions of the forty-fourth annual convention of the Illinois Federation of Labor, in session here.

C. B. Cline, of the Auto and Aircraft Machinists' Union, Chicago, broke the ice with an open charge that Communists operating in this country had driven 100,000 machinists out of the union.

And Andrew Overgaard, also of the Machinists' Union, Chicago, followed it up with a hitter attack on President John Walker's report on candidates for state representative, state senator and congressman.

Overgaard urged the federation to put a farmer-labor ticket in the field, and to oppose the old party candidates.

Cline, leaping to his feet, continued his attack by denouncing Overgaard as "an obstructionist," a troublemaker and a Communist worker.

When the smoke had cleared away, President Walker's report was adopted with a slight dissenting vote.

MARINE ENGINEERS DEMAND PAY RAISES OF STEAMSHIP LINES

NEW YORK, Sept. 15. —(FP)— Twenty big steamship lines have been served with a written demand by the Ocean Association of Marine Engineers for wage raises bringing engineers' pay to shipping board standards. This would mean increases of $10 to $25 a month. Wages have stood still since the cuts that followed the lost strike of 1921.

CHARLES EVANS HUGHES IS RECEIVED BY HEADS OF EUROPEAN STATES

CHARLES EVANS HUGHES.

America's most famous corporation lawyer and former secretary of state is shown here on the steps of the ministry building in Paris after an audience with Foreign Minister Aristida Briand. These quiet trips of American ex-statesman abroad are often reminiscent of similar journeys that Col. House used to make in the old days. In any case it is hard to believe that whiskered Charlie is merely having an outing abroad.

ASK N. Y. LABOR TO JOIN FIGHT ON INJUNCTION

420 Garment Pickets Jailed in One Day

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK CITY, Sept. 15.—A clarion call to union labor affiliated with the American Federation of Labor to fight injunction of peaceful picketing was the reply last night by leaders of the general strike committee of the 40,000 cloakmakers to the temporary injunction obtained by the Industrial Council of cloak manufacturers from Supreme Court Justice Charles L. Guy, returnable Wednesday morning.

While the union will make strenuous efforts in court to have the injunction vacated, a series of gigantic mass meetings thruout the city are being rapidly arranged, in which every A. F. of L. organization in the city is expected to participate. Already Louis Hyman, chairman of the cloakmakers' general strike committee, has received vigorous assurance of support from other unions which look upon injunctions such as issued in the eleventh week of the present strike as a menace to union efforts to improve workers' conditions.

Defies Injunction Action.

Following a meeting of the strike advisory committee, Mr. Hyman issued the following statement:

"The strike will not be broken by any injunction. We are of the opinion that the taking out of this injunc-

DEFENSE TAKES OFFENSIVE IN SACCO HEARING

Madeiros Confession Is Effective

DEDHAM, Mass., Sept. 15—Reaching back into the ambitions of four years ago, William G. Thompson in his plea before Judge Webster Thayer today for a new trial for Nicola and Bartolomeo Vanzetti charged that they had been "railroaded" to conviction because of their activities and to satisfy the presidential aspirations and personal avarice of "a then high official."

"Who is the 'worst murderer,'" he orised, referring to Celestino Madeiros, who confessed the killing. "The man who slays and slays the consequenses, braves the reprisal, or the man who for $8 a day and who wants to satisfy a chief who wanted to become president of the United States and make money on the side, would send innocent man to death. One is safe. The other is dangerous."

Thompson said that he referred to the federal operatives than working on the case and the than Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer who later became a pre-convention candidate for president.

DEDHAM, Mass., Sept. 15.—Pity for Sacco's wife and children moved Madeiros to give his confession was brought out today at the hearing for a new trial for Sacco and Vanzetti at Dedham, Mass. In a deposition a hundred and forty-three pages long Celestino Madeiros, condemned murderer of a Wrentham bank cashier, gave the whole history of his life and all details of the South Braintree murder, in which he participated, thus exonerating Sacco and Vanzetti of this crime.

This deposition was taken last June 28 by lawyer Thompson and District Attorney Ranny when it was thought that Madeiros would be sentenced before the hearing.

Madeiros Unshaken.

Both lawyers, the defense and prosecution, had cross-examined him. His confession has not been shaken. He refused to give the names of the Braintree murderers but stated that Sacco and Vanzetti were not the men. District Attorney Ranny read the cross-examination of Madeiros, but it did not change the situation.

Admit D. of J. Role.

In the afternoon session District Attorney Ranny introduced twenty-one affidavits against the affidavits brought by Lawyer Thompson. The part of the department of Justice in the case was admitted today when Prosecuting Attorney Ranny read an affidavit by former District Attorney Katzmann, who while denying being a spy, admits that U. S. Agent Wells did speak to him about placing a spy in the cell next to Sacco and that he did not approve of it.

Arguments Continue.

Later a man came to see him who said he was sent by Wells, but Katzman in his affidavit says he did not know him and did not allow Ranny also brought an affidavit from Madeiros' sister, saying that Madeiros did not live in Providence at the time of the holdup.

The case will continue tomorrow. It is expected that the arguments for the case on the merits of the affidavits will begin tomorrow afternoon.

Disease and Hunger in Kansas Flood District

(Special to The Daily Worker)

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Sept. 15 — Pestilence and hunger threatened the Kansas flood district today and in Burlington where most of the flood damage occurred a second heavy rain was falling.

Small cyclones visited Hutchinson and vicinity last night causing thousands of dollars' damage. Waters had receded in most of the 100-mile long flood area.

Two Burlington railroad trains were marooned in Northwest Missouri this morning and heavy washouts had occurred near St. Joseph, Mo.

NICARAGUAN LABOR FORCES WINNING WAR ON WALL ST. TOOL CHAMORRO

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—Stato department information from Nicaragua, is that the reactionary military dictator, Chamorro, is ready to compromise with the liberal and labor forces now waging successful war against him to restore the constitutional regime he overthrew by a coup last year.

If the liberal and labor forces are successful they will place Vice-President Sacasa at the head of the government. Mexican labor has been giving powerful aid to the rebels against Chamorro. The Nicaraguan labor unions are affiliated with the Pan-American Federation of Labor.

ILLINOIS MINERS! READ ABOUT FRANK FARRINGTON'S FISHWICK IN NEXT SATURDAY'S DAILY WORKER

The record of Harry Fishwick, the candidate of John L. Lewis and the coal operators for the presidency of the Illinois Miners' Union against Joseph Tumulty, the progressive candidate of the coal diggers, will be told in part in next Saturday's issue of The DAILY WORKER. Fishwick's relations with agents of the Peabody Coal company will make interesting reading for members of the Illinois Miners' Union. Miners should order bundles of next Saturday's issue for distribution among the members of District 12.

COAL FAMINE IS PRESSING IN GREAT BRITAIN

Imported Coal Is Found Unsatisfactory

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Sept. 15. — The approach of cool weather is bringing a rising apprehension at the shortage of coal, and not a little of the protest is directed at the mine owners' association, which refuses to settle with the strikers on the basis of a national agreement.

Orders for British coal are pouring into the offices of coal merchants, and coal consumers declare they are entirely dissatisfied with the kind of coal imported from other countries.

"Everyone is heartily fed up with it," says one big coal merchant.

The owners, who have rejected the proposal of the government, that the owners participate in a three-cornered conference with the government and the strikers' representatives, think that the strikers are beaten to their knees and concessions to them are unnecessary.

The owners boast about the miners who have returned to work, yet their claims of 95,000 now working thruout the country is not enough to affect the issue, there being 1,000,000 on strike and standing firmly for the union in spite of the most bitter suffering. The government, which has been ready at all times to coerce the miners, now has the task of showing its attitude toward the mine owners who refused the proposals of the government made by Winston Churchill. It is expected that Premier Baldwin, called back from his vacation in France, will have the job of continuing the negotiations in the coal strike, as well as determining British policy in China, the ostensible reason for his return.

President Green Agrees Workers Need Shorter Work-Day

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15—(FP) — Further reduction of the standard working day in American industry was suggested by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in his speech at the laying of the corner-stone of the new office-building of Carpenters' Local 132.

"Working men are human beings and must be given the same opportunities as other men to develop their spiritual, moral and mental faculties," he said.

"If we find it necessary to further reduce hours of labor then our labor movement will lead in seeking the further reduction of working hours."

LABOR PARTY BIG ISSUE BEFORE CONNECTICUT STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR CONVENTION IN DANBURY

DANBURY, Conn., Sept. 15.—The Connecticut Federation of Labor met here with a hundred and ten delegates present representing local trade unions and central bodies from all over the state. The big issue arousing a lengthy discussion in the convention was the question of independent political action and the formation of a Labor Party.

The Labor Party question was brought before the convention by the local Painters' Union on the basis of the resolution of the national convention of painters last year which committed that organization to the formation of a Labor Party. The motion for the formation of a Labor Party in Connecticut was defeated by a vote of 23 in favor and 88 against.

Support Growing.

The fight for the Labor Party was led by Morris Robinsky of the New Haven Painters' Local and supported by George Moffit of Stamford and John Vanleity of New Britain.

President O'Meara of the federation declared that he would fight "to the last drop" against the Labor Party because he said the Communists would be the leaders in the Labor Party if it were formed.

The 23 votes cast in favor of the formation of the Labor Party is a sign of the growth of the movement in the state of Connecticut and an indication that in the future conventions an even stronger support will be found for independent political action by labor.

BANKERS FIGHT FOR CONTROL OF SURFACE LINES

Two Groups in Battle Before City Council

Lisman and Company, a New York concern, acting for a syndicate of New York, Chicago, and other bankers, has offered the Chicago city council transportation committee to take over the street railway system when the present franchise expires and to work for the consolidation of the existing elevated, bus and street car lines and to establish bus lines where needed.

This concern, acting on behalf of a syndicate of bankers, points out that it has the necessary cash to refinance the roads and to operate and maintain them provided the city grants them a 20-year franchise.

Competition between two groups of bankers is on now before the city council. One group is composed of a number of Chicago and New York bankers that now control the lines and the other group is a syndicate of New York and Chicago bankers seeking to gain control of the roads.

Neither of the two groups state in their proposals whether there will be a return to the former 5-cent fare or whether the fare will be increased.

PRIMARY SEASON CLOSES; PREPARE FOR ELECTIONS

Coolidge Cohorts Fear More Defeats

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—The 1926 primary season, which has been marked by more political upsets than any in recent years, came to an official close with balloting in a dozen states.

Hot Fight in Maryland.

In Maryland Senator O. E. Weller, republican, who came into the senate on the crest of the Harding landslide in 1920, is opposed for renomination by Representative John Philip Hill, the acknowledged wet leader of the house. Hill is anti-world court. There has been a slam-bang campaign which will leave scars in the republican organization in Maryland, irrespective of the outcome. Observers believe the contest will be close, with Hill leading.

Klan Backs Means.

In Colorado Senator Rice W. Means, republican, is opposed by two candidates, Charles W. Waterman and George A. Luxford. The klan has entered heavily into this fight and is seeking the control of the state machinery. Means is supported by the klan.

In Louisiana Senator Edward S. Broussard, democrat, a wet, is opposed for renomination by Ex-Governor Jared Y. Sanders, who favors a referendum on the liquor question. Broussard is favored to win.

Withdraw Cals' Men.

In President Coolidge's home state of Vermont, Senator Porter H. Dale, republican, is unopposed for renomination since the withdrawal of Ex-Governor Stickney, law partner of Attorney General Sargent. Stickney entered the race ostensibly as an administration candidate against Dale, who refused to follow the White House leadership.

To "Count In" Butler.

In Massachusetts the president's campaign manager, Senator Wm. M. Butler, is expected to be renominated. He is opposed by Washington Cook, a wet. It is expected that Cook will be smothered when votes are counted. Ex-Senator David I. Walsh is unopposed for the democratic nomination.

In Washington state Senator Wesley L. Jones, dry and pro-court, has three opponents for the nomination. The division in the opposition is expected to allow Jones to ride in.

Start Election Campaign.

With the end of the primary season the candidates will start their seven-week race towards elections in November.

Jones Ahead in Washington.

SEATTLE, Sept. 15.—Senator Wesley L. Jones was leading his opponent, Frank E. Hammond, by four to one for the republican nomination for United States senator with practically all the precincts in the state heard from early today.

EIGHT WORKERS TRAPPED UNDER MISSOURI RIVER

Blast Cuts Off Tube Drillers

(Special to The Daily Worker)

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Sept. 15.—Eight men were trapped in a tunnel under the Missouri river here today, when an explosion occurred where workmen were constructing a water main between Clay county and Jackson county. All air passages were cut off.

In Center of River.

The men were working in two crews, driving the shaft from either side of the river, and the cave-in occurred behind the crew in the north side of the tunnel, imprisoning them between the ground which had not been dug, in approximately the center of the river, and the mass of earth that fell.

Chief Engineer Charles S. Foreman the barrier, 2100 feet in the shaft, before he was blocked.

Little Hope.

The cave-in virtually sealed the portion of the tunnel into an airtight pocket in which the men are imprisoned. Officials of the Smith Brothers, Inc., who were in charge of the construction, expressed doubt that their air supply would last eight men more than a few hours.

Altho there is a strong possibility that the men are all dead, excepting to workers, either killed by the explosion, which was so powerful that it knocked workmen on the surface from their feet, or smothered.

GREEN WINNER FOR GOVERNOR OF MICHIGAN

DETROIT, Mich., Sept. 15.—Fred W. Green, mayor of Ionia, winner of the republican nomination for governor in yesterday's primary election, continued today to pile up his lead over Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck, fourth-term aspirant. Lieut.-Gov. George W. Welsh was battling with Luren D. Dickenson for second place on the ticket.

A total of 2,186 precincts out of 2,935 for governor gives: Green, 298,755; Groesbeck, 171,310.

Waterman Leading in Colerado.

DENVER, Colo., Sept. 15.—R. W. Means, republican, junior United States senator from Colorado, was running second today to Charles W. Waterman, on incomplete returns from yesterday's state primary. 502 precincts out of 1,501, giving Waterman 19,805, Means 19,586 and George A. Luxford, 5,123.

In the republican gubernatorial race, Oliver H. Shoup was leading John F. Vivian, backed by Senator Lawrence C. Phipps by 7,000 votes, the count being Shoup 19,874; Vivian 12,536.

Senator Broussard Re-nominated.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 15. — Renomination of Senator Edwin E. Broussard, democrat, appeared probable on the basis of returns from all sections of the state today.

With the city count complete and 831 out of 1,084 precincts in the Parish reported, Senator Broussard was leading his opponent, J. Y. Sanders, by a majority of 4,307 votes.

Ask New York Labor Join Injunction Fight

of the city water department immediately went into the north tunnel with a crew of men, and penetrated to within a few feet of the cave-in section is another glittering but false hope dangled in front of the manufacturers by their leaders to get a settlement on their own terms. They will feed them this hope for some time to come, but the manufacturers who believe the strike will be broken this way will soon find their mistake. Nothing will break the determination of the workers to obtain livable conditions. Mr. Finder and their other associates will never see the day when workers will return on their indecent terms.

"Injunctions do not make cloaks. Sooner or later the manufacturers will have to come to terms with the union. Every effort they make to delay the final settlement will redound to their own disadvantage. They can get the workers back into their shops not thru the intervention of the governor nor thru an injunction, but only by coming to the workers their just demands."

Replying to full-page advertisements appearing yesterday in the Yiddish press, issued by the Industrial Council, Hyman declared that the appeals contained in them, urging the workers to return to the shops, did not coincide with Finder's recent statements that, as far as he was concerned, the strike was broken and over.

Magistrate Rosenbluth, sitting yesterday in Jefferson Market court, freed 420 strike pickets arrested yesterday for violating the injunction, the pages had not yet been served on strike leaders. The magistrate warned the police and counsel for the manufacturers that arrests for violation of the order can be made only after pickets had been served individually, on the strike leaders, in defiance papers

Labor Must Expose the Capitalist Government As Murderer of Workers

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

TWO former agents of the department of justice have admitted, in affidavits read at the reopening of hearings demanding a new trial for Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, that our two comrades were deliberately "framed" by the powerful United States government that wanted to get rid of them.

This is what The DAILY WORKER has always charged. Without ceasing The DAILY WORKER has thundered that Sacco and Vanzetti are innocent of the murder committed in the South Braintree, Mass., payroll robbery, April 15, 1920, more than six years ago. The actual murderers have been revealed as members of the Morelli gang of Providence, R. I., thru the admissions of one of the gangsters, Celestino Madeiros, now facing a death sentence for another crime.

The two ex-agents of the department of justice, Lawrence Letherman and Fred J. Weyland, now certify that Sacco and Vanzetti were being railroaded to the electric chair as "one way of disposing of them." The frame-up job was a purely part of the red raid drive of President Woodrow Wilson's Attorney General, A. Mitchell Palmer, "WITH THE APPROVAL OF THE DEPARTMENT IN WASHINGTON, TO WHICH FULL REPORTS WERE MADE."

In Letherman's own words:

"It was the opinion of the department of justice agents here (Besten) that a conviction of Sacco and Vanzetti for murder would be one way of disposing of them."

Let those words sear themselves into the minds of every worker in America. They reveal, better than many volumes, the naked nature of the class tyranny that has reared a government in Washington to keep labor in slavery.

In attacking the spokesmen of labor the government has two alternatives. It can either bring them to trial for the principles that they espouse or it can frame them up on some fraudulent criminal charge.

The government fears the former. It results in a court clash over vital principles as in the Michigan cases growing out of the raids on the Communist Party convention at Bridgeman. Communist principles gain a hearing before broad masses of workers. Then any penalty that has as yet been fixed for these espousing the cause of the social revolution in this country.

The government, therefore, prefers the frame-up, in the case of Mooney and Billings, in the case of Sacco and Vanzetti, and in many other cases. Similar is that of the pages of American labor history. The tactics of the Pinkerton and Burns Detective Agencies, become the tactics of the United States government, altho William J. Burns did not get into the department of justice until the democrat, Palmer, had been succeeded by the notorious Harry M. Daugherty, now on trial for collecting graft totalling $441,000 out of a deal to return alien property to his enemy owners.

Murder is the popular frame-up charge. It is legalized lynching. Thus Joe Hill was put to death by the government in Utah. It was a lynching bee as much as the murder of Frank Little, slain by a mob during the war. Only the voice of Labor has so far halted the legal lynching of Mooney and Billings, Sacco and Vanzetti. The attacks on Sacco and Vanzetti was coldblooded and deliberate. The ex-agent, Letherman, in the employ of the detective service of the government for 35 years, mainly in the post office department, further states:

"It . . . was the general opinion of such of the agents as had actual knowledge of the Sacco-Vanzetti case that Sacco and Vanzetti . . . were not highway robbers and had nothing to do with the South Braintree job."

The Wilson-Palmer department of justice had 12 men on the jobbing of Sacco and Vanzetti, carefully preparing the frame-up in order to make it airtight. Some of these were undercover. One was "planted," in a cell beside Sacco in the hope of entrapping him into confessions. Others served on Sacco-Vanzetti committees, one as a collector. An effort was made to place another in the home of Mrs. Sacco. So carefully and deliberately does the government plot its attack on the advance section of the working class.

The Wilson-Palmer democratic administration was succeeded by the Herding-Dougherty republican regime that in turn gave way to Coolidge-Sargent rule, else republican, in the department of justice. The last, however, is just as guilty as the other two. The frame-up is net characteristic of any single administration. It is an established weapon of the capitalist tyranny.

Attorney William G. Thompson, for Sacco and Vanzetti, charges that he wrote to Attorney-General Sargent demanding that the records of the Boston office be opened as a matter of justice where two human lives are at stake. Yet Thompson declares that not only has the attorney-general failed to answer his letter, but that Inspector Dowd, in charge in Boston now, has refused help, giving as his reason unwillingness to exceed his instructions. Murderers were never mere cold blooded.

Thus Cal Coolidge, president of the United States, stands revealed as one of the executioners seeking to strap Sacco and Vanzetti in the electric chair, instrument of the capitalist assassins in Massachusetts. Coolidge, thru his close contact with the department of justice, dominated by his own appointee Sargent, and errand boy as he is of the textile and shoe barons of New England, must have known the facts about the frame-up of Sacco and Vanzetti. He must have known the truth when he was visited by William Green, president, and the rest of the officialdom of the American Federation of Labor, at his summer retreat in New York's northern woods. All the pleas for the crime of Green, Woll, Ryan, Duncan and the rest who shook hands with a would-be murderer of courageous workers.

With the fake charges against Sacco and Vanzetti thus blasted, it is well to study their actual crime against the employing class. They still sit in the Massachusetts death house actually because they took up the cause of 6 fellow worker, Andrea Salsedo, kidnaped, deportation and held by the department of justice on an upper floor on one of those high skyscrapers that canyon Park Row, in New York City. Salsedo was held prisoner for months. Efforts to secure his release were futile. One day in early 1920 his body came hurtling thru space, from the open window of the department of justice offices. It was crushed' lifeless against the pavement in the street below. The inference is that the department of justice agents, failing to get Salsedo to confess to any of the numerous blasts that were taking place at this time, like the Wall Street explosion and the Chicago post office disaster, had thrown him from the window knowing that certain death waited below to silence Salsedo forever.

It is charged that this is the method used to "dispose of" Salsedo in New York City, just as the electric chair was to be used "to dispose of" Sacco and Vanzetti in Massachusetts.

The workers must now put the United States government on trial. Sacco and Vanzetti have not been murdered. But Salsedo was slain in cold blood. The murderers can be found. The whole American working class must be aroused in this new effort.

A new phase of the Sacco-Vanzetti case opens. Labor has been too much on the defensive, struggling valiantly, to be sure, to save the lives of our two comrades in prison. Labor must now strike upon an offensive, challenging the would-be murderer in the Sacco-Vanzetti case, the actual murderer in the Salsedo case, —challenging the United States capitalist government itself.

Two Children Die in Farm House Fire

FRIENDSHIP, Wis., Sept. 15—Two children were burned to death and their father was fatally injured in an effort to save them Sunday when fire destroyed the farm home of Jake Hoffmaster in the town of Big Flats, northeast of Friendship.

Mrs. Hoffmaster leaped from an upstairs window to escape the fire, which started while the family was asleep, and sustained injuries that may prove fatal.

Crossing Death in Illinois.

ROCHELLE, Ill., Sept. 15—Charles E. Nixon, 48, of Clinton, Ia., died in a hospital here today of injuries suffered late last night when his automobile was struck by a Chicago, Burlington and Quincy express train at a grade crossing near here.

Menace of Illinois Flood Causes Alarm

BEARDSTOWN, Ill., Sept. 15. — Levees are being reinforced, and bridges, roads and sewers protected as well as possible, as authorities today are attempting to prepare for a threatened flood. Many streets already have been flooded by backwater, and several sewer mains have been broken, flooding several additional streets. The east end of town and the levee district are being deserted in the face of the threatened peril.

The Illinois river is rising and the bridge here has been closed to traffic. The levee at Naples, it is reported, is safe from a break.

PITTSBURGH HAS ROUSING CAMPAIGN MEET

Workers Party Wins in Free Speech Fight

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Sept. 15.—With the local police department well represented and to the strains of the "International," the Workers (Communist) Party opened its congressional campaign here before an enthusiastic throng in Carnegie Music Hall, from which the party was barred by the police on last May Day.

Alexander Jairs, district organizer of the Workers (Communist) Party, in opening the meeting as chairman pointed out that the gathering had a double purpose. To celebrate a free speech fight won by the party and to inaugurate the party's 1926 parliamentary struggle in the Pittsburgh district.

J. Louis Engdahl, editor of The DAILY WORKER, aroused great enthusiasm from the fight to free Sacco and Vanzetti by pointing out the revelations brought to light in the confessions of two ex-department of justice agents in the court hearing at Dedham, Mass., Monday. He used these revelations admitting the government's frame-up against Sacco and Vanzetti to explain the real nature of the American capitalist government-tyranny.

Mrs. Parthenia Hills, the party's candidate for lieutenant governor, won great applause by her excellent statement of the part that the worker is taking in the American class struggle. Her declaration that the Negro was in a class fight and not a struggle for his race was enthusiastically applauded. She eloquently exposed the republican party as the enemy of the Negro workers.

Organize Young Workers.

George Papcun, of the Young Workers (Communist) League, urged the organization of the young workers in the steel mills, the mining and electrical industries. A special musical program was furnished by the Kendra brothers.

This was the first of a series of four campaign meetings. The next meeting will be held Sept. 28, addressed by William W. Weinstone of New York City.

AIMEE'S ALIBI FALLS DOWN ON MISS X DOUBLE

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 15.—A little black book and the notes in it have undone a perfectly good alibi for Aimee Semple McPherson, the woman evangelist who disappeared at a California beach and appeared some weeks later in the desert at the Mexican border in Arizona with a suspicious tale of having been kidnapped and held for ransom.

The little black book was the property of one Mrs. Lorraine Wiseman, who was arrested recently for passing worthless checks. The police filed covered notes in the book showing that she had had some business dealings with Aimee.

Good Alibi, But—

It developed that Mrs. Wiseman was the woman who made an affidavit that she was the woman other witnesses had identified as Aimee McPherson, who was charged with spending ten days in a love nest with her radio operator, Kenneth G. Ormiston, at Carmel-by-the-Sea during the time she was supposed to have been "kidnapped."

Mrs. Wiseman had sought to clear both Aimee and herself by saying that a certain "Miss X." Mrs. Wiseman's twin sister, was the lady who received Ormiston's attentions.

Twin Sister Objects.

The twin sister, Mrs. Viola McDonald Kimball of Oakland, California, objected to being put in this light, so Mrs. Wiseman confessed.

The confession specifies in great detail how the alibi for Aimee was worked out with Aimee's assistance and a promise of $5,000 if Mrs. Wiseman would go thru with it. She tells how she got a certain Miss Rachel Wells to appear at Salinas, Cal., and make an affidavit supporting her own, Miss Wells claiming to be the mysterious "Miss X."

Coached to Get $5,000.

A man named Martin, supposed to be a lover of Miss Wells, had sent in an affidavit from Ormiston in which "Miss X" was named as being his companion, and Aimee was cleared. It now stands, claiming to be the mysterious "Miss X."

In addition, Mrs. Wiseman says:

"Mrs. McPherson coached me on points which were vital to the story. Her attorney, Mr. Woolley, took me to a handwriting expert. I was instructed to try to copy the words and signature of Rachel Wells found at Carmel. These were the words found by reporters in my black book."

When the news of Mrs. Wiseman's confession reached Aimee McPherson the evangelist issued a flat denial and shut herself up with her attorneys.

GERMANY ASKS ALLIES EVACUATE THE RHINE ZONE

Locarno Makes Troops There Unnecessary

(Special to The Daily Worker)

GENEVA, Sept. 19. — Foreign Minister Stresemann of Germany, who is that nation's leading representative in the league of nations meeting now in session, after an exchange of ratifications of the Locarno treaties gave an interview in which he stated that the Rhineland should be evacuated by allied troops.

"If Locarno has any meaning at all," he said, "it should mean the existing frontier of western Europe are guaranteed against forceful revision, and consequently no other guarantees, such as occupied zones, are longer necessary."

Stresemann also tried to placate the British fear of the new Franco-German iron and steel combine.

"The London government is invited to participate in the Franco-German pour parlers aimed at establishing an agreement for steel, rendered necessary thru the post-war transfer to France of the Alsatian iron fields, which depend on Westphalian fuel."

The allied representatives would not comment on the demand for evacuation, except to say that Germany must execute its obligations in full before requesting modifications.

ARGENTINE CABINET MAKERS' UNION PLANS AMALGAMATION MOVE

BUENOS AIRES, Sept. 19. — At the initiative of a member of the Communist Party, the three cabinetmakers unions of Buenos Aires, belonging to various federations, organized a committee for the amalgamation of these unions.

The committee consists of anarchists, syndicalists, Communists, workers without party affiliations and it is believed that unity will soon be accomplished. The secretary of the committee is a Communist. There are many Germans, Italians and Russian-Jewish workers in the trade.

For Building Trades Temple

WASHINGTON—(FP)—A national headquarters building in Washington will be proposed by the building trades department of the American Federation of Labor at its forthcoming annual convention in Detroit.

Secy. Tracy of the department will advocate a building trades temple that will cost approximately $1,000,000 to be built entirely by union labor.

Want Share in Car Increases

SAN FRANCISCO — (FP) — Janitors and car washers of the San Francisco municipal railways, who were left out of the wage raise recently granted to platform men, may be raised from $4.83 a day to $5.25. The raise is contingent on finding $104,000 for the purpose in the city treasury, 60 men being affected.

YAQUI REVOLT LAID TO PLOT OF CATHOLICS

Suspect De la Huerta; Two Agents Shot

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 19. — While the details of what is happening in the Yakui country of Sonora are hidden by lack of communication, it is the popular belief that the Yaqui Indians have been incited to revolt by reactionary enemies of the Calles government.

Reports say that 2,000 federal troops have driven the Yaquis into the mountains and that the Yaqui chief, General Matus, is hard pressed, while another report says that this Yaqui leader and 2,000 of his followers were paid ransom for General Alvaro Obregon, paid by the governor of Sonora after having been captured by the Indians. Obregon is reported to have had his one good arm wounded.

It is believed that Adolfo de la Huerta, whose clerical-fascist revolt of 1923 was suppressed, but who has since continually plotted against the government, has sent agents into the Yaqui country to agitate the uprising.

It is especially significant that two men, charged with making propaganda for an uprising among the Indians, and shot by federal troops at Tinguindin, in the state of Michoacan last Sunday, were shown to be connected with the catholic reaction. These two were Manuel Melgarejo and Joaquin de Silva, both sons of prominent lawyers of Mexico City.

Catholics Have Secret Radio.

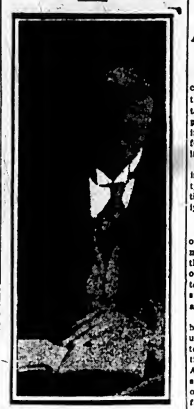
Young Melgarejo is supposed to belong to a Methodist family, however, but the society with which they were connected is supposed to have been a shield for anti-Calles catholic propaganda of a secret nature.

The arrest of another prominent Mexican shows that the catholics are waging secret war against the government. Luis Otier y Teran, one of the most active members of the Catholic League for Religious Defense and a member of one of the oldest and most aristocratic Mexican families, was arrested on his war to the United States on the charge of having a secret wireless station. Such a station has been sending out vicious attacks against the Calles government.

SUCCEEDS BARTHOU AS CHAIRMAN OF THE REPARATIONS BODY



Fernand Chapsal is the new president of the reparations Commission since Louis Barthou accepted a portfolio in the French cabinet. The commission's job is to continue to squeeze war claims out of Germany, which for the present is going towards helping to bolster up the French franc, now worse off than the mark. With Germany in the league of nations, it is possible the reparations commission will soon find itself without much to do.

Four Trapped in Flames.

BENTON, Ill., Sept. 19.—Trapped by fire in a barn, Mary Conner, five, and her three-year-old sister, Margaret, were burned to death on their parents' farm near Ewing today.

It was believed the children were playing with matches and accidentally set fire to the hay stored in the barn.

KUOMINTANG IN PROTEST AT THE TARIFF MEETING

Accuses U. S. of Aiding Chinese Militarists

CANTON, Sept. 19.—The executive committee of the Kuomintang or Nationalist party, has issued a manifesto to the Chinese people calling them to protest at the machinations of the imperialists in the so-called "tariff conference" carried on at Peking. In part it says:

"Fellow citizens: There is one way in which the powers can show sincerity in their attitude towards China, and that is by refusing directly or indirectly to aid the militarists.

Same Old Story.

"It is the same old story over and over again. Yuan Shikai was given money by Britain, and the result was that the country fell into the clutches of the militarists. Japan gave money to Tuan Chi-jui, thereby putting obstacles in the way to unity, peace and a stable government.

"And now, when the national forces both from the north and the south are using their best efforts to put an end to the chaos of China, the powers, this time with the participation of the American democracy, hasten to resume the tariff conference, with a view of rescuing the detestable militarists from penury, thus enabling them to plunge the country into misery for many years to come.

Wants American People to Know.

"We still cherish the hope that these nations do not know of this crime, and that particularly the people of the U. S. A. are ignorant of it. Therefore, fellow citizens, it is our duty to cry aloud, so that the whole civilized world should know, that a great crime is to be committed in China in—that their representatives are about to put their signatures to decisions which will finance further civil wars, with their inevitable robbery, plunder, rape and other miseries, and which will frustrate the nationalist movement from establishing peace and order in the country.

Labor Summer Schools Held Thruout Britain by Education Society

By BILL ROSS, Federated Press.

LONDON—(FP)—Workers' summer schools are being held throughout Britain. There are about 30 schools with over 2,000 workers combining vacation with education. Owing to the depression, the scope of the summer school has been somewhat curtailed.

Every phase of the labor movement is represented. There are schools conducted by the Workers' Education association, which is considered the right wing of the workers' education movement, and schools conducted by the National Council of Labor Colleges, which is Marxian. The Independent Labor Party, the Coopera tives, the Working Men's Clubs association and trade unions offer summer courses in various parts of the country.

These summer schools are attended largely by workers who have studied in evening classes. Many of them are active members in their organizations and are sent on scholarships, others pay their own way. The type of students in attendance is evident in the list of occupations of the men and women in one of these summer schools. There are miners, steel workers, clerks, mechinists, electricians, railway workers, carpenters and post office workers.

There is a wide range of subjects. At present the lessons of the general strike and the coal strike are most in demand. Other subjects cover every problem of interests to workers, from how to run a workingman's club to international relations.

BALDWIN MAKES NEW ATTACK ON BRITISH MINERS

they are not just given to complaining, they are facing the position with a praiseworthy doggedness like the man.

A letter has been sent by the miners' executive officials to the government signifying their willingness to negotiate a new national agreement: this it is reported has been sent to the officials of the mine owners who state that their central committee has no power to negotiate with the miners' executive so it has now been sent by the government to the mining Association who have been invited to meet the cabinet to discuss the situation.

According to all statements there is nel the slightest disposition on the part of the miners or their chief officials to even discuss the question of increased hours of work, and the most recent statements of the owners on this is that they absolutely insist upon an increase in working time; so the prospect does not look very promising for successful negotiation.

The men are also quite firm in the matter of national agreements, but thers has been a noticeable modification on the part of several of the principal spokesmen in regard to wages adjustments which has caused considarable dissatisfaction amongst the more militant miners. This found vent in full expression at the Minority Movement Conference which discussed the subject in all its bearings and resolved not to make any concessions on the grounds that they had made no demands and were simply resisting the aggression of the owners. Less than two per cent have returned to work in the 15 weeks of the strike.

The Trade Union Congress.

On Monday the 6th of Sept: the Trade Union Congress begins its sittings at Bournemouth. Already the government has refused to allow the fraternal delegates from Russia to land in the country, Comrade Tomsky and Comrade Melnichansky are not to be allowed therefore to give their message to the organised workers of Britain. This is stretching the powers of the home secretary a good deal, and will give rise to intense dissatisfaction. At the same time many of the reactionary members of the General Council as well as the stodgy portion of the delegates will be glad rather than sorry at this insolent behavior of the government.

General Council Fears Criticism.

How fearful of criticism the General Council is may be seen from the fact that the council has decided that there shall be no report to congress on the subject of the general strike, this is considered by all militants to mean that the council is not prepared to face the fight that would undoubtadly be put up if the opportunity is there.

Whatever happens in this regard we know well enough the line to take. We all know that the organisation of the trade union movement is very faulty and it must be changed for the better in the shortest possible time.

Every one knews that the miners could have won with the utmost ease if organised general action had been thoroly resortad to at the start or at any time, even now.

Universal action over the entire field of industry even allowing for a considerable percentage of leakages would win out in one day if those responsible showed courage and capacity. Wa of the Minority Movement are definitely out for every necessary change in the organization of the trade unions to enable us to get complete control of the whole position.

LOS ANGELES LABOR HELPS MINE STRIKE

Socialists Only Block to Relief Conference

By DAVE RAPO, Worker Correspondent.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 19.—A conference to help the British striking miners was organized here by the Carpenters' Local Union 1976. Over 25 labor organizations, mostly labor unions, affiliated with the conference. An energetic campaign has been started to raise funds for the starving miners in Great Britain. A considerable amount of money has already been raised and sent to the American Federation of Labor thru the L. A. Central Labor Council.

Carpenters' Union Local 1976 has given $100 from its treasury. Office Workers' Local 1521 has donated $10. Workers with subscription lists are collecting money at their local union meetings and on the jobs. The response is encouraging. Tho writer of this story collected $8 at his last local union meeting, Painters 1345. Our business agent has collected $22 on his list. Officials of labor unions are making collections on subscription lists issued by the conference.

Central Labor Council Endorses Conference.

The Los Angeles Central Labor Council endorsed the British miners' relief conference and appointed a committee of five to represent the council at the conference and work out ways and means to raise large amounts of money for the starving miners. All the money raised by the conference goes thru the Central Labor Council to the A. F. of L. Miners' Relief Committee.

Socialists Sabotage Relief Work.

The Jewish socialist "Verband" and the city and district committee of the Workmen's Circle called their own conference. Several attempts were made by the relief conference called by the carpenters to unite both conferences for greater and more energetic work for the striking miners.

They were entirely ignored and rejected by the socialists. Even the proposal of the carpenters' conference to exchange delegates in order not to interfere with each other's work was rejected by them. This action of the socialists aroused the condemnation of all the workers in the trade unions and as a result the two local unions which were affiliated with the socialist conference withdrew from them and joined the conference called by the carpenters.

Use New Argument to Aid Open Shop in N. Y. Window Cleaning Row

By a Worker Correspondent.

NEW YORK CITY, Sept. 19.— The Window Cleaners' Union has been refused a demand for $4 a week wage increase by the employers' association and a strike is due October 1.

The employers have invented a brand new excuse in refusing to deal with the union. They say that the union has established a window cleaning company which competes with these employers and their association. This, say the employers, is "the soviet system" applied to window cleaning.

The employers want a monopoly on the business and give the following weird argument:

"The window cleaning union has established a so-called window cleaning company, which is being run and governed by the officers of this union on a soviet system, and the union is constantly using this soviet company as a threat against the employers, and the only aim of this union is in due time to sovietize the entire window cleaning industry and then dictate terms directly to the customers instead of to the window cleaning contractors."

Coaldigger Killed in Fall of Slate

By a Worker Correspondent.

POWHATTAN, Ohio, Sept. 19.—Nick Giamhattista died as a result of a fall of slate which caught him while he was working at the Powhatton mine. Not enough posts were at hand to set up and keep the slate from falling.

N. Y. HOSPITAL NEGLECTS POOR WORKERS' WIVES

Mothers Mistreated in Free Ward

By J. N., Workers Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—New York City has many maternity hospitals. Some have free wards, in others you must pay a charge of $50 for confinement and a two weeks' stay. This includes a visit every two weeks to the hospital before confinement.

Money Buys Privileges.

If you can afford $50 a week you can get a private room and your relatives may visit you at any time they wish. Visitors to the free or "poor women's" wards are limited to twice a week. The number of patients in one ward ranges from 15 to 20. (I am speaking about the New York Nursery and Hospital, 161 West 61st street.)

My wife was taken sick about two weeks ago. After most difficult labors in the above hospital she gave birth to a baby. My wife was in the fifth ward. She was suffering with bladder trouble and constipation. She was forced to beg and wait for hours until she could get a bedpan. Many times she was forced to pass urine into the bed and then forced to sleep in the soggy bed. The nurses paid little attention to the antreaties of the working-class women quartered in this ward.

Patients Neglected.

One morning the doctor of the hospital ordered an anema for a constipation of three day's standing. In spite of repeated requests she was not attended to until late that night. The doctor's order for the use of a pump on the breasts went unheeded for about 15 hours. The orders were only carried out after repeated requests from my wife.

While attending her the nurses were brutal and insulting. This revolting treatment is a common thing here. The patients fear to make any complaints, as they fear reprisals on the part of nurses.

The information service here is rotten. It is next to impossible to find out the condition that a patient is in unless that patient is in a private ward. If the patient is in a private ward then you know everything.

Working-class wives and mothers are ignored and neglected in this hospital. The sight of pregnant women waiting for hours in line while the hospital nurses gossip and tell jokes to each other is a common sight that greets visitors to this hospital.

The Sunday Worker Slogan Contest

THE Sunday Worker needs a slogan. Not one coined in the office of the management, but given to it by its readers.

It must be short, snappy and descriptive. A few words hastily joined together describing the contents of "The Sunday Worker" suggesting its great interest and value to workers, urging them to get acquainted with it, to read it; to make a habit of it so that they will look forward to it as anxiously as they do for Sunday while at work on Monday morning.

And the "Sunday Worker" is willing to pay for it! Prizes will be given as appreciation of the Movement to those workers who will spend time and thought to produce such a slogan.

...P. LAUNCHES ELECTION DRIVE HERE SEPT. 22

...gdahl and Dunne to Speak

J. Louis Engdahl, editor of The DAILY WORKER and candidate for Senator from the state of Illinois on the Workers (Communist) Party ticket, will tell the workers of Chicago what his party stands for in the coming election at a mass meeting to be held on September 22 at Mirror Hall, 1346 N. Western Ave.

Illinois Slush.

The recent exposures of graft and corruption in the old political parties have clearly demonstrated how little "democracy" means under capitalism. Big corporations buy their men into office—when they don't get there they deliver the goods to their masters. Even sections of the labor movement, consciously or unconsciously, are at the disposal of the possessors of labor when they see fit to wave the magic wand of money. All these things have been brought out clearly in the Illinois slush fund investigation.

What are the rank and file going to do about it? How can they remedy this condition? These and many other questions will be discussed by candidate Engdahl and the other speakers, Wm. F. Dunne, editor of The DAILY WORKER, and Max Shachtman of the Young Workers League.

Every worker is invited to attend this mass meeting. The admission charge is only 15 cents.

W. P. Election Campaign Tours

The Election Campaign is on with a bang!

Thruout the country, in towns large and small, the Workers (Communist) Party has sent its speakers to tell the workers and the farmers the truth about the issues in the present elections and to win their support for the election program of the Workers (Communist) Party.

WILLIAM F. DUNNE, Editor of The DAILY WORKER, has just completed a tour of some of the larger cities of this country speaking on "Democracy and Corruption," showing up the real nature of our "glorious democracy."

J. LOUIS ENGDAHL, Editor of THE DAILY WORKER, is now in the middle of his country-wide tour, speaking on "The Workers and the Old Parties." He takes up the question of whether the workers and the farmers should continue to support the democratic and republican outfits or whether they should organize a party of labor.

BEN GITLOW, well-known in the labor movement of this country, vice-presidential candidate of the Workers (Communist) Party in the 1924 elections, starts his big tour on September 29. His subject will be "What Can the Workers Expect from the Elections?"

C. E. RUTHENBERG, the secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party, will complete these country-wide tours in the second half of October speaking on "What A Workers' and Farmers' Government Could Do For the Workers and Farmers." His first date will be October 14.

The western part of the country will be covered by BERTRAM D. WOLFE, the director of the Workers' School of New York. Comrade Wolfe's tour given below will take him to most of the big cities of the west. "Who Owns the Government?" will be the subject of his lecture.

The New England states and upper New York state are being toured now by HARRY M. WICKS; in October MANUEL GOMEZ will cover the same territory speaking of the election campaign with special emphasis on American imperialism and the Mexican situation.

HARRY M. WICKS, candidate for governor in the state of Pennsylvania, will cover Massachusetts in October.

The lower middle west, the states of Illinois, Ohio, and Indiana, are being toured by REBECCA GRECHT. In October they will be covered again by another well-known speaker.

The states of Michigan, Minnesota and Wisconsin are being toured by J. O. BENTALL. REBECCA GRECHT will speak at the same cities in November.

These are the most important election campaign tours of the Workers (Communist) Party this year. Each of the speakers has an important message for every worker and farmer in this country.

Readers of The DAILY WORKER should examine the lists below and see upon what days the various speakers will be in their localities and then should make immediate plans to get all their fellow-workers and friends to these meetings. Watch The DAILY WORKER for particulars!

NOTE: Names of halls and street addresses should be sent in immediately where they do not appear above.

KANSAS CITY TALK BEGINS WOLFE'S TOUR

Starts "Swing Round Circle"

Bertram D. Wolfe, director of the New York Workers' School and candidate for United States congressman on the Workers Party ticket speaks in Kansas City tonight as the first stop in a national tour under the auspices of the party in which he will cover ten thousand miles and nineteen cities. The "swing round the circle" which will take a full month will include a half dozen cities on the West Coast where Wolfe was active in the labor movement for many years and the entire middle and far West.

Who Owns Government.

The subject of Wolfe's campaign talks is: "Who Owns the Government." Our strikebreaker president, our hanker vice-president, our multi-millionaire secretary of the treasury and the whole tribe of senators who spend a million or so buying their seats in the United States senate, will be subjected to analysis by the speaker as will the record of the last congress and the general situation in the country today. The talk will end with some suggestions as to what the worker and farmer can do about making our "representative" government represent them.

Schedule.

Wolfe's schedule includes the following dates and cities:

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH. September 23.
LOS ANGELES, CAL. Cooperative Hall, 2706 Brooklyn Ave. September 25.

District 8 Active Group Meets Tuesday

That there has been a recent increase in activities within the Chicago party units is primarily due to the initial work of the activization group which has been organized by decision of the last district conference held on August 29.

The members of this group have been visiting party units and helping them along in the work. However, there is still room for more members in this activization group.

Any active party member ready to give his time to help bring in more life into the units will be accepted in the group which meets again Tuesday Sept. 21st at 8 p. m., at 19 S. Lincoln street.

Well, Somebody Had to Get Married; So Mabel Volunteered

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 19. — According to reports in the Hollywood Film Colony, movie actor Law Cody and Miss Normand entertained an opera singer and her accompanist at Cody's Beverly Hills home one night. The singer and her pianist, it was rumored, decided suddenly to become married. Cody and Miss Normand accompanied them to Ventura.

Arriving in Ventura, however, the singer and her fiance changed their minds. Disappointed at this development, Cody and Miss Normand, who have been friends for years, decided to get married themselves.

Early in the year, while America was getting into the war, the people of Russia had overthrown their Tsar and set up a republic. That had pleased most people in America; it was much pleasanter to be allied with a republic. But now, in the fall, came a terrifying event; there was another revolution, this time not made by respectable scholars and business men, but by wild-eyed fanatics called "Bolsheviks," who proceeded to confiscate property and smash things up. At once it became apparent what a calamity this was going to mean for the allies; Russia was going to desert them, and the mass of the Germans on the East would be set free to be hurled against the half-exhausted Western front. Already the Russian armies were going to pieces, the soldiers were deserting wholesale and swarming back to the cities or to their villages; at the same time the leaders of the new govern-ment were starting a world-wide propaganda attacking the allies and their war-aims.

Who were these leaders? It was enough for America to note that a horde of them, who had been hiding in Switzerland, were loaded into a sealed train by the German government and escorted across Germany and dumped into Russia to make all the trouble they could. That meant Lenin and his crowd were hired agents of the Hun; when they proceeded to attack what they called "allied imperialism," that was the Kaiser's voice speaking Russian; and when they published the secret treaties of the allies, taken from the archives of the Tsar, the newspapers in America dismissed the documents as obvious forgeries.

Dad, as a good American, believed his newspapers. He considered that this "Bolsheviki revolution" was the most terrible event that had happened in the world in his life-time; his face would grow pale as he talked to Bunny about it. America could get no army to France until next spring, and perhaps not till fall, and meantime the Germans had a million men they could move, only a few hundred miles across their country to the West front; they were just a-going to roll over the British and French, and take Paris, and perhaps the whole of France, and we should have the job of driving them out again. The whole burden of the war now fell onto America's shoulders, and it would last years and years—neither Dad nor Bunny might live to see the end of it.

Dad would read paragraphs out of the papers, details of the horrors that were happening in Russia—literally millions of people slaughtered, all the educated and enlightened ones; the most hideous tortures inflicted, such obscenities as you could not put into print. Before long they began applying their Communist theories to the women of the country, who were "nationalized" and made into public property by official decree; the "commissars" were raping them wholesale. Lenin was killing Trotsky, and Trotsky was throwing Lenin into jail. It was a boiling up from the bottom of the social pit, such savagery as we had hardly dreamed existing in human nature. Bunny could see now the folly of that "idealism" he had been prattling, his idea of letting strikers have their way, and turning industry over to the mob. Here was the thing tried out in practice, and how did he like it? Bunny had to admit that he didn't like it so well, and he was crushed and sobered.

The problem came home to him, because he had to decide as to his own duty in this world crisis. This was his last year in school; then he would be old enough for the draft, and what was he going to do? He and his father talked it out in a solemn conference. Dad thought that he had responsibilities enough to entitle him to the help of one son; he didn't think he would be a slacker if he were to get Mr. Carey to release Bunny for service in the oil industry. But Bunny insisted that he must go to the front; he even talked of quitting school at once and enlisting as a number of other boys had done. They finally agreed to compromise, waiting till Bunny was through school, and then see how matters shaped up. But meantime Bunny owed this much to his country, as well as to himself—he should give more time to his studies, and less to playing about. If a young fellow really understood this world crisis, he would surely stick to whatever work he was doing, and not throw himself away in dissipation. Bunny flushed and let his eyes fall, and said he guessed that was true, and he'd do better in the future.

IX

He went to Eunice in his mood of high seriousness, to explain how the burden of the task of saving civilization had fallen upon their shoulders. She told him yes, she had been realizing it, she had just been getting a serious talk from her mother, who had explained that there was going to be a shortage of food and all kinds of materials, as a result of the war and the needs of our allies. The club-ladies had decided upon their duty—they would purchase only the most expensive kinds of food, so as to leave the lard and cabbage and potatoes for the poor; Mrs. Hoyt had given away all her clothing to the Salvation army, and spent a small fortune buying a complete outfit of the most costly things she could find. Eunice was of course quite willing to use only luxuries, but found it a little puzzling, because her Aunt Alice took just the opposite view, and had bought herself a lot of cheap things, in order to set an example to the working classes. Which did Bunny think was right?

But this sober mood did not last long with Eunice. A couple of days later she was invited to a Belgian orphans' ball; and when Bunny insisted that he had to study, she threatened to go with Billy Chalmers, the handsome captain of last year's football team—there was no team this year. Bunny said all right, and so Eunice flaunted Billy in front of the whole school, and there were rumors that he was parking his car with her, and that Bunny's nose was out of joint. This went on for a week or two, until Bunny's heartache was more than he could stand. It was Saturday night—and Dad had granted that it wouldn't be wrong to go to one dance a week; so he phoned Eunice, and they "made it up" with tears and wild gusts of passion, and she declared that she had never really really loved anyone but her Bunny-hear, and how could he have been so wicked as to refuse to please her?

But then came Christmas, and the shrewd and presistent Dad arranged a series of temptations—a big turkey, and Ruth to cook it, and two new wells coming in, to say nothing of the quail calling over the hills at sunset. Bunny promised, and simply had to go; and Eunice had the most terrible of all her tantrums, she grabbed Bunny by the hair and pulled him about her mother's drawing room with her mother standing helpless by; she owed that Bunny was a four-flusher, and a wretch, and she would ring up Billy Chalmers, and they would go off on a joy-ride that very night, and not come back till the Christmas holidays were over and maybe not then.

DELEGATES FROM PASSAIC ATTEND N. Y. CONVENTION

U. T. W. Greets Strikers from New Local

By ART SHIELDS.
(Federated Press Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, Sept. 19. — Hope for the organisation of the textile industry with its million members glimmered into the twenty-fifth annual convention of the United Textile Workers of America with the entrance of five credentialled members from the Passaic strike zone. The five members who took their seat among their 138 brothers and sisters represent the ten thousand new members in the new Passaic local Union No. 1803.

From Basic Section.

The significance of the new Passaic local is that it has come from the basic part of the industry in which the union has been weakest. Before the Passaic strikers were welcomed into the international the general organisation consisted mainly of skilled workers in the highly specialised textiles but had comparatively few members in the basic cloth making divisions of woolens and worsteds and cottons—comparatively few, that is, as compared with the unorganised.

The hope now is that with Passaic as a starter a vigorous union drive may in the coming years clinch the woolen and worsted workers of Massachusetts and Rhode Island. Fifty thousand more of these would give the union a powerful grip on this division of the industry. And if success can be gained in a large way in woolens and worsteds then why not the numerically larger division of cotton manufacturing.

Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers; Upholstery Weavers, and other skilled craftsmen who have been in the union for years welcomed Gustav Deak, chairman of the Passaic strike committee, and his fellows warmly. And they listened with interest to speakers who told of the human and industrial necessity of bringing the vast masses of cotton and woolen workers into the union fold.

Window Cleaners Deny 'Soviet' Charge; Only Fight the Open Shop

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—Paul Kurt, business agent of Local 8 of the Window Cleaners' Protective Union, at 217 East 4th street, denies charges that the window cleaning company run by his organization is on a Soviet basis or that it has any connection with Moscow. This concern, the Minsola Window Cleaning Company, was chartered by the state as a corporation. It was organised to be used as a weapon against the open shop by taking business from such shops and thus compelling them to employ union labor.

Mr. Fink, manager of the Amalgamated Window Cleaning Employers' Association, was a former business agent of the Window Cleaners' Protective Union. In 1919 he betrayed the workers in a strike called at that time and became manager of the employers' association.

The union is not disturbed by the charges and it is expected that about 1,500 window cleaners of New York and Brooklyn will go on strike October 1 unless the employers meet the damands of the workers.

Boston Waitresses Get Starvation Wage

BOSTON — (FP) — Waitress conditions in Boston are among the worst in the country, reports Bea Tumber, international organizer for the hotel and restaurant employes union. There are 3,000 waitresses in Boston, she said, and the average get only $8 a week in wages and have to depend on tips. Where wages are better the rules sometimes forbid tips and girls are compelled to pay for their own meals.

In contrast, said the organizer, "in Los Angeles, waitresses get on the average $17 for an 8-hour day; in San Francisco $30 a week; in Chicago $18; Cleveland $18; St. Louis $18; Detroit $18; New York $18 in union restaurants and $12 on the average in others." All in addition to tips.

WITH THE LABOR PRESS

(More than 500 trade union papers—official organs of national and international unions, state federations of labor, district councils, central labor bodies and local unions—advocate correct, partially correct, or incorrect policies, voice poorly or well, represent or misrepresent, the opinions of the rank and file of the trade union movement. This is the field in which our party must conduct most of its work and it is a field of activity about which we must of necessity have the most detailed and accurate information.

The publication in this department of editorial comment from the trade union press does not mean necessarily that we are in agreement with it. We publish this material to inform our readers of the trend of thought expressed in the labor press and when necessary such editorial expressions will be accompanied by our own comment.—Editor's Note.)

Honor vs. Rubber.

President Coolidge, apparently, has gone over to the rubber interests which want to hold the Philippines as a rubber plantation. His special commissioner, Carmi Thompson, member of the infamous Ohio gang, from the beginning has been trying to prove a case and not conduct a fair investigation. The young Firestone, according to the newspapers, has been telling the president that the rubber corporation should be allowed to control as much as 500,000 acres—well over 700 square miles instead of the 2,500 acres to which holdings are now limited. Nothing of the sort is necessary for the successful growing of rubber; 2,500 acres is a lot of land and it would be far better for the Philippines to see a slower development of rubber plantations, perhaps on the co-operative principle, than to see them delivered over to foreign capitalists. Anyway, we cannot get a bit excited about our dependence on British rubber growers. Short of a war with Great Britain which is unthinkable, we shall usually be able to buy British or Dutch rubber as cheap as American interests will permit us to buy American owned rubber. There is no shortage in the production of rubber and in the long run over-development of rubber plantations will send prices of rubber up, not down. If the rubber interests get their way, it's a safe bet that within a few years, they will be forming a kind of international trust to control the price of rubber together with the very people against whom they are now arousing the American consumer. This has been the history of the steel trade. Anyway, the facts show that British rubber growers are not nearly as responsible for American prices as our American producers. If we sell our honor in the Philippines for the sake of rubber plantations we will not even collect our thirty pieces of silver.

New Jersey Labor Elects New State Federation Heads

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WILDWOOD, N. J., Sept. 19.—After 17 years' service as secretary of the New Jersey State Federation of Labor, Harry F. Hilfers was defeated here for re-election by Hugh Reilly. Both men live in Newark. Opposition to Hilfers grew from criticism by union men of his directing of a two-day strike of brewers in Newark last spring, it was reported.

Other officers elected were: Arthur A. Quinn of Sewaren, president; E. J. Reid of Newark, first vice-president; Thomas E. Ames, Millville, second vice-president; J. J. Buckley, Jersey City, treasurer. Camden will be the scene of the federation's 1927 convention.

SAN FRANCISCO—(FP)—Members of the cloth, hat, cap and millinery workers' union in San Francisco will share in a raise of $2 to $3 a week under new national agreement. The workers also secured a 40-hour week, beginning July 1927.

Judge Tyranny Is Stimulus to Canadian Labor

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MONTREAL — (FP) — Interim injunctions restraining Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America from picketing Society Brand Clothes ltd., Intl. Tailoring Co., ltd. and Samuel Hart & Co., firms still fighting strikes, have been granted by Montreal courts. Damage suits against the union have been instituted, the Society Brand claiming they have suffered a loss of $15,000, the Hart Co. $10,000, the Intl. Tailoring Co. $3,000.

The Amalgamated, after a brief strike, signed up firms doing about 90% of the trade. The Montreal Daily World has been publishing stories denouncing the three firms holding out for miserable treatment of employes before the strike.

This is the first time a union in eastern Canada has faced an action for damages on account of picketing.

PORTERS' UNION PAYS DIVIDENDS ON UNION DUES

Pullman Profits Show More Wages Justified

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Sept. 18.—Pullman porters received 200% dividends on their union dues in the first year's existence of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, says a circular issued by that organization.

The wage increase of 8% a year adds $64.40 to the annual income, or a net total of $42.80 after deducting $22 for the $10 initiation fee and the $12 annual dues.

The wage increase was granted by the company for the purpose of allaying discontent the Brotherhood was mobilising. But the Brotherhood tells the workers that much more is due them. In the 11 months ending June the Pullman company net income was $10,343,500 as against $8,347,636 the year before.

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—The Moving Picture Operators' Union notifies theaters in the Negro section of Harlem that Negro union operators must receive the union scale. Some houses were attempting to pay less to the black operators.

Dixie Typos Compel Proprietor to Crawl

DURHAM, N. C — (FP) — Union workers on the Durham Morning Herald gave E. T. Rollins, its president, an object lesson in shop control the other day.

Rollins, strolling thru the composing room, removed from the linotype machine, stones and canes the union cards of the workers, who were told to keep their cards out of sight.

Notice was served Rollins that, unless the cards were allowed to stay where they could be seen the printers would walk out. In a few minutes he yielded. The Herald employs union workers, but has never made a contract with the union. Its policy has all along been hostile to organized labor.

A strike of union workers on the Herald looms, following the action of Rollins in employing a nephew who is not a union member.

NEWS AND COMMENT

This department will appear in every Monday's issue of the The DAILY WORKER.

Origin and Growth of the Co-operative Wholesale Society

IN our last chapter we noted the steady expansion of the distributive store movement from 1844-62. This, with the difficulties created by private wholesalers and the desire for unadulterated foods, led to the need for a wholesale agency. First attempts—including that by the Rochdale Society—met with failure. The federal form, which alone could be successful, had to wait the sanction of the law. This was obtained by the act of 1862, which allowed one society to hold shares in another.

Early Attempts at Federation.

Amongst the early attempts was that of the Oswaldtwistle society which started a wholesale society in 1831; it went out of existence in 1838. A central co-operative agency was commenced by the Christian Socialists, in 1850 in London. Its decease occurred in 1856. The Rochdale Society experiment was the commencement of a wholesale departure in 1855. The main cause of its failure was the jealousy of neighboring societies, who could not see why the Rochdale Society should have the monopoly of such a department.

After several preliminary informal meetings and conferences, including also a considerable amount of publicity such as the article in the Co-operator by its editor, Henry Pitman, stating, "Sooner or later we shall be compelled to import articles for consumption, as well as for manufacture, and a union of the various societies in existence will best enable it to be done," a conference held at Oldham at Christmas, 1862, decided to establish a wholesale agency on the following plan:— "An office to be opened at Liverpool or Manchester; none but co-operative societies to be allowed to become shareholders or purchasers; the business to be conducted for ready money; goods to be bought only to order, and to be invoiced at cost price, a small commission to be charged to defray the working expenses; goods to be sent by their own carriage; the capital to be raised by every society taking up shares in proportion to the number of its members."

The name of the new organization, enrolled in August, 1863, was the North of England Co-operative Wholesale Industrial and Provident Society (name changed to Co-operative Wholesale Society in 1873), and business was commenced in 1864, in Manchester.

Constitution of C. W. S.

It will thus be seen that the C. W. S. is constituted like other societies, but its members are not individuals but societies. Twelve "original members" were, however, enrolled, who each took up one five-shilling share. When the amending act of 1867 annulled the limitation of investment by societies the act of 1862 imposed the same limit of investment on societies (£200) as the act of 1852 had imposed on individual co-operators—no further individuals were admitted. The new rule of 1868 definitely restricted membership to registered societies and similar corporate bodies.

The original intention of selling only at cost price, merely charging a small commission, was abandoned after six months' working. The ordinary system of buying at one price and selling at another was then adopted, the net profits being divided among shareholding societies in proportion to the amount of their purchases.

The Rochdale group bore the brunt of the whole initial work of establishing the Wholesale Society. William Cooper, regarded by Holyoake as "as the druggs of co-operations," received £1 per week in 1857 for four years' strenuous work. He died in harness in 1886. Conferences were held in Glasgow, between 1864-65, to discuss the advisability of starting either a separate Wholesale Society for Scotland or a branch of the English Wholesale. The suggestion to establish a branch was negatived by the English society, with the result that the S. C. W. S. was founded in 1868, on similar lines to the C. W. S.

C. W. S. Production.

As capital and members increased, inevitably the Wholesale Societies were driven into production. The first venture was a biscuit and confectionery works at Crumpsall, Manchester, purchased in 1873. This was followed by boot manufactures at Leicester, in 1873, soap-making at Durham in 1874, and since then an extension to a great diversity of goods.

Losses have been sustained by both Wholesale Societies by investment in shares or loans with co-operative productive associations or with working-class joint stock companies. In 1873, an investment was made in a co-operative iron works at Glasgow. It collapsed with a loss to the S. C. W. S. of £10,000. The losses of the C. W. S. in various ventures amounted to £85,000, these being finally written off in 1878.

The acquisition of a transport fleet commenced with the chartering of the S. S. Plover, in 1875, to run between W. S. Pioneer was the first merchant vessel to reach the port of Manchester from overseas, at the opening of the Manchester ship canal in 1894. The C. W. S. took up shares to the amount of £20,000 in this project. The present strength of the C. W. S. fleet is four steam vessels and ten lighters.

C. W. S. Banking and Land Ownership.

Until 1876 co-operative banking was blocked by the law. The loan and deposit department opened in 1872, was transformed into the bank department by this 1876 amendment of the law. In 1924, the number of current accounts is as follows: Co-operative societies, 1,024; trade unions and friendly societies, 3,533; clubs and other mutual organisations, 3,264; individuals, 4,864—total, 17,469. In addition to the foregoing there are 332 deposit accounts of trade unions and friendly societies who do not require current accounts. There are 51 distributive co-operative societies not banking with the C. W. S.

From purchase of produce to the production of foodstuffs was a logical development. Up to 1871 societies were barred from holding and dealing freely in land but now, besides 50,000 acres of tea plantations in Southern India, Ceylon, and Assam, estates have been acquired in England, commencing with the purchase of the Roden estate, Salop, in 1896. The following diagram compares the total acreage owned with the total acreage of Great Britain and the "cultivable" acreage.

On a circular diagram not here reproduced, the central dot representing the co-op. estates has been enlarged 25 per cent to make it visible. This illustration gives some idea of the immensity of the task of winning the land for the people by this co-operative method. To give another illustration; the biggest cereal growing farm in Coldham, averaging about 4,000 quarters a year—thereby producing 5,000 sacks of flour in a total C. W. S. output of over 3,000,000 sacks a year. That is out of every 600 sacks of C. W. S. flour, the biggest C. W. S. wheat farm provides only one sack.

|---|---|
| Total acreage | 64,000,000 |
| Cultivable land | 32,000,000 |
| Co-op estates | 35,000 |

Fifty Years' Growth.

The growth of the C. W. S. is most strikingly illustrated by a contrast of the leading balance sheets:—

First C. W. S. Balance sheet, April 30th, 1864:

| | £ |
|---|---|
| Share Capital (50 soc. members) | 995 |
| Sales (6 weeks' working) | 5,982 |
| Fixed Stock | 58 |
| Stock in Trade | 340 |
| Reserve funds | — |
| Total Liabilities | 1,321 |

120th Balance Sheet,

December 22nd, 1923:

|---|---|
| Share Capital, (1,192 Society Members) | 5,673,245 |
| Sales (52 weeks' working) | 34,504,861 |
| Nominal value of Land, Buildings, etc. | 10,568,993 |
| Stock in Trade | 8,034,493 |
| Reserve, Depreciation, and Insurance Funds | 8,100,000 |
| Total Liabilities | 47,777,317 |

The C. W. S. is continually reiterating the need for more trade and loyalty from its membership, and that this is no new problem, is shown by an extract from the report for 1884:

"By referring to the accompanying balance sheet it will be seen that 50 societies have joined our federation; these societies represent a constituency of 17,545 members, and are doing an aggregate weekly business of £9,500. At least £5,000 of this sum is expended in the purchase of commodities in which we deal, yet we have only been favored with a business of £5,900 in seven weeks. How is this? Is it because the members of the various societies are opposed or indifferent to our new enterprise? That cannot be, as it is the creation of their own delegates, and they have also found the capital to enable it to operate. Is the fault of the committees? By no means, as they can have no interest in, allowing their capital to be frittered away in making good the deficience in our working expenses. Where the chief obstacle lies, therefore, is plain, and it is for the members of societies to say how long success shall be postponed. Many societies have already testified to the advantage they have derived from our operations. Still greater benefits are in store, if we are only true to ourselves, and are determined that the general interests of co-operation shall not be sacrificed to the prejudice or antagonism of individuals."

The English and Scottish Wholesales, in 1922, together had 1,465 society members, £31,655,477 in share and loan capital (£2,935,164 besides in reserve funds), employed 40,574 persons, paying £3,766,829 in wages, and sales for the year averages out at a little under 55 shillings per week, taking all employes, managerial as well as manual, into account. The Chairman of Directors of the C. W. S., who receive as salaries £722 10s. each per annum. An allowance is also made for expenses."

Quarterly meetings of the shareholding societies' delegates are held at the branches and at Balloon street, Manchester. In a supposedly democratic organization this question sometimes arises—has the private member of a shareholding distributive society any more direct control over the conduct of the C. W. S. than he has, say, over the control of the state? As a matter of fact democratic control of the wholesales is a mere name.

"It was something of a shock to see in the press a year or two ago that the late Mr. Robert Hall, Rochdale, formerly a C. W. S. director, left £25,[illegible] Shades of the Pioneers!

RED BEACH—A CO-OPERATIVE CAMP

By J. O. RANKIN.

CLEVELAND, O.—On June 15 my wife, baby and myself started for camp. After a ride of two hours east from Cleveland we reached one of nature's beauty spots on Lake Erie and here a sign told us that we were at the much talked of place called Red Beach. Here I headed the flivver right into the woods from which thru a cluster of trees the sandy beach was visible for miles. There were a lot of people in bathing and enjoying themselves as if they never had any worry of any kind. I started to make a wooden floor and screen door when one of the comrades in a tent near by asked us if we wanted a little help because he was a carpenter by trade. With his help it didn't take long before we had everything in order.

Next morning about six a neighbor and I went fishing to take in some lines he had put out the night before. In forty-five minutes we returned with a half bushel basket full of nice, fresh jumping fish. After taking all we can use for ourselves we always give the rest away to other comrades. Thru this system everybody always has all the fish that they can eat. This cuts down the grocery bill every week. The grocer, baker and milkmen come to the camp every day. We have installed city water; built two bath houses and one rowboat for common use.

Secure Lease.

This year we secured a three-year lease at $200 per season which we consider cheap for such a large and beautiful piece of lake frontage.

This season we had about forty tents with lots of room to spare. Both bath houses are heated every day during the season. The chopping of wood and other communal work is done on certain days decided on by the campers themselves. That day the men all go to work together until it is finished. This promotes the spirit of cooperation, working together for a common cause.

Own Pools.

This commune owns all the necessary tools such as saws, axes, hammers, washboiler, tubs, washboards, a lantern and a dozen pails.

The rules of the camp are made at a meeting of at least one delegate from every tent.

After dividing all expenses they amount to six dollars per tent per season. Just a mile away business men rent cottages for $250 and up per season.

Picnics.

About every two weeks some section of the Finnish Federation holds a picnic on our grounds. Then we sure have a good time. Of course all the campers help the city comrades all they can. Quite often the campers don't do any cooking for themselves because we can get food so cheap at the picnic.

Help To Party.

These picnics are usually run together with a Saturday night dance at a near-by town. All proceeds are used for party activity. These picnics are not only socially successful but sometimes we make as high as two hundred dollars on a picnic and dance.

Thru this system we do only help the party financially but keep it intact during the summer months.

About September the fifteenth, we pack up our tents and store them at a near-by farm ready again for the next campaign season.

The Daily Worker Must Be Saved

There is only one working class daily paper published in the English language in the United States and that is THE DAILY WORKER. This statement may be contested by those who are aware of the existence of the Milwaukee Leader and the Seattle Union Record, but even a cursory perusal of those sheets will convince the reader that they are no more proletarian in character than the Hearst press.

The Milwaukee Leader depends on advertising revenue for its existence, therefore it caters to the interests that provide the revenue, and its pages are doctored to appeal to the type of mind that demands sensationalism. Intimate stories of human frailties, rather than constructive news of working class efforts is the menu that the Milwaukee Leader lays before its clients. It is socialist in name, but in name only.

The Seattle Union Record has the Hearst press looking sick as a competitor in the business of serving up salacity to the public. It has lost every vestigae of its original labor character and contains no more labor news that the average capitalist newspaper.

THE DAILY WORKER, it must be admitted by friend and foe, has no other concern except to serve the working class movement. While it aims to interest the mass of workers it does not cater to the low levels of taste developed by the sensation mongering capitalist press.

Neither does THE DAILY WORKER depend on advertising for revenue. The business elements know that our paper is the enemy of everything they stand for. Even had our circulation reached the point where considerations of profits might outweigh anti-revolutionary prejudices it is doubtful if the merchants and manufacturers would subsidize THE DAILY WORKER by advertising. Even such a conservative labor paper as the London Daily Herald is practically boycotted by the big advertisers, outside of a nationally known firm that specializes in purging the population. The circulation of the Daily Herald is near half a million, which means that it is read by approximately 2,500,000. Yet, because it is a labor paper the business men are class conscious enough to give their advertising to papers that stand for the capitalist system.

THE DAILY WORKER depends for its support ENTIRELY on the working class. Subscriptions and donations are its visible means of support. The present campaign to raise $50,000 must go over the top if the American workers are to have a daily that will fight for them and give them a lead.

Rivera Is Sitting on a Tack

There is an old saying that liars can figure but that figures cannot lie. This is only a half truth. Figures in the hands of a capable liar can work wonders with the facts. Ask Primo de Rivera.

After a couple of revolts came near dynamiting Primo out of his dictatorial chair, the gentleman devised a way of giving his autocratic regime the color of legality. So he took a leaf out of the political text book of the United States and started a referendum, a novel one to be sure but a referendum, nevertheless.

Only those who favored Rivera's rule could vote. The opposition could attend the hull fight for all Rivera cared.

Almost seven million votes out of a possible total of thirteen millions cast their votes for the dictatorship. This looked pretty good to de Rivera. But no sooner were the votes counted than half a dozen healthy looking rebellions were reported and now King Alfonso is considering throwing up his job and taking a position with a salary attached as an attraction in one of the Greenwich Village freak restaurants.

To parody a once popular ditty, we ask de Rivera: "Why do you hurl those figures at us when they don't mean what they say?"

The Double Standard

Rumors are floating around Washington that the state department is considering taking advantage of the murder of a wealthy American capitalist by a bandit gang, to issue an ultimatum to the Mexican government demanding protection for American tourists.

Citizens of foreign countries are killed in the United States quite frequently and should a foreign government threaten the United States with reprisals because of those incidents considerable indignation would be registered by our editors, statesmen and near-statesmen.

At the time Jacob Rosenthal was kidnaped it was generally conceded that one of the main objects of the plot was to discredit the Calles administration, and to prove to the United States that the Mexican government was unable to guarantee life and property in the country.

Whatever may be the motive of the kidnapping, besides a desire on the part of a few bandits to get rich quick, the department of state will have to develop considerable ingenuity in order to be able to make a threatening attitude towards Mexico go down with the workers and farmers of the United States.

Rewarding the Lame

"Lame Duck" Lenroot of Wisconsin will be "taken care of" by President Coolidge, since the Wisconsin republican voters tied the can to him in the primaries. Lenroot was a loyal supporter of the Coolidge administration in the senate. He led the fight for the world court. So well did he succeed that the Wisconsin voters figured he would make a nice decoration for the political scrap heap.

The capitalist class usually reward their servants. If they did not do this the incentive to serve them would not be so tempting. "Progressives" who turn reactionary for a price might think several times about deserting their principles if they believed that an election defeat would leave them jobless as well as honorless.

Among the positions available to "Lame Duck" Lenroot are: a seat on a federal bench; the attorney generalship or a job as ambassador to a first class power. Outside of wounded pride and disappointed ambition Lenroot will not have any reason to curse the day he was born.

The C. P. S. U. and the Opposition Block

By N. BUCHARIN.

THE present controversy within the Communist Party of the Soviet Union is neither a sign—nor will it be the cause—of a retreat of the revolution. Quite the contrary. It is clear indication of its victorious onward march.

To give a clear understanding as well of the present problems of the Russian Revolution as also of the controversy over the solution of these problems, we are publishing herewith a report made by Comrade Bucharin at the functionaries' meeting of the Leningrad organization of the Communist Party. The report speaks for itself and needs no further elucidation. It is clear and convincing and answers the lies about the retreat of the Russian Revolution.

IN the present case: What is the number of undertakings yielding this profit of 319 to 586 million roubles? There are 323,645 such undertakings. If we assume that it costs about 80 roubles monthly to maintain a family (here of course I may be greatly in error, but it is an estimation which can be easily corrected on one side or the other), this means a sum of about 1,000 roubles yearly. Thus 323 million roubles are consumed, and these 323 millions of "consumed" roubles must be deducted from the 400 millions of the gross profits, if we are to reach the actual accumulation fund of the private capitalists. This sum cannot therefore be compared for a moment with those figures expressing the net profits of our industry. When we calculate the net profits of our industry, we reckon our accumulation fund only, that is, the sums which can be employed for further expanding industry; we do not calculate the costs of maintenance of the technical staff, of the requisite apparatus, etc. But as soon as private capital is concerned, then the accumulation fund, that is the net profit which can be employed for enlarging the undertaking, is merged in the gross profits. This one correction alone suffices to throw quite another light on the actual comparative forces.

I HAVE examined a large quantity of correspondence from the provinces on the growth of private capital in these different districts. In the Leningrad district (this is the one extreme) private capital has for instance been steadily retrogressing during the whole time, and its importance decreases from day to day. There are other parts of our union in which private capital has won further positions of late. The greatest strengthening of the position of private capital has taken place in Ukraine. But even here, where private capital has grown at the greatest speed, it has just reached the level of 1924, once more pressure upon it in 1923 having forced it to retreat. We have now loosened the reins again a little, so that private capital is beginning to press forward, and at the most dangerous point of its attack it has regained the level of 1924. Thus matters stand at present.

TURNING to our state economics, communal undertakings, and co-operatives, we find the net proceeds of our socialized economic enterprises to have been 1025 million roubles in the year 1924-25; in the economic year 1925-26 the sum will probably be 1536 millions (the final calculation is not yet finished, so I can only take the probable figure.) This is clear profit. Thus if we accept the most favorable estimate of the gains of private capitalists as calculated by Kutler, first correcting the amount in the manner described above, by deducting the amount of capital consumed by private capital from its net profits, then we shall see that our state economics are established on a firm basis, and give no cause of anxiety as to the future of our development towards a socialist state of society. I believe that the further progress of our economics is bound to strengthen our position.

WE must not forget that we have proved our maneuvering capacity in this sphere. A few years ago, quite a comparatively short time ago, we exercised pressure upon private capital, and began to supplant it with extraordinary rapidity; as soon as we saw that we had drawn the reins a little too tight, we loosened them again. It has been seen that we are able to do this. These repeated tactics for the control of private capital have shown clearly that our state power is fully able to regulate at will, and that, should actual danger arise from private capital, we can at once apply the lever of our credit system—as we have already done before—the lever of our railway transport, of our taxation apparatus, and of our whole economic apparatus, and thus rapidly push aside private capital if needs be.

THE existing relations of class forces shew us where to apply the necessary levers at any given moment. We see for instance that private capital has now turned its attention to the villages. This must stimulate us to strengthen our own position there. We see that only recently private capital was using our state credit to too great an extent. Here we had to apply pressure. We see that we can learn from private capital how to increase the rapidity of circulation, for we see that the means of private capital circulate much more quickly than our means in the more unwieldy and bureaucratic state institutions. Here pressure must be exercised to accelerate circulation. We see that private capital exploits the investor, especially the contractors with whom it deals, and attracts outside capital with the aid of a minimum of its own. We have not yet shown ourselves capable of doing this. We have not yet adequately exploited agricultural accumulation for the uplift of our industry and our co-operatives. Here it is again needful to draw the logical conclusions. That we must draw these conclusions is true, but it is quite wrong to say that private capital hangs over us like a threatening thunderclout. This is perfect nonsense.

A FEW words on the peasantry question. There are some comrades who imagine the differentiation among the peasants to have already reached such a point that the problem of the modern farmer practically admits no longer. Unfortunately, our statistics fail to give us the required information here. We have no figures showing the present differentiation, or its progress of late. Still I should like to make a general observation on a point which in my opinion can and must be accorded attention. If you look at any capitalist country, even a capitalist country developing with tempestuous rapidity on capitalist lines, we Marxists-Leninists recognize (and Lenin himself would have recognized) that the solid mass of the medium peasantry cannot be changed within a few years; it can be hollowed out by the current of capitalist development, but the process will be much slower here than in the industrial class, where the middle class, the medium city bourgeoisie, is forced out of existence much more quickly.

AND if this is the case in a capitalist country and under capitalist rule, where the whole mechanics of capitalist society drift forward at the speed prescribed by the maximum speed at which the middle peasantry is decomposed and the differentiation of the peasantry accomplished, it is much more the case in the union, where the nationalization of the land has rendered a rapid differentiation impossible in any case. Lenin emphasised this frequently. I may even refer to that speech of Lenin's which was recorded far the gramophone, and sent to all the villages and towns of the Soviet Union as one of the most important and popular speeches ever made by Lenin on the peasant question. This speech dealt directly with the nationalization of the land, and with the importance of the middle stratum of peasantry in connection with this. Thus, whatever may be asserted on the subject, we cannot conclude that any very great change has taken place with regard to the differentiation of the various strata of peasantry during the past wo years. It is impossible. (To Be Continued)

Urge All Aid to the British Coal Miners

Appeal of the Executive Committee of the Communist International to the workers of all countries.

WHEN the general council of the British Trade Union Congress throttled the general strike on the 12th of May, the British miners whose spirit had not been broken, declared, that they would continue the struggle. They have kept their word, and they are fighting on, altho they are opposed by a united front of the cunning British bourgeoisie and all its conscious and unconscious lackeys.

The last few weeks have shown themselves to be extremely critical for the striking miners. In order to defeat them the way was cleared for entry of the churchmen with their sweet speeches oozing with brotherlyness and love. The object of this cunning move on the part of the churchmen is clear. They wish to persuade the miners to accept the same program of wage reductions against which the miners have so stiently fought.

THE ruling class of Great Britain failed to break the miners in an open struggle. It was therefore the turn of the princes of the church to try their hand and to succeed with strategy where the government failed with force.

The leaders of the miners gave way. They recommended the miners to accept the memorandum of the bishops altho the latter is nothing but in attempt to break the united front of the miners. The miners themselves, however, have seen thru the swindle and given a clear and unmistakable answer to the temptations of the holy church, and to the attempts of their leaders to abandon their original program.

IN the meantime the general council of the Trade Union Congress and the whole Amsterdam International has maliciously and systematically preparing the defeat of the miners. The Amsterdam international cynically refused to make collections to support the families of the striking miners living as the reason that the general council had not requested any such collection.

The general council pursued fruitless negotiations for loans from the well-to-do sections of the Amsterdam international which did not shrink from demanding material security and usurious interests for the loans to assist the British miners. This is tha way the leaders of the Amsterdam trade unions interpret their duty of solidarity.

THE general council however, also put a condition for its participation in the campaign to support the miners, Soviet Labor Unions. The condition was that all its crimes committed against the British and the world proletariat be forgiven.

The representatives of the general council at the conference of the 30-31 of July demanded that the revolutionary unions of the U. S. S. R. withdraw their statement in which they published the truth concerning the treachary of the general council to the toilers of the world. Under these circumstances the miners' struggle has a more than ordinary importance.

THE British miners are the advance guard of the British proletariat and are defending the interests of the proletariat against the offensive of capital. It is the task of the British proletariat to assure the victory of the heroic miners at all cost.

They must see to it that the general council does not dare to break up the Anglo-Russian Committee which has been formed as a result of the determination of the workers of Great Britain and the Soviet Union to organize the struggle for trade union unity and against the offensive of capital. The committee was never more necessary to the workers and above all to the fighting miners, than it is today.

IT is the task of the British workers to force the general council and its delegation in the Anglo-Russian Unity Committee to participate in the campaign of support for the miners with all possible means.

Should the general council refuse to support the miners, it is necessary to demand them once again as traitors and to see to it that new members are put in the place of the old who who worthy to bear the name of representatives of the British workers in the general council of the British Trade Union Congress.

IT is the duty of the British working class and of the proletariat of all countries to support the British miners to the utmost and to save them from the blows of British capitalism and the conservative government which, in anticipation of its victory over the miners, is already preparing to attack the proletariat of other branches of industry.

THE support for the miners must be systematic and effective. "It must be made up of collections from the workers at the bench, of contributions from their wages. The fraternal support of the British miners by the working class of the Soviet Union must serve as an example to the workers of all other countries.

Apart from the organizational material support for the miners, it is necessary to proceed immediately to organize a boycott of all coal transports. The holding up of coal exports to Great Britain would represent a great triumph for the cause of international solidarity.

THE Communist International sends its warmest greetings to the British miners and calls upon all Communist Parties and upon all revolutionary workers all over the world to continue their work to support the miners with redoubled energy. The victory of the British miners made possible by a united action of the advance guard of the workers of all countries would be a guarantee for a fighting alliance of all proletarians against capitalism and imperialism.

Long live the struggle and victory of the British sailors!

Long live the support of the British sailors by the proletariat of all countries!

Long live the victory of the proletariat over the bourgeoisie!

Long live Communism!

BLESSINGS OF SEGREGATED SCHOOLS

By WM. PICKENS.

Arguments seem to count little with some people. But certainly facts ought to count with any sane man. Those who went to find out for certain just how blessed it is to Negro children and teachers to be in "their own" separate schools in the South, or elsewhere, should read the article in the September "Crisis" on the schools of Georgia. Georgia is a typical southern state; segregation well established there. Just let any Negro "leader" who is trying to lead his people into separate school systems in Ohio, Illinois, or anywhere else, read those facts and figures in the September "Crisis" and see what he is leading toward. Read those figures on page 253, or on any other page of that remarkable disclosure of facts, and see that the "separate" Negro schools in Georgia, where the colored people and children, nearly half the total population, get less than one dollar out of ten for their education.

The proportion is much worse still if the "Crisis" had counted the money paid to white school superintendents, supervisors and to other state and local administrators of the schools. All of these management and mismanagement salaries and expenses go to the whites.

Where there are segregated schools for Negroes, the Negro school gradually becomes school only in name—a sort of excuse to say to the outside world: "Yes, we have schools for the Negroes. The only reason why they are not up with the white people in intelligence and wealth is their natural inferiority, you see." They know that they are lying, and that in truth they are so robbing and limiting the Negro schools that even if blacks were superior by nature, they would still have to remain inferior in educational attainments. Where there are separate schools for Negroes, those Negroes enjoy just one equality in the school system: the equal right to pay the taxes for the support of the whole school system, and mainly to educate white people.

Ernst Haeckel on "Last Words on Evolution"

But the greatest blow was dealt at the predominant metaphysical conception of the life of the soul thirty years ago by the new methods of psychophysics. By means of a series of able experiments the physiologists, Theodor Fechner and Ernst Heinrich Weber of Leipsic, showed that an important part of the mental activity can be measured and expressed in mathematical formulae just as well as other physiological processes, such as muscular contractions. Thus the laws of physic control a part of the life of the soul just as absolutely as they do the phenomena of inorganic nature. It is true that psychophysics has only partially realised the very high expectations that were entertained in regard to its Monistic significance; but the fact remains that a part of the mental life is just as unconditionally ruled by physical laws as any other natural phenomena.

Thus physiological psychology was raised by psychophysics to the rank of a physical and, in principle, exact science. But it had already obtained solid foundations in other provinces of biology. Comparative psychology had traced connectedly the long gradation from mind to the higher animals, from these to the lower, and so on down to the very lowest. At the lowest stage it found those remarkable lower, invisible with the naked eye, that were discovered in stagnant water everywhere after the invention of the microscope (in the second half of the seventeenth century and called "infusoria." They were first accurately described and classified by Gottfried Ehrenberg, the famous Berlin microscopist. In 1838 he published a large and beautiful work, illustrating on 64 folio pages the whole realm of microscopic life; and this is still the base of all studies of the protists. Ehrenberg was a very ardent and imaginative observer, and succeeded in communicating his zeal for the study of microscopic organisms to his pupils. I still recall with pleasure the stimulating excursions that I made fifty years ago (in the summer of 1854) with my teacher Ehrenberg, and a few other pupils—including my student-friends Fardin and von Richthofen, the famous geographer—to the Zoological Gardens at Berlin. Equipped with fine nets and small glasses, we fished in the ponds of the Zoological Gardens and in the Spree, and caught thousands of lovis thite micro-organisms, which then richly rewarded our curiosity by the beautiful forms and mysterious movements they disclosed under the microscope.

The way in which Ehrenberg explained to us the nature and the vital movements of his infusoria was very curious. Misled by the comparison of the real infusoria with the microscopic but highly organized rotifers, he had formed the idea that all animals are alike advanced in organisation, and had indicated this erroneous theory in the very title of his work: The Infusoria as Perfect Organisms a Glance at the Deeper Life of Organic Nature. He thought he could detect in the simplest infusoria the same distinct organs as in the higher animals—stomach, heart, ovaries, kidneys, muscles, and nerves—and he interpreted their psychic life on the same peculiar principle of equally advanced organization.

Ehrenberg's theory of life was entirely wrong, and was radically destroyed in the hour of its birth (1838) by the cell-theory which was then first established, and to which he became reconciled. Once Matthias Schleiden had shown the composition of all the plants, tissues, and organs from microscopic cells, the last structural elements of the living organism, and Theodor Schwann had done the same for the animal body, the theory attained such an importance that Kolliker and Leydig based on it the modern science of tissues, or histology, and Virchow constructed his cellular pathology by applying it to diseased human beings. These are the most important advances of theoretical medicine. But it was still a long time before these microscopic beings in the cell was answered. Carl Theodor von Siebold had already maintained (in 1845) that the real infusoria and the closely related rhizopods were unicellular organisms, and had distinguished them as "protists" (1871), and defined their psychic functions as the "cell-soul."

Win Strike to Guard Union

SCRANTON, Pa.—(FP)—Failure of 5 men to show their union books caused a strike of 900 at the Gravity Slope colliery of the Hudson Coal Co. After 6 day's idleness it was announced that the matter had been adjusted. Such local strikes would not be necessary any local miners, if the union had the checkoff which automatically forces every man into the organization.

FIGHT ANTI-LABOR INJUNCTION

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

J. H. THOMAS, political secretary of the National Union of Railwaymen, England, and colonial secretary in His Majesty's government, under the premiership of Ramsay MacDonald, has just returned to England from a visit to Canada. Mr. Thomas did not open his mouth about the great miners' strike during his stay on this hemisphere—at least not publicly. And on his return, he was not interested in how the struggling coal diggers and their families were getting along. But he was happy to tell the imperialists that the Canadians were crazy about the empire and would never desert their glorious traditions, for the sake of affiliation with the United States.

THUS spoke Thomas, the man who once pretended to be a socialist, and still considered ooe, by American socialists. Thomas spoke too soon about the Canadian's love for the empire. The result of the Canadian elections prove otherwise. The liberal party of Canada plays up to a strong mass leaning for a rupture with the empire and a closer relationship with the United States. The interests of imperialism are closer to Thomas' heart than those of the British working class.

RUDYARD KIPLING has turned another chunk of literary offal loose on the public. Like most British poets (working-class poets excepted), Kipling is but a rhyming press agent for British imperialism. For many years back, his output only bears favorable comparison with that of an advertising agency. Kipling's memory will be honored for what he wrote before he became corrupted with the wages of popularity. In his latest book he versifies for the cancellation of the British war debt to the United States. This is about as low as the imagination can conceive a poet sinking to, unless he were to write come-on jingles for a hawky-bonse harker.

ANOTHER testimony to the wisdom of practical politicians! The Detroit Federation of Labor once paid lip service to the principle of independent working-class political action. Then it slipped and for the past few years has been operating as a political auxiliary to Mayor Smith. The federation officials had a rolling-out with the latter and they supported Governor Groesbeck in his campaign for renomination on the G. O. P. ticket while Mayor Smith supported Groesbeck's opponent.

GROESBECK was defeated and the capitalist politicians in Detroit can now tell the D. F. of L. that its influence on voters is nil and is not worth a dog catcher's job. Smith seems to have taken to himself the vote that formerly obeyed the direction of the labor council. And after Smith milked the federation dry he turned the cow loose on the highway. This is another testimony to the futility of non-partisan political action. Rewarding your friends and defeating your enemies. Bosh! The only practical politicians are the Communists who stick to the class program and avoid short-cuts that lead the workers in the capitalist corral.

Madeiros Gave Confession In Danger of Life

By ESTHER LOWELL.

Special to The Daily Worker.

DEDHAM, Mass., Sept. 16.—Celestino Madeiros took a great risk when, at the time he was appealing for a new trial after being sentenced to death for the murder of a Wrentham bank cashier, he confessed to participation in the South Braintree murder and robbery for which Sacco and Vanzetti have been unjustly convicted, was the opening argument of defense council in the hearing for a new trial for the two Italian workers.

The sanity of Madeiros has been granted by both the prosecution and defense. Madeiros said that when he saw Mrs. Sacco and her children visit the prison to see their husband and father, he "felt sorry for the kids," according to witnesses and made the confession, even at the risk of his own freedom. At the same time he refused to implicate others by his confession.

A summary of the details contained in the deposition taken of Madeiros' confession shows a marked similarity to the facts established by the defense about the crime at the original Sacco and Vanzetti trial.

Morelli Counsel Nervous.

Daniel Geary, counsel for the Morelli gang who faces murder charges for stealing freight cars and are the gang implicated in the South Braintree murder by the Madeiros confession, has refused to give Sacco, Vanzetti counsel confidential information "which might tend to incriminate my clients."

Defense Attorney Thompson takes this as acknowledgement of the guilt of the Morelli gang. During the taking of the deposition, Thompson said, it took three hours grilling to get Madeiros to admit that the Morelli gang was the group he was with in the South Braintree hold-up, altho, until the last, he tried to conceal their identity.

Federal Agents' Testimony.

In his argument today, Thompson stressed the uncontradicted testimony of the federal agents who told of the participation of the department of justice in the frame-up of Sacco and Vanzetti. "Who is a worse murderer," he said, "than the man who takes eight dollars a day from the government to try to convict two men he knows are innocent for murder for the benefit of a chief who wanted the nomination for president of the United States?"—probably meaning A. Mitchell Palmer, attorney-general at the time.

Attacks Former D. A.

Thompson also attacked former District Attorney Katzmen for allowing a radical speech by Sacco to be used in the trial. Thompson charges this was Katzman's share of a bargain with federal agents hoping Sacco would give information to be used against his friends.

The defense lawyer also took occasion to ridicule the witnesses of the state as crooks, pimps and common street walkers, incomparable to defense witness John Richards, former United States Marshal of Rhode Island, a reputable lawyer who prosecuted the Morellis.

STREATOR MEET DODGES ISSUE OF FARRINGTON

(Special to The Daily Worker)

STREATOR, Ill., Sept. 16.—Senator Caraway, who said some labor politicians in Illinois might have gotten some of the Insull slush fund given to Frank L. Smith, naming John H. Walker and Frank Farrington, was notified by wire that the State Federation of Labor, in convention here, "has faith" in Johnny Walker and resents Caraway's hint that Walker "got money for handling the labor vote."

"There is no labor vote in Illinois and the trade unionists cannot be handled," the convention declared. Some of the delegates thought that the senatorial slush fund committee, Senators Reed and LaFollette, did not do enough to help Walker get clear of the charge of corruption.

Harry Jensen and Edwin B. Wright, of the carpenters and printers respectively, brought in a committee resolution eulogizing Walker in the highest terms.

A measure is introduced backed by this sort of thing to increase the salary of Walker and Olander from $5,000 a year to $7,000.

Discussion on senatorial candidates is shut off by a motion to confine endorsement of candidates to state and local officers.

GOVERNMENT MOVES TO REINSTATE CONVICTIONS OF 25 CHICAGO LABOR UNIONISTS TRIED HERE IN 1921

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16.—An appeal will be taken to the supreme court this October to reinstate the convictions of 26 persons who were indicted in Chicago for alleged conspiracy between building trades unions and contractors, the department of justice announced today.

The indictments were returned in 1921 against the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners and manufacturers of millwork. In the trial in 1923, the carpenters were convicted and the manufacturers were acquitted. The second court of appeals reversed the convictions by upholding the carpenters' contention that there was no anti-trust law violation because interstate commerce was not involved.

Count Scialoja was unable to get a connection with Milan, after half an hour's attempt. He then made attempts to get in telephonic communication with Rome.

Lived with McLean and Jesse Smith

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—Morton D. Miller, a butler, was the first witness called today at the conspiracy trial in federal court of Harry M. Daugherty and Colonel Thomas W. Miller.

Daugherty, formerly attorney general of the United States, and Miller, formerly alien property custodian, are alleged by the government to have failed to give their best moral and mental efforts in approving a $7,000,000 claim of the German-controlled American Metals company—seized and sold during the war as alien property.

Worked For Daugherty and Smith.

Miller testified that he had been at one time employed by Edward B. McLean, Washington publisher, and that later, when Daugherty and his close friend, Jesse Smith, went to live in McLean's house in Washington, he was employed by them.

The witness said Daugherty and Smith moved into McLean's house at 1509 N. street, Washington, D. C., on March 5, 1921, and stayed there many months.

Jesse Paid Bills.

"I acted as butler for them," Miller testified. "They used Mr. McLean's private office and slept upstairs in his home. Mr. Daugherty using the front bedroom and Smith having a room in the back. While there Daugherty and Smith frequently went away over week-ends."

"Who paid the expenses run up by Daugherty and Smith while they were in McLean's house?" the prosecution asked.

"Jesse Smith," replied Miller.

Smith paid the bills by checks, he said.

"Did you ever see the check book," he was asked.

"Yes, it was on the Midland National Bank, Washington Courthouse, Ohio."

MINE STRIKE NEEDS URGENT, SAYS PURCELL

Quick Aid Vital; World Labor Must Assist

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BERLIN (By Mail).—The president of the International Federation of Trade Unions (Amsterdam), A. A. Purcell, who recently was in Berlin, made the following statement to a representative of the International Press Correspondence, who asked the aim of his visit:

Our journey to Berlin is a section of our program to obtain financial assistance for the British miners as quickly as possible, for both the Miners' Federation of Great Britain and the General Council are convinced that the coming month will see the culminating point in the struggle of the British miners. If the latter are able to hold out another three weeks theo they will win, altho the difficulties facing them are tremendous.

Uses Army to Break Strike.

The government has sent the army into the coal districts so that it can be used at any time against the miners. Not only the police have been mobilized en masses against the miners, but a special police force with mounted sections has been mobilized.

The magistrates are mostly representatives of the coal barons, who punish eod fling, to the most unheard of style, hundreds of miners into prison for crimes which are very often no crimes at all. In its merciless struggle against the miners the government even goes so far as to instruct the local authorities to cut or even abolish completely the support which the miners receive to feed their wives and children.

Over and above that, miners' families who, on account of their desperate situation, are unable to pay rent, are mercilessly evicted from their cottages. The fact that under such circumstances the miners have been able to hold out for 17 weeks in an iron front with only absolutely negligible break here and there, proves the heroic character of the struggle which is now going on.

The coming weeks will bring a decision and this decision will go in favor of the miners if the workers abroad do all they can to support their British comrades. It must be continually stressed that this struggle of the British miners is no purely British struggle, but a struggle the outcome of which will be of the greatest significance for the whole international working class.

Should the British mine owners be successful in forcing an increase of the working hours, then this will quickly make itself felt in the other countries where the employers will follow the British example and similarly demand an increase of the working hours.

Should the British mine owners be successful in abolishing the national agreement, then this would mean an attack upon agreements altogether. It would go so far that there would be no longer agreements for whole branches of industry, but for districts.

Let Us Keep the Daily Worker!

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

THE press is the most powerful single weapon of the working class. The DAILY WORKER is the weapon of the working class and the exploited farmers of America.

We have not learned yet how to use it to the best advantage but we will and the present campaign "to keep The DAILY WORKER" is testimony to our will to learn to wield this weapon hard and well.

THE working class of America is forced to struggle. It has to struggle whether it wants to of not. It is the task of The DAILY WORKER to give expression to the struggle, to rally the whole working class to the aid of the sections which are attacked, to expose the enemies of the workers—in and out of the labor movement—to teach the inevitability of struggle and prepare our class for it.

There are important struggles in progress in America now.

Three of them alone are enough to show the varied character of these struggles and the different sectors on which the battle rages:

1. The struggle to save Sacco and Vanzetti from the electric chair.

2. The strike of 15,000 textile workers in Passaic.

3. The struggle of the rank and file of the United Mine Workers of America to save the union in the face of the coal barons's offensive and to rid it of the deadening grip of the Lewis machine.

Do You Want To Fight For Your Class?

THEN here are three great struggles in which you can take part.

You do not need to be a miner to help defend the corrupt union leadership and save the union.

You do not need to be a textile worker to be able to take part in the Passaic strike.

You do not have to live in Massachusetts to help save Sacco and Vanzetti.

The DAILY WORKER is the only daily in the United States published in the English language which gives all the news of all these struggles and which puts forward the correct program for fighting and winning them.

Do You Want To Save Sacco And Vanzetti?

THEN HAVE THE DAILY WORKER SENT TO EVERY CITIZEN OF MASSACHUSETTS!

Send The DAILY WORKER a subscription and it will send the paper to a Massachusetts worker.

DO YOU WANT THE MINERS TO CLEAN OUT CORRUPTION IN THEIR UNION, DEFEAT JOHN L. LEWIS AND ORGANIZE THE NON-UNION FIELDS? Then subscribe for The DAILY WORKER for a coal miner. SEND IN A SUBSCRIPTION AND THE DAILY WORKER WILL BE SENT TO A MEMBER OF THE U. M. W. of A.

Make yourself a factor in this tremendous struggle.

DO YOU WANT THE PASSAIC STRIKERS TO WHIP THE TEXTILE BARONS, THEIR POLICE AND JUDGES, AND GET A WAGE INCREASE AND RECOGNITION OF THE UNION THEY HAVE WORKED AND FOUGHT NINE MONTHS TO BUILD?

Then have The DAILY WORKER sent to another worker who is not yet a reader of it.

IF you want to be part of all the struggles of our class this is the way it can be done. Let The DAILY WORKER speak for you to other workers and carry your fighting message to them.

"Keep The Daily Worker!"

Keep it in the forefront of the struggles of the whole American working class.

Strikers Will Defy Tyranny of N. Y. Courts

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—"Injunctions do not make cloaks," is the answer that Louis Hyman, chairman of the New York joint board of the Ladies' Garment Workers' Union and leader of the strike of 40,000 cloakmakers, gives to the sweeping temporary writ handed down by Supreme Court Justice Charles M. Cuy against the union and in behalf of the Industrial Council of Cloak, Suit and Skirt Manufacturers, Inc.

"Sooner or later," continued Hyman, "the manufacturers will have to come to terms with the union. Every effort that they make to delay the final settlement will redound to their own disadvantage. They can get the workers back into their shops not only by conceding to their workers their just demands."

The writ is so sweeping that even prostrike articles in the union journal might lead to arrests if it were fully enforced. Virtually all strike activities are prohibited.

Will Defy Court Tyranny.

The talk in union circles is that the union will stand on the constitutional rights of its members and go about its business as before if the court attempts to affirm the temporary order.

800 Arrests in One Day.

Nearly six hundred arrests were made the morning after the injunction, pickets and strikers generally being swept up on the sidewalks by police. But city magistrates discharged 540 of these, fining the rest $3 each. He would not consider injunction violation charges, holding that the individual unionists were personally served with copies of the writ they could not be held under it.

SMITH RESIGNS AS CHAIRMAN OF COMMERCE BODY

(Worker Correspondent)

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Sept. 16.—Gov Len Small today accepted the resignation of Col. Frank L. Smith of Dwight, as chairman of the Illinois Commerce Commision and candidate for the United States senate."

In his letter accepting Smith's resignation, the governor states that he does not feel justified in asking him to reconsider his action, understanding that he will need all of his strength for the coming campaign. Smith recently underwent a major surgical operation.

In his letter the governor praises the administration of affairs of the commission under Smith's chairmanship.

BRITISH MAKE READY TO WAR UPON CHINESE

SHANGHAI, Sept. 16.—A strong British force prepared for a punitive expedition against the Chinese under General Yang-sse in Szechwen province, where the battle took place recently and two ships of British ownership are being held for damages, is waiting at Hankow for instructions from London.

Anti-British Feeling High.

Meanwhile Rear Admiral John Ewen Cameron has gone up the Yangtze to Ichwang, with a view to conferring with Yang-sse, who says he is willing to hand over the two steamers. As a result of the British massacre of 5,000 in the Wanhsien clash, however, the Chinese throout Szechwen province are advocating a boycott against the British. Anti-British feeling is running high at Chungking.

Cantonese Consolidate Position.

In the Hankow region the Cantonese are moving south and east to expel Sun Chuan-fang's troops from Kiangsi province. Wu Pei-fu is quiet and has again sent the column he promised against the Cantonese at Changsa. The Cantonese are moving along the Peking-Hankow railway with the purpose of capturing and holding the Wu Shen-kuan pass near the Hena border to prevent Wu's counter-attack on Hankow.

In the north there are reports of wide revolt among the troops of Chang Tso-lin. One of Chang's generals with 10,000 troops have mutioned and are holding Kalgan against a force sent there by Chao's son. Fierce fighting between the mutineers and young Chang's troops is rumored and a seditious spirit among all his troops is worrying the Manchurian militarist.

...PARTISANISM ...F DETROIT LABOR OFFICIALS FAILS

Crossbeck Defeat Bares Shady Deals

Governor Crossbeck went down to ignominious defeat in the primary election today and with him crashed the galley of class-collaboration which, under the leadership of Frank Martel, the Detroit Federation of Labor has been pursuing for some years.

Altho the Detroit labor movement was strong for independent political action in 1920, even running a candidate for governor, the results were too slow for those in control who felt that it was more expedient to sell the labor movement than to build it politically.

The first horse trading was in local offices, judgeships and petty appointive positions in which Martel demonstrated the practicability of the policy sufficiently to crush any opposition.

Second Venture.

The next venture was in the support of Postmaster Smith for Mayor of Detroit. The labor movement outdid itself in fawning before this capitalist politician, the district council of the carpenters even adjourning its meeting to attend a rally in his behalf. However, the leaders had lost all shame by now and any arguments on working class principles and decency were either automatically suppressed or given "practical" answers.

This period witnessed the spectacle of Dennis E. Batt, the self-appointed representative of the Communist International, winning on the republican ballot in the primaries and coming in 34th—a slight slip-up of practicability.

"Practical Politics."

In this period also Dennis E. Batt and John T. Taylor, a former socialist, as delegates to the Michigan Federation of Labor supported a motion to recommend raising the salary of the governor to $15,000 per year while they approved a maximum of $36 per week compensation for the injured workers and defended such treachery on the floor of the Detroit Federation of Labor.

During the last few months a struggle between the jitney drivers and the city has found Martel as ever ready to champion the cause of petty owners with the result that he has had a sharp break with the street carmen's organization and with Mayor Smith. This development seriously weakened the position of Martel and he bet all his chips on Crossbeck and a support of the jitneys hoping to humble Mayor Smith and pay his henchmen with patronage which Crossbeck might swing his way.

The returns of today constitute a "practical" repudiation of everything that Martel's policy includes. The labor movement is bitterly divided over issues which should never confront it and the consciousness of the workers is decidedly below what it was in 1920 after the first farmer-labor campaign.

But the consequences of this policy extend much further. Petty political influence shields many shady actions and the political "prestige" of Martel et al has aided "allies" to run blind pigs and gambling dens in and near the labor halls including one in the official home of the Detroit Federation of Labor. Martel has been censured by a friendly judge for attempting to use influence in other than labor cases.

The organization policy of the Detroit Federation of Labor has not escaped the blight of this mistaken policy either. Instead of initiating a policy of organizing the workers in the basic industries where, as the experience of Passaic indicates, the forces of the state, police, judges, state constabulary, etc., must be openly fought, Martel has chosen to center his efforts on master barbers, hand laundry owners, cleaners and dyers, waitresses, etc., where slippery tactics pass as methods of class struggle.

Martel's power and policy rests upon the least important and least basic of the workers. He knows that even the active participation of even the few workers of the more basic industries now organized would send him into a deserved oblivion.

Martel works like those whom he ousted, to feather his nest and prepare a political roost when the workers get wise to him. The needs of the workers will only become the basis of the Federation policy when Martel joins Crossbeck on the scrap heap.

Martel's role is the same as Farrington's except that the workers do not recognize scabbing on the political field as readily at present. When they do Martel will take his pay openly and direct.

MEXICAN TROOPS AMBUSHED WHILE PURSUING YAQUIS

Jail Catholic Bishop for Fighting Laws

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 16.—Reports from the state of Sonora say that the Yaqui Indians have ambushed a battalion of pursuing Mexican infantry near the village of Vicam, killing many troops and forcing the remainder to retreat. The Yaquis are supposed to have been incited by catholic opponents to the Calles government.

Bishop Issues Illegal Leaflet.

A catholic bishop, Jesus Mario Echeverria, has been sent from the state of Coahuila to Mexico City under arrest for publishing a leaflet forbidding catholic children to attend the government schools.

The catholics are holding religious ceremonies in homes, as take the place of church services, the priests continuing their strike against services in the churches. Priests are hearing confessions in private homes and collecting fees for these and other services outside the churches.

Government After Bandits.

The government troops are still in pursuit of the bandits who on September 12 held up an automobile party of Americans at Cuernavaca and kidnapped Jacob Rosenthal, 62, a retired merchant of Long Island, N. Y. He is being held for ransom, and fears are felt that because of his age and exposure he may be ill. The kidnappers also threaten to kill the captive if pursued.

PARRY, VICTIM OF FARRINGTON, APPEALS CASE

Demands Reinstatement; Flays Traitor

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Sept. 16.—Thomas Parry, former vice-president of Sub-district No. 6 of the Illinois Miners' Union, who was expelled from the U. M. W. of A. for six months for alleged slander of Frank Farrington, deposed president of the union, district executive board and was inexecutive board demanding reinstatement to his former office.

Expelled by Illegal Court.

Parry states that he was expelled from the union for six months by an illegal court without being given a chance to defend himself. Farrington supervised the trial which convicted Parry without permitting the latter to be present.

Parry appealed the expulsion to the district executive board and was instructed by Secretary-treasurer Nesbit to make his appeal to board member Young, despite the precedent set by the board in acting on similar cases without taking the position that they should go to a board member.

From Peter to Paul.

Parry wrote to Nesbit asking the latter to file his appeal. Nesbit replied, advising Parry to file his appeal with board member Haywood. But when Parry's appeal reached Haywood, it was declared the time limit for such action had expired by 24 hours.

"In view of the recent developments in which Farrington has been caught with the goods" writes Parry "and exposed as a 100 per cent traitor to the workingclass in general, the board should recognize that my removal from office was at the dictates of the coal operators."

Old Trade Union Member.

Parry carried a card in the British Miners' Federation for a few years, in the Provincial Workman's Association of Canada for two years and in the U. M. W. of A. for 19 years.

"My membership has never lapsed a day," he says, "until I was expelled for slandering Farrington, the arch enemy of the miners and co-worker of the operators."

For Progressive Program.

Parry stands for the progressive miners' program: a shorter workday nationalization of the decrepit management of the mines, in short "The Mines For the Miners." Amalgamation on the industrial field and a Labor Party on the political field.

Parry was forced out of the coal mining industry by Farrington and was obliged to leave the district to earn a living. He now lives in Highland Park, Mich.

The proclamation was issued effective today and will remain in force until order has been restored. The embargo is aimed to help the reactionary Chamorro regime.

...RT, SUICIDE AND HYSTERIA FOLLOW AIMEE

Stirs Christians to a Fanatic Fury

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 16.—Dr. R. W. Waters, implicated by the confession of Mrs. Lorraine Wiseman in her impersonation of Aimee Semple McPherson to furnish an alibi against the charge that the evangelist had spent ten days in a love nyree at a beach cottage at Carmel instead of being "kidnapped," as she had claimed after her disappearance, has committed suicide.

Dr. Waters took poison following the revelation made by Mrs. Wiseman that he had aided in producing an alibi for Aimee McPherson.

Faithful Stage a Riot.

Meanwhile the 35,000 followers of the female evangelist were stirred up to the point of rioting by her dramatic pulpiteering at the Angelus temple.

"They are pounding me to my grave," she declared as she entered the pulpit. This and similar emotional appeals so roused her fanatic followers that the milling thousands which filled the church to overflowing and pressed around the building seemed on a point of riot thru religious hysteria.

Christians and Shotguns.

The police were called out to guard against riot, squads of detectives and deputy sheriffs armed with shotguns having trouble to reach the temple ground which for blocks the streets were packed with excited people. The police did not arrest Aimee, tho she stirred up the congregation with the sentimental appeal that she "expected to be arrested at any moment." The crowd finally dispersed when it saw that nobody was going to arrest the woman.

Another development of the day was the deposition of a Miss Morris, private secretary of the late R. A. McKinley, a lawyer connected with Mrs McPherson. Miss Morris tells of arrangements sought to have been made to produce men who could be claimed to be the "kidnappers," who would be immune from prosecution because Aimee would not prosecute them. Aimee also wanted a shack produced to serve as the place where she was supposed to have been held by the "kidnappers."

Mysterious Shack Sought.

"Mrs. McPherson said I must be sure that it had not been occupied for a long time. She said she would hate for them to produce a shack and find out afterwards that a family with ten kids had lived in it during the time she was supposed to be a captive there."

Complaints against five persons in the case, including Kenneth G. Ormiston, the alleged lover of Aimee in her escapade, are being drawn up by the district attorney.

Ormiston Seeks Immunity.

At the same time the attorney for Mrs. Wiseman says he has been approached by a "mystery man" who offers to produce Ormiston within a few hours if Ormiston is given the privilege of immunity. Ormiston may be liable on a charge of perjury for making an affidavit saying Mrs. McPherson was not the woman who shared his embraces at the cottage by the sea.

The convocation of the seventh assembly of the league of nations, shown above, finds the league less united than when it was founded. # Communists Are Striving to Put Toledo, Ohio, on Map for Working Class

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

TOLEDO, Ohio—(By Mail)—When the traveler steps off his train here at the New York Central Station he is greeted by an unusual broadside of billboards. The loudest hiero comes from one display declaring this to be:

"Toledo—The Home of Overland and Willys-Knight."

It is taken for granted that everyone knows that "Overland" and "Willys-Knight" are the names of two makes of automobiles, just as the names Valentino, Dempsey, "Trudie" Ederle and "Babe" Ruth are supposed to be recognized without any additional description.

Elsewhere over the city one finds other displays proclaiming "Big Price Reductions" in these same makes of automobiles.

Henry Ford, in his alleged autobiography, declares that the only time he eats tea price of his flivvers is when business is slack and he wants to encourage buyers, so that he can keep his flivver factories going. It helps cheapen to continue running at a small loss than to close down completely. So I concluded that the advertisements proclaiming big price reductions for the Overland and the Willys-Knight cars meant that business was not good here in Toledo. This was borne out by the facts.

It found that where 15,000 workers are usually employed turning out the Overland and Willys-Knight machines, only about half that number are now on the job, with some departments knocking off work at three o'clock in the afternoon.

It was between three and six o'clock toward evening when I arrived in Toledo. There were no rushing homeward throngs. No crowds pouring out of the office buildings. It was easy to get a seat in the street cars. The stores were almost empty. Business isn't good in Toledo.

The water isn't deep in the Maumee River and the Maumee Bay into which it flows. If it had been deep the story of Toledo might have been different. It might have been a great metropolis like Cleveland, not far away, like Buffalo, at the other end of Lake Erie, or Detroit, to the north, that harbor the great freight ships of the inland seas. But the river is shallow and the government refuses to deepen it, with the result that the population, the alleged lover of Aimee in her escapade, are being drawn up by the district attorney.

Ormiston Seeks Immunity.

At the same time the attorney for Mrs. Wiseman says he has been approached by a "mystery man" who offers to produce Ormiston within a few hours if Ormiston is given the privilege of immunity. Ormiston may be liable on a charge of perjury for making an affidavit saying Mrs. McPherson was not the woman who shared his embraces at the cottage by the sea.

It was in 1794, some years after the revolutionary war, that General "Mad Anthony" Wayne was fighting the Indians here at the shores of Lake Erie. He came to the mouth of Swan Creek and the Maumee River where he ordered the building of a fort. This was built so rapidly that he called it "Fort Industry," an indication of what was expected from Toledo workers in the century ahead. One of the aids of "Mad Anthony" was Lieutenant William Henry Harrison, later to become the ninth president of the United States.

Toledo was successively under the colonial rule of Spain, France and Great Britain, and when it became a part of the United States, the states of Ohio, Michigan and Indiana, not yet a part of a consolidated federal government, fought for it. Michigan finally got the rich iron and copper ore territory of its northern peninsula while Toledo went to Ohio and the dove of peace settled over the great lakes.

Toledo is named after the famous Castillian capitol of the same name on the other side of the Atlantic. But it bears no resemblance to Toledo, Spain. By 1846 its population had grown to only 2,000, altho this was an advance over the fewer than 100 that it had ten years before in 1836. It does not boast of any role that it played in the civil war, just as the war in 1812, between the United States and Great Britain, that witnessed some important battles on Lake Erie, passed it by.

A brick plant was one of its first boasts. Then came a saw mill, later a foundry, in 1835 a grist mill, and in 1855, the first car works. When the bicycle was in favor, however, Toledo began getting on the international map, claiming to have sent this product of its shops "over the seven seas." The bicycle business later grew into the manufacture of the Pope-Toledo automobile that held the stage for a time. When the Pope-Toledo corporation failed it was taken over by John N. Willys, called "one of the geniuses of the automobile world." Willys is now trying to keep Toledo on the map as the home of his Overland and Willys-Knight.

The glare of publicity was turned on Toledo for a time when it came under the rule of "Golden Rule" Samuel M. Jones as mayor. "Golden Rule" Jones failed to be elected as governor of Ohio and then he died in his fourth term, in 1904, and now he is forgotten.

During the war, after he had been ousted from the University of Pennsylvania for writing "Anthracite," an attack on the hard coal industry, Scott Nearing came this way to teach at the allegedly liberal University of Toledo. But he was no more fortunate here. He was soon ousted from this university also because of his unorthodox views.

But the spirit of unrest flames anew. This fall the Workers (Communist) Party has a congressional candidate in the field, Bruce T. Smith, a railroad worker, is the Communist standard bearer. The local election commissioners are trying to find some excuse for ruling him off the ballot. So far they have not succeeded. The workers, according to present indications, will have an opportunity to vote for him.

This is the fifth (Ohio) congressional district that kept Isaac R. Sherwood, the civil war veteran who opposed participation by this nation in the war, in congress for a number of years. The present congressman is W. W. Chalmers, republican, unheard of, and therefore the best tool of the predatory interests.

The labor unions in Toledo are not active, their meetings are featured by small attendances. All semblance of any socialist party organization has disappeared.

It is in this environment that the Workers (Communist) Party calls to the workers to make new and greater efforts. Several mass meetings with representative party speakers will be held in the weeks ahead. There will be an increased distribution of literature. New members will be brought into the party and present party members stirred to action. The Workers (Communist) Party will put Toledo, Ohio, on the map again.

CHICAGO LABOR GREETS RELEASED I. L. G. W. PICKETS

Tomorrow night a reception is being given at the Waiaha Hall, corner Noble and Emma, to those members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union that were thrown into jail by "Injunction Judge" Denis E. Sullivan for their participation in the 1924 garment strike.

The reception has been arranged by a joint committee of the Polish locals of the Machinists' Union, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, the International Ladies' Garment Workers' union, carpenters' union, painters' union, the carmen's union and the Polish Workers' Educational Club, which initiated the arranging of this reception.

The reception starts at 8 in the evening. Besides dancing there will be solo and choir signing, violin solos and addresses by the strikers and the representatives of the organizations that united to make this affair possible.

Tickets are being sold at 75 cents each. All profits from the affair are to be turned over to the Chicago Conference for Passaic Textile Strikers' Relief, which has its headquarters at 128 West Van Buren street. All workers are urged to attend this affair.

J. Louis Engdahl to Speak in Detroit on Tuesday Evening

DETROIT, Mich., Sept. 16.—J. Louis Engdahl, editor of The DAILY WORKER, will speak on "The Workers and the Old Parties" Tuesday evening Sept. 21 at the Finnish Labor Temple, 5949 Fourteenth St. near McGraw.

This will be an especially interesting talk after the defeat of the so-called "Labor Ticket" at the primaries.

The Detroit Federation of Labor shamelessly endorsed a batch of republican party politicians and labelled them "The Labor Ticket." The workers of Detroit failed to respond to a fake "Labor ticket."

The Workers (Communist) Party campaign calls on all honest workers who stand for a labor party and the labor ticket to register their protest against the political alliances of the Detroit Federation of Labor and the republican party.

The Workers (Communist) Party its campaign for a labor party invited the Detroit Federation of Labor to initiate a conference to launch a United Labor Ticket. The Detroit Federation of Labor sneeringly ignored this invitation. During the coming election campaign the Workers (Communist) Party calls on the workers of Detroit and the state of Michigan to support its candidates as a demonstration of

OHIO MINERS DISPLAY GRIM DETERMINATION

$7.50 a Day or Nothing Is Slogan

NOTE—This article on Ohio mining conditions is the second of a comprehensive series by various labor writers released by The Federated Press in the next few weeks, dealing with the actual situation in the various districts of the United Mine Workers. Frank Farrington's sell-out in Illinois, the many Lewis betrayals, the open shop inroads in other bituminous districts and the uncertainty as to what is to follow the expiration of the 3-year Jacksonville agreement in April, 1927 make the series both timely and important.

By HARVEY O'CONNOR, Fed. Press.

BELLAIRE, O.—(FP)—"$7.50 a day or nothing." That summarizes the bulldog determination of 17,000 union miners in the Bellaire subdistrict of the Ohio River district. Known as Sub-District 5 of District 6, they are by far the strongest unit in the state, and comparatively better off than their brothers in Hocking valley, 6,000 are working.

"Why should a miner work in the damp dark of a deep mine, surrounded by the dangers of rock falls and explosions, for less than $7.50 a day, the Jacksonville scale?" they ask. "We'll quit mining before we'll throw away the union and its protection."

Low Wage Nearby.

There's another good reason why the miners won't quit their union. That is West Virginia. Just across the Ohio river, at Wheeling, Warwood, Wellsburg, Moundsville and Benwood, a score of big West Virginia mines are operating at wages varying from $4 to $6 a day.

The silvery line of the river, cleaving union Ohio from nonunion West Virginia, is the trench between warring forces in the biggest battle being waged on the American continent for industrial freedom. Mine owners, with heavy interests on both sides of the river, are anxiously awaiting the day when they can bring Ohio men down to the low wage levels and working conditions suffered by the serfs across the river.

Many of the 9,000 union miners who have been unable to get work at the pits have found employment in the steel mills of Bellaire, Wheeling and Benwood and in other industries in this thickly populated section of the Ohio valley.

Tension has also been relieved by the recent opening of several big mines on the Jacksonville scale. The Powhatan mine, employing 500 men, is operating steadily for the Canadian Pacific railway, while several big Stacher mines supplying the Canadian National railroad are operating up to 1,300 miners. The Hill & River Company's mines, whose management has been distinctly antagonistic to the union, are down. Pittsburgh Coal Co., leader of the bitter forces among the operators, and notorious for nonunion operations in Pomeroy Bend, Ohio, and in West Virginia, posted notice of reopening under the 1917 scale, but not a man responded. Youghiogheny & Ohio, whose president, S. H. Robbins, heads the new Ohio Coal Operators Assn., organized to bent down the Ohio Miners union, has tried nonunion conditions, but to no avail.

Destitution Threatens.

Many miners in the score of camps around Bellaire own their homes. With vegetables and fruits in their back yards, they do not experience keen privation in summer months, even if unable to find work in the steel mills. When winter comes a different picture will present itself, and should the steel industry experience a slump destitution aplenty will dog the little homes of thousands of the coal diggers.

The lucky miner who happens to be working is knocking out about $100 a month, of which about 8% goes into various union funds for dues and relief. This average, however, lumps the man who are working 6 days a week and those working but 1. Thousands are receiving not more than $50 a month, while at least 1,500 in this vicinity have no work of any kind.

When Contracts Expire.

The unbitterest is hinged up by long contracts with the Canadian railroads, but when they run out and are shifted to West Virginia—as may happen—Bellaire's plight may become as bad as Hocking valley's.

These miners have given generously to Russian famine relief, to the Passaic strikers, to the British miners. When the present British coal lockout is settled and the demand for American coal lulls, they may find themselves fighting with their backs to the wall against the sinister hand of nonunionism, watchfully waiting to leap over from the West Virginia side of the Ohio river to extend industrial feudalism. Then they will need the vigorous support of American labor if unionism is to be saved along this Ohio.

CHICAGO—(FP)—The first instalment of $5,000 is on its way to New York from the Chicago Joint board, Int. Ladies Garment Workers union. It will be used in the bitter strike of the New York needle trades for better wages

BIG COLONIAL MEET SLATED FOR BRUSSELS

Congress Will Organize United Struggle

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BERLIN, Sept. 16.—A gigantic step is about to be taken in the world-wide upsurge of the colonial peoples. This is the first world congress against the suppression of colonial and semi-colonial peoples which will meet at Brussels, Belgium, about the middle of next November.

The call for the congress is issued by the International League Against Colonial Suppression, with headquarters at Prorussentrale, Berlin, Germany. The provisional committee for the congress includes Henri Barbusse (France), Martin Anderson Nexo (Denmark), George Ledebour (Germany) and Prof. Koo Meng Yu (China). This committee asks all nationalist and anti-imperialist organizations as well as those determined to stamp out colonial cruelties and suppression in general, to send delegates to the forthcoming congress. Cables announcing participation have already been received from the Kuomintang party of China, the Korean nationalist party, the young India movement and the independence movement of Java, Dutch East Indies.

Lansbury and Fimmen Attend.

The congress at Brussels will take up all of the problems of imperialism, considering in detail specific cases of brutalities in the colonies and suppression of liberties. It will also consider the question of emancipation of the colonies and semi-colonies from imperialist rule. Special reports under this latter head will be made by George Lansbury, M. P. of Great Britain, and Edo Fimmen, general secretary of the International Transport Workers' Federation.

Following is the communication in full sent out by the International League Against Colonial Suppression, announcing the agenda of the congress:

Dear Sirs:

The organizing committee for the congress "Against Colonial Suppression" has received in the course of the last months a large number of important endorsements from leading organizations of the colonial and semi-colonial countries. During the last week we have received many telegrams requesting that the conference take place in this year. Acting upon these requests, the committee decided that the conference should be held in the middle of November. The place is Brussels and the exact date, etc., will be communicated in due time.

On the basis of the propositions, motions, etc., received up to date the organizing committee has decided upon the following tentative agenda:

1. Report on Imperialist Suppression in the Colonies. Speakers will be representatives of the different countries.

2. Emancipation Movements in the Colonial and Semi-Colonial Countries and Support by the Labor Movements of Imperialist Countries. Provisional speakers, Edo Fimmen, general secretary of the Transport Workers' Federation; George Lansbury, M. P., Great Britain.

3. The Co-ordination of the National Emancipation Movements with the Social Struggles in the Colonial Countries.

4. Development of the League Against Suppression to a Great International Organization for the Support of the Emancipation Movements in the Colonial and Semi-Colonial Countries.

The provisional committee asks you:

(a) To communicate to us immediately the size of the delegation you intend to send to the congress in Brussels. Costs of the delegation must be covered by your organization.

(b) To submit to us your propositions for the agenda and to communicate to us the names of your representatives and the points of the agenda under which they intend to speak.

(c) To send us a written report, informing us about your organization. This should be sent not later than the middle of September, in order to enable us to translate and mimeograph it for the congress.

Trusting you will be in agreement with the date selected for the congress and that you will transmit to us the requested information at your earliest convenience, we remain, dear sirs,

Yours very truly,
International League Against Colonial Suppression.
J. Brach, Secretary.

CHINESE BOSSES TRY COMPANY UNION PLAN; LABOR KILLS ATTEMPT

CANTON, China — (FP) — That China is becoming rapidly civilized and modernized in the American sense is seen again in the organization in the industrial centers of up-to-date company unions on approved western lines.

After a strike by the genuine shoe workers' unions in Canton in 1924 which failed to win higher wages the company organized the Shoe Trade Capital & Labor union, composed of strikebreakers, stoolpigeons and bosses which introduced the open shop and beat up members of the bona fide union.

The revolutionary Canton government, through its labor department, ordered the fake union to dissolve, whereupon it adopted another Americean dodge and reorganized as the Shoemakers union. This is now under scrutiny by the authorities.

CHINESE LABOR FIGHTS TO BETTER ITS CONDITIONS

Strikes Taking Place All Over Country

By GEOFFREY C. CHEN.

PEKIN, China—(FP)—There is a direct relation between industrial strikes and industrial development; where you find cities industrially and commercially more developed, there you find more strikes. During the last eight years 9 Chinese cities have had more strikes than all the rest: Shanghai 370, Hankow 37, Soochow 29, Pekin 20, Chinkiang 18, Canton 17, Wuhu 10, Tsingtau 8, Hongkong 6.

Three important causes can be definitely traced: economic pressure, maltreatment, and mass movement. During the last 8 years, aside from the May 1925 strikes at Shanghai and elsewhere, there have been 536 industrial strikes. Of these about 330 have been caused by economic pressure; 58.61% of the total. Counting the May 30 strikes, there have been 695 strikes, 331 of which have been caused by economic pressure, 47.42%. In all the 8 years, strikes protesting maltreatment numbered 110, 19.64%. Forty-four strikes originated from mass movement or popular demonstration, 7.81% of the total. Only 88 times during the 8 years have strikes been settled by simple and short negotiations between the employers and the workers. There have been two usual ways of settlement; settlement by the representatives of both parties and settlement by the intervention of a third party. In all the 8 years, 85 have been settled by the first method. The intervention takes various forms: 25 by the local government, 49 by guilds and unions, 33 by individuals.

If we exclude the May 30 strikes, we can count 439 strikes or 59.27% of the total strikes each year; semi-successful strikes 6.39%, unsuccessful 7.11%; and doubtful 26.23%.

Only since 1921 have there been demands for the right to organize or for the right to strike. Each strike on the average has involved 3,612.22 workers.

During the last 8 years, the most numerous strikes occurred in the industries directly or indirectly connected with clothing. Next in number are the strikes of communication workers. The factory which has had the most numerous strikes during the last 8 years is the Japanese cotton factory of Shanghai where 15 strikes have taken place. The anti-Japanese sentiment of the workers, the comparatively strong organization among them, and the growth of class consciousness have contributed towards the real causes of strikes in this factory.

PROGRESSIVES CHEER RESIGNATION OF HAMILTON FYFE AS EDITOR OF THE LONDON DAILY HERALD

By Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON — (By Mail) — Hamilton Fyfe has resigned as editor of the London Daily Herald, Labor's daily newspaper, and the progressives in the trade union movement are glad. The British workers are sincerely sorry that Fyfe ever left the Daily Mail and they hope he will never return to help the employers on a labor paper.

A day or two before Fyfe quit the Herald he was compelled to receive an unwelcome visit from the miners' delegates who were exasperated over an attack on the miners in the previous day's issue of the Herald. At first Fyfe refused to see the miners but the latter did not stand on ceremony but passed all opposition and bearded the gentleman in his sanctum.

Fyfe Was Indignant.

M. Fyfe told the miners that he did not give a damn for what they said or thot as he was leaving the Herald for good in a few days. No doubt Mr. Fyfe like many other disappointed bourgeois saviors of the workingclass who step down from above to free the masses will feel that his sacrifices have not been fully appreciated.

It seems incomprehensible but true that Fyfe published an advertisement from the coal operators in labor's official daily while the same paper carried vicious attacks on Cook and Smith, leaders of an organization that was helping to subsidize the Herald.

Why The Silence.

The editorial attack which angered the miners was in reply to an inquiry from a railroad worker who was anxious to know why the T. U. C. leaders were silent on the reasons for calling off the general strike. This worker who was a railroad employe for 22 years declared that he and his fellow workers were regarded as "blacklegs" by the miners for deserting them and hauling "black coal."

Hamilton Fyfe took it on himself to reply in behalf of the T. U. C. and blamed the miners for not accepting the Samuel memorandum which was not accepted by either the government or the operators.

Did Not Touch Vital Part.

The dishonesty of Mr. Fyfe's reply to the railroad workers can be seen by his refusal to answer the vital part of the letter. Here is an exerpt from the railworker's query, which should receive attention from trade unionists everywhere who are helping to break the miners' strike by shipping scab coal.

"We are given to understand that the miners in other countries would not send any coal to England, but these miners are sending it. The transport takes it to the docks. It is loaded on the ships by the dockers, brought across by the seamen, unloaded on this side by the English dockers and then we railwaymen cart it away to destinations and we are blamed for handling coal after it has passed thru the hands of men belonging to other unions."

Faker's Old War Horse.

Fyfe begins his reply to the letter by opening a broadside on the Minority Movement Conference and of course on the Communists. This is the old gag when caught politically disrobed before the workers. The ex-Daily Mail scribe rang the changes on the "dictation from Moscow" stuff that "was breaking up the labor movement." The T. U. C. called off the strike because the miners refused to accept the Samuel memorandum.

A. J. Cook, secretary of the Miners' Federation opened fire on the Herald editorial in a seathing indictment and before the smoke of battle cleared Fyfe was on his way. Here is what Cook has to say:

Cook Was Surprised.

"I am surprised that Labor's paper should join in the chorus of the capitalist press to attack the miners and their leaders with an editorial that is absolutely contrary to the truth.

"The article says that the general council of the Trades Union Congress ended the strike because it believed that the Samuel memorandum offered the best chance of settling the coal dispute which the miners were likely to get, and that if the miners' representatives had agreed to accept that memorandum no man would have got less than 50s. a week.

"My reply is: (1) That the Samuel memorandum was never accepted by the government or the colliery owners, and, therefore, work could not be resumed on it; (2) we never had a guarantee of 50s. a week.

"All we were ever offered was that wages should not be reduced to less than 7s. 6d. a day and all wages below that were still to remain the same. No weekly guarantee has ever been given at all.

"It is silly and absurd," Mr. Cook proceeded," to suggest that we could instruct our men to return to work without the owners, who own the pits and employ the men, allowing them to do so. Being locked out, we could only secure a resumption of work on terms upon which the owners would agree to open their pits.

Council Was Anxious.

"It is quite evident that the editorial in question is written to discredit the miners and their leeders before the British public.

"The truth is that the general council of the Trades Union Congress was so anxious to call off the strike that is was prepared to accept something in the form of a settlement which did not exist, and was prepared to trust Mr. Baldwin and the colliery owners to give it existence at some future date.

"The miners' executive was not so prepared, and the fact that Mr. Baldwin has since repudiated the Samuel memorandum proves that the miners were right. Our duty was clear to the million men who had given us a mandate."

TWO FASCISTS ARE KILLED BY THEIR OWN BOMB

Premature Explosion of Bomb Gets Blackshirts

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—Prominent anti-fascists in New York charge that an explosion that wrecked an automobile and killed two men on 116th street and First avenue was the result of the premature detonation of a bomb that the fascists were about to throw at an anti-Mussolini meeting on the corner.

Two Fascists Killed.

The two men were members of fascist organizations. Alfredo di Nardo was secretary of the Harlem and Bronx branch of the fascist league of North America. Frank Esposito, the second man who perished, was also a Fascist organization member.

Police Seek to "Cover Up."

The police department says the car was wrecked by an explosion of its gasoline tank, but the anti-fascists point out the absence of fire and the spread sidewards and downwards of the explosion. They charge the police are attempting to conceal the causes and protect the fascists.

Threaten Speakers.

Carlo Tresca, an eye-witness of the explosion, tells a remarkable story. The night before the meeting a voice over the telephone said: "You people tried to kill Mussolini. We're going to get our revenge tonight."

Tresca and his friends went on with the meeting plans despite the threats and despite the fact that a meeting on the same spot three weeks before was broken up by the police who aided with fascist hoodlums that had started stoning the speakers.

Third May Die.

The meeting began the night after Tresca received the warning. Luigi Quintiliano was speaking, when there was a terrific explosion in an automobile in the street a short distance away. Quintiliano was hurled from his open air platform and the audience was tossed about. The car was wrecked; one man was dead, another dying, and a third, Joseph Pacciocco, so badly injured that his life is still despaired of.

The anti-fascists are convinced that a bomb, carried by the men in the car, went off for some reason before it could be pitched at the platform.

MONTREAL — (FP) — Applications for substantial pay increases on the two Canadian railway systems made by conductors, baggage men and brakemen are being considered by a board of conciliation. Conductors in the passenger service, who now receive $6.40 per day, or $192 a month, are asking $7.75 a day, or $232.50 a month.

HAZELHURST, Miss. — (FP) — Hazelhurst is experiencing another labor exodus as scores of Negroes leave for the Delta, where $1.35 per hundred is promised for picking cotton, with free transportation and board. Wages for farm labor in this section are very low.

RED INTERNATIONAL AIDS STRIKE OF THE FRENCH METAL UNION

MOSCOW, Aug. 28th.—(By Mail) —The Russian International Labor Unions has directed a telegram to the United Metal Workers' Federation in Paris in which it sends its fraternal greetings to the strikers in Chateau Renaud who have already been fighting a heroic struggle for five months. The Russian International Labor Union sends also $600 to assist them to continue their struggle.

MINE STRIKE NEEDS URGENT, SAYS PURCELL

Quick Aid Vital; World Labor Must Assist

or even for each separate mine. The finish would be that each factory would have its own agreement.

The support which the international proletariat can give the fighting miners is, above all, financial assistance. Here I must mention that the assistance of the Russian comrades is the greatest proof of international solidarity in the history of the proletariat, and the British miners recognize this completely. The methods of the Russian comrades, who form women's committees to lead the collections, should be copied in all other countries.

As far as the international aid is concerned, the British miners are of the opinion that much more could be done. It is hoped that with the sending of miners' delegations to the continent and to the United States certain difficulties which have previously showed themselves will be overcome.

With regard to the support of the British miners by a general prohibition of coal transport, this prohibition can only be effected if the miners' unions in the various countries see to it that the production of coal is not increased. If no more coal is produced than usual then no more can be transported to Great Britain.

The International Miners' Federation has not yet seen its way clear to issue such a prohibition to prevent the increase of production, and with regard to the prohibition of coal transports, the International Transport Workers' Federation and the International Miners' Federation have not yet come to any agreement, altho the leaders of the British miners have suggested this a number of times.

Few Miners Return.

The reports of the bourgeois press that there is a mass return to work must not be believed. Even if all the reports upon the return to work which the bourgeois press spreads were true, then there would still be something like 900,000 miners out. One must not forget that from those strike-breakers who had returned to work not all of them are coal hewers, but many of them are mechanics and other workers who work upon the surface. Therefore, it was recorded some time ago that 300 men had returned to work in one mine. Of these 300, however, only 42 were hewers.

The tremendous volume of imported coal to Great Britain is shown by a report of the Daily Mail that last week a million tons of coal were imported to Great Britain. This report is naturally to be accepted with great reservation.

Refutes Socialist Lies.

The statement of various social democratic papers that the Russians are stabbing the British miners in the back by exporting naphtha to Great Britain and that they are trying to persuade the British capitalists to replace coal by oil fuel, is absolute nonsense. On the contrary, we have proofs that the Russians are seeing to it that no more naphtha is sent to Great Britain than usual. I must also remark that naphtha has not the faintest influence upon the coal market, because it is quite impossible within so short a space of time to adapt the machines to use oil fuel instead of coal.

German Unions Charge Interest.

To the question what attitude did he take with regard to the loan of the German Trade Union Federation (A. D. G. B.) and its interest, Purcell made the following remark:

"The British trade unions, which were badly hit from the financial point of view by the general strike, were compelled to take a loan from the A. D. G. B. in order to fulfill their duties towards their members. Altho the British trade unions would rather have seen the A. D. G. B. grant this loan free of interest, as this is the case in Great Britain when one trade union lends another trade union money, they were nevertheless compelled to accept the condition of the A. D. G. B. in preference to taking a still more expensive loan from a bank. The A. D. G. B. demanded, after a higher demand had been rejected, 4½ per-cent. The amount of the loan was 10,000 pounds."

FILIPINO PROF OPPOSES ISLAN INDEPENDENC

Compromiser Hailed b U. S. Imperialists

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MANILA, Sept. 16.—The movement for demanding that the United States keep its promise to grant the Philippines complete independence is dwindling some compromisers among the followers of Senator Osmena, the most recent one coming forward being Dr. Maximo M. Kalaw of the University of the Philippines.

Kalaw has issued a statement in which he shows what he means by "concessions" offered by the Osmena group. He says:

Careful of U. S. "Interests."

"The Filipinos must concede, first that in considering the independence question, the United States is bound to take into account her own economic needs; second, that the American government has rendered a tremendous amount of good to the country, for which the people should be, as they are, grateful, and third, that in the question of the independence problem the present international situation and American interests in the Islands must also be taken into consideration."

This is regarded as propaganda against complete independence, probably some sort of an overlordship of the United States has over Cuba. It is to be noted that Kalaw makes concessions agreeable to the American rubber trust and other imperialist interests, and insists that America needs the Philippines as a base of warfare in the Far East, in connection with the "international situation."

Imperialist Hails Compromiser.

Kalaw's statement is being hailed joyfully by the owner of the Manila Times, an American who quite frankly boasts that he is an imperialist. This imperialist says Kalaw's statement is "a constructive suggestion made in the right spirit."

Aguinaldo, who has completely recovered from his insurgency of 30 years ago, has also issued a statement supporting General Wood and opposing any sort of independence. He says he does not care who accuses him of treachery to his country, he is for Wood "at any cost." It is not on record that it has cost him anything material so far.
